The judge was fed-up with Villanova students having parties in residential areas. He is not an unreasonable man. He has been forced into the situation by the students themselves. He does not want to send students to jail, but if that is what it takes, he will do it.

Because he is reasonable, the judge has postponed the hearing until a later date when he will reconsider the case. The students hope that at this time, he will consider the specific circumstances they had the party before the full warning had been issued by the district.

The students are also very active in Student Government and the community. Whatever the case, one thing is clear to the students: the next people who are caught having a party will not be as lucky. The next students will go to jail.

We the students faced with the charges, do not have to tell you how detrimental this whole incident has been to our academic and future careers. We are faced with having permanent records and prison terms.

It is a very scary situation to be in. We cannot express how serious it is. We are in big trouble.

The worst part is that there is no way out. If the judge wants to send you to jail, he can and he will. There is only one solution — Do not have a party. It is not worth it — trust us!

Underage possession of alcohol

Are handcuffs necessary?

To the Editor:

As a student, I had the unfortunate experience, along with about 20 other students, of being issued a citation for possession of alcohol because I am under the lawful age of 21. I am 20 years old.

My five friends and I were on our way to a party when we were confronted by an officer. I was asked for proof of age for the four-pack of wine coolers in my hand. Within the next minute, I was handcuffed and placed in the back of an unmarked car.

I asked if the cuffs were necessary and the policeman said, "Just procedure."

After threatening my friends with the same consequence, the officer called in for more cars. Thirty minutes went by and four police cars and a van arrived. I was moved to one of the cars and there I waited for approximately one and one-half hours while the police randomly chose students to question.

One curious student walked by the front of the house and was told to keep going, but stopped to talk to a friend. He was then asked for identification and immediately handcuffed, even though he was 21 years of age.

Not until two hours later, when our signatures were needed on the summons, did the officers remove the cuffs.

It is not clear to me why handcuffs were necessary to detain people for possession of alcohol. The fact that only three people out of 20 were handcuffed suggests to me that it was not "just procedure." Realistically, one can say they are doing their job, but it seems that they go out of their way to harass Villanova students.

The fact that only three people out of 20 were handcuffed suggest to me that it was not "just procedure."

To break up parties is part of the job, but are there not other issues they could put their energies toward besides harassing Villanova students?

V.U. needs events for all students

To the Editor:

Villanova University has been turning its back on a majority of its students. Each year Villanova University takes in more and more freshman students, and at the same time they force more and more upperclassmen to live off-campus.

In Villanova's eyes, once students are off-campus, they need little attention. The school, therefore, shows very little responsibility toward off-campus students. This may be acceptable in a legal context, but not in the moral sense.

As a freshmen at Villanova we enjoy many freedoms never incurred in our home setting. We are free from authoritative figures for the first time.

Keeping this in mind, it is no secret that on-campus life, despite the feeling of some administrators, is full of social activities involving beer and liquor. However, the underclassman have few problems with the local police while on campus.

Yet, let us consider these same students just two years later and still under the legal drinking age. They get pushed off campus by Villanova's housing lottery system. These students, although they have already experienced the liberties of sipping cocktails, now find themselves breaking underage drinking and serving minors ordinances. This problem, along with the on-going housing ordinances, are making off-campus life impossible!

Villanova University must increase its relations with the surrounding community and stop their negligent attitude toward off-campus students. The students of Villanova deserve to have a full college experience, including academics, athletics and social interaction.

Many other universities have experienced problems with the new older drinking age in other states. Villanova seems to be no exception. The administration must take action. The school has virtually no social activities planned for off-campus students. This is the very root of the schools negligence toward the students, as well as the residents of the community.

Off-campus students can not socialize on campus because the school does not schedule any social events targeted toward them. They also can not hold parties off-campus because of the surrounding residential communities. If the students do have a party, they will experience huge fines and, more recently, probably a jail sentence (along with a criminal record). This is far from the education we came to Villanova for.

We find ourselves stuck between a rock and a hard place! The students have no where else to turn. The time has come for Villanova to take action and responsibility for the social activities of their on-campus as well as their off-campus students.

Until Villanova acts in a positive fashion toward the community by solving this urgent dilemma, Villanova's prestigious reputation will slowly dwindle throughout the community.

Hence, as students, we ask you, together with the residential community, to solve this pressing problem. We do not want to cause problems with the community or their legal systems. We do, however, have a need to socialize together as a student body.

In conclusion, we feel confident that the administration, coupled together with the community, can work something out without the negative feedback of the court system.

Students' ideas considered

To the Editor:

As many people know, Student Government has placed suggestion boxes throughout the campus so that students have a means to communicate their ideas for improving university life. Many of the issues raised through the utilization of the boxes such as the question of Fall Break have been resolved over the course of the year.

Recently, the Student Government department of public relations has been gathering responses for other areas of concern. One suggestion involved using Villanova vans to transport south area residents to St. Mary's train station on the days before and after a break.

In attempting to coordinate a shuttle schedule, we were informed by Director of Security, Rowan Kelly, that students desiring transportation should contact security as needed.

Because Villanova has only three vans in operation, Kelly was reluctant to commit his officers to a publicized time schedule, should the vans be needed for an emergency. He encouraged south area residents to request transportation as needed on the day before or after break.

Another suggestion involved using Donahue Hall as a study area from 7:30 p.m. until midnight because heavy snow and rain often make evening treks to the library difficult. We are currently in the process of reviewing this possibility with Food Services and the Director of Residency Life, Chris Janosik.

We also inquired about the possibility of using the former Stanford and Good Counsel cafeterias as alternate study areas. He informed us that Good Counsel cafeteria is being used as a storage area for Food Services. Stanford Cafeteria has been in the renovation process for two years.

Plans for the old dining hall include the installation of the following resources: a drug and alcohol information center, a computer lab, improved laundry facilities, a study lounge and a living area. These plans will be completed pending the allocation of adequate funding.

The Student Government thanks you for your input. Questions and comments are always welcome and may be dropped in any suggestion box or in 204 Dougherty Hall.

Marketing competition

To the Editor:

As advisor to the Marketing Society and coach to our intercollegiate marketing competitive teams, I would like to extend congratulations to Kerri Turano, Hernando Ruiz-Jimenez and Jose Manuel Mora-CH for their outstanding performance in the Intercollegiate AMA Marketing Case Competition at Hofstra University on March 28.

Without their brilliant performances, we would not have been able to garner two first prize awards, namely in international marketing and advertising. Being able to surpass such schools as St. John's University, the University of Pittsburgh, the University of Maryland, Hofstra University and Gettysburg College in competition was a great accomplishment.

The Villanova chapter of the American Marketing Society should take pride in their achievements.

Interviews at V.U. are not biased

To the Editor:

As a member and interviewer of two campus organizations, the V.A.L.U.E. program and the New Student Orientation program, I resent the letter appearing in last week's issue of the Villanovan titled "Interview process at V.U. biased."

Interviewing is a tough job, which entails understanding, analysis and projection of the received information. This is not a process I, or any other interviewer, take lightly.

With almost 400 persons applying for the orientation counselor position and only 76 available positions, many persons will meet with the disappointment of not passing. But the person still has a decision on whether to view this situation as negative or turn the situation into something positive.

Feedback that is given is not, as the author of the article stated, "humiliating . . . ('This is what you did wrong')" sessions. They are objective statements, both positive and negative, about the 20-30 minute interview time in which the applicant participated.

As for the questions themselves, both the V.A.L.U.E. program and the Orientation program address all applicants with the same skeleton questions, with only follow-up questions being different. The questions themselves are of distinct and specific value. They help the inverviewer decipher the actual personality of the person and how the person would react under the pressure of the program.

This is not a process, I, or any other interviewer, take lightly.

The Orientation's first-round group interview is not for the purpose, as the author stated, to "convince the group that you are not a total geek." The first-round interview simulates a problem in a group setting that the applicant, if accepted, will be confronting both in the steering committee group and the group of incoming students.

The first-round interview is used so that the communication skills of the applicant can be viewed in the group setting.

Thus, the picture that the author of the letter holds is not true. The interviewing is as unbiased as possible. There is tough competition, and disappointment is to be expected. The fault of the process does not lie within the program, but in the applicant himself.

Brodie Lockard:
Video game designer interviewed

By RUSS CECCOLA

Shanghai is the award-winning video game from Activision based on the ancient Chinese game of Mah-Jongg. In it, there are 144 tiles of visually different suits arranged in a dragon-shaped pyramid from one to five stacks high. The object of the game is to remove tiles in matching pairs until are are gone or you cannot match any more tiles.

I recently had the pleasure to speak with the designer of Shanghai, Brodie Lockard, a man as interesting as the game. Lockard is 26 years-old and lives in Redwood City, Ca. He works at Stanford University in designing educational software for use in the university classrooms. Originally interested in Mah-Jongg, Lockard wanted to translate the game somehow to the personal computer. The result is Shanghai.

What makes Lockard's design even more remarkable is the fact that he is a quadraplegic. Injured in a varsity gymnastic accident while an undergraduate, Brodie fought against his paralysis and, in my opinion, has overcome his disability by using talents that most of us never will use. Lockard programs with a mouthstick and specially designed headset that hooks up to his Macintosh computer.

The following is an interview with Brodie:

Villanovan: Brodie, tell me how you got interested in computers.

Lockard: Well, I was always interested in math and English in high school and really didn't get involved with computers until I was in college. I started out as an English major, and after a while I realized that it might be hard to find a job, so I started looking around for something else that might be more marketable.

I took a programming class and liked it a lot, and then took more — about three total and did some work for no pay in the summer before the accident. After the accident, it was something I could still do, something motivating me that I could look forward to every day and it just kept me going. It gave me an incentive to get out of the hospital as soon as I could and get my life back in shape.

V: How long did it take you to ge out of the hospital?

L: I was in the hospital nine months, and actually I was able to do some work on computers while I was in there. There is a system called the Plato system made by Control Data Corporations. One of their sales reps was extremely nice. She brought down her own terminal to the hospital and lent it to me for several months while I was there.

When I got back out of the hospital, I was loaned a Plato terminal and I used it throughout the rest of school. It had a great influence on me and gave me the chance to do a lot of things I would not otherwise been able to do in school. I kept up my interest in computers and, in particular, educational systems, since Plato is an educational system.

V: You finished up your studies after your accident. What were your bachelor's and master's degrees in?

L: I switched my bachelor's degree a lot, but ended up with a bachelor of Arts and Sciences degree. My master's degree is in computers and education.

V: Tell me about the work you do for Stanford and how they use your programs.

L: I was with a group called the Faculty Operative Development Program, whose goal was to get faculty interested in the potential for micros in the classroom. We asked them for ideas and uses in the classroom and we got a great response. I worked on many programs.

The three I worked on the most were a French program on the IBM, a series of Economics I modules on the IBM and a medical program on the MAC to teach medical students some aspects of handling critically ill patients. They are all still being used in classrooms at Stanford.

V: Let's get into Shanghai now. Tell me about Mah-Jongg and how you got interested in the game.

L: Actually, I've only played Mah-Jongg twice at a friend's house. Mah-Jongg is a lot more complicated than Shanghai. It's like gin rummy in that there are four players and you try to collect runs and sets of tiles, and lay them out on the table. I didn't think that it was easily adaptable for the computer because you need four players.

Brodie Lockard overcomes his disability by using a specially designed headset that hooks up to his Macintosh computer.

L: No, not really. A friend came up with the idea for Shanghai. It didn't have a name, but he stacked up the tiles and showed me how to play the game. I thought it would be great on the computer and first programmed it on the Plato system.

When I first learned something about the MAC, I thought it would be nice to put it on that system. I got in touch with a man at Activision in December 1985, and after that, it was converted for many machines.

V: What actually prompted you to go ahead and design a video game?

L: It was something I thought about for quite a while. The folks who used the Plato system thought it would be great to put Shanghai on a microcomputer, which most people have. I thought about doing that for quite a while, but I didn't have any experience

On Retreat with the disabled

By TONY ARANES

Seventy-five people began to gather at Trooper, Pa. Wheelchairs could be seen strapped to roofs of cars, being unfolded and placed with an occupant.

Volunteers were arriving. Some mingled, while others stood around nervous and uncertain. They had good reason to feel this way. For many of the volunteers, this was the first time they had ever been to a Handicapped Encounter Christ retreat (HEC for short). For many this was the first time they had worked with people who could not walk or who had some difficulty speaking.

The HEC experience was made by 75 people, 13 of whom were Villanova students.

Handicapped Encounter Christ began in New York in 1974 and was run by John Keck and Nancy Mehlem. Keck understood the problems and concerns of disabled, as he himself was confined to a wheelchair for two years.

He became involved with disabled youths, emphasizing their worth as individuals in society.

The volunteers at the HEC retreat served food, helped participants get around and were companions to the youths that attended the retreat.

One student worked with a youth who had muscular dystrophy. Other students worked with people with multiple sclerosis, cerebral palsy, spinal injuries and birth defects. All worked to help the disabled youth through the retreat.

As the weekend progressed, one could not help but be swept into the HEC spirit. After a while, everyone began to break through their barriers and really get to know each other. There was such a strong feeling of belonging; everyone dropped their inhibitions and let go.

Music played an important part during the retreat. It was the catalyst that united them, motivated them and inspired them. Much of the music played was written by the Rev. Shawn Tracy, O.S.A. It was he who helped bring HEC to the Philadelphia area seven years ago. Since then, HEC has gradually grown from its infancy.

Tracy explained that the HEC community reaches out to people who may be institutionalized or disabled.

Inevitably, the last day to be together as a group, a community and as a family, had come. Looking around, small groups of former strangers had been found talking late into the night, taking advantage of their last free moments together to build on their new friendships.

No one wanted to leave. During that weekend, the participants lived in an atmosphere where everyone supported each other. Now it was time for them to return to the competitive world. However, they knew that they had gained something. Maybe it was the realization that life must be a celebration, and must go beyond the limitations of the flesh.

Blood drive held

By DEBBY GROSS

A blood drive sponsored by the Kappa Alpha Theta Sorority and Villanova University was held on April 7, 8 and 9, according to Gina DiMuro, service chairperson of the sorority.

The event was held from 10 a.m.-5 p.m. in the Butler Annex behind the old fieldhouse. The amount of pints collected will not be available until next week, so the success rate of the drive is not yet known.

According to DiMuro, the goal of this drive was to collect approximately 550 pints. There is always a need for blood in this area, she said.

During the 1985-86 period, patients in this area were expected to need over 360,000 pints of blood. This declaration made by the American Red Cross expresses the great need for blood, especially the most common blood type, "O," which is always in short supply because of excessive demand for it.

While there are some restrictions for giving blood, anyone between the ages of 17 and 65, weighing at least 110 pounds and in good physical health can donate. As noted by the Red Cross, one pint of blood could mean life for five people — this makes giving blood a very fulfilling act.

DiMuro added that anyone who has questions about donating blood can contact the American Red Cross at 1-800-26 BLOOD.

Campus Ministry Perspective

By REV. RAY JACKSON O.S.A.

Jesus constantly called upon the people of his time to pay attention. "If you have ears to hear, listen! If you have eyes to see, look around!"

We, too, are challenged to see and hear the voice of God in our own day, yet because we are blind or deaf, we often miss the obvious.

To smell the flowers, to gaze at the stars, to walk a beach or to amble through a woodland is to hear the voice of God in creation. "The Earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof," says the psalmist. How easy it is to sense the presence of God in the wonders of nature if we look. The unbelievable variety, the enormous complexity, the unending multiplicity of plants, animals, fishes of the seas and birds of the air, all shout out the glory of their Creator.

One of the major problems of our time, however, is that we tend to look for God only in a church building or in formal prayer. We need to understand that many of the concrete experiences of life are experiences of the Spirit of God moving within us and energizing us to live in humane ways. Here are some concrete ways that we encounter the Spirit:

* When we act gently towards others, especially if they have hurt us,

* When we are generous with our time, talents, goods and possessions towards others who may need our help,

* When we experience loss or disappointment, anxiety or fear, but refuse to allow these circumstances to control our lives,

* When we take time to thank our family and friends for their love and concern toward us.

* When we trust that God is with us in the suffering and the inevitable pain of life,

* When we lie to ourselves by accepting our own limitations and the shortcomings and faults of others.

These are times when God is present to us, even if we are unaware of His graciousness at that moment.

It is true that we can experience God's presence in the communal sharing of the Eucharist when we gather in church to hear the Word of God proclaimed in the Sacred Scriptures and to receive the food of life, Jesus the Lord. However, this is a special presence of God. We even use religious terminology by calling the Eurcharist a sacrament, that is, a sacred sign.

It is in the ordinary experiences of life, the day-in-day-out encounters we have with our own attitudes, emotions, joys, hopes, dreams, fears and sorrows that God reveals Himself to us.

The trick, of course, is to "see" and "hear!" Let us look and listen to the daily experiences of life for the presence of God. The smile which we give or receive from another, the encouragement which flows between friends, the warmth and tenderness of human love and the acceptance of suffering which cannot be changed; these experiences can be as rich and full of meaning for us as were the encounters people had with Jesus in their own time.

programming micros. When I started at Stanford, I learned about the MAC and thought that would be a good first machine to try it on.

V: How did you work with Activision to get the game published?

L: When I was looking for a job, one of my resumes found its way to Brad Fregger at Activision. He gave me a call and said, "Let's talk about software," and we did. He said that if I had any ideas to give him a call. At that point, I had just started on the game, but I didn't know how it was going to turn out, or if I was going to even finish it.

When I had a finished copy, I called him up and he was interested and got many others at Activision interested. Brad gave me many ideas on how to enhance the game. We worked on a mutual trust basis, but eventually everything fell into place and we struck a contract.

V: Did you ever regret the long time it took, evenings and weekends, to design Shanghai? Or, did it keep you going, knowing that it would be published?

L: No, I don't think I regret it. It did consume much of my spare time that year. But I could look back and say that I really accomplished something that year. So, I don't regret it at all. It gave me something to look forward to.

V: Do you have any tips for Shanghai?

L: Most of the tips that I use are in the manual or on-screen help, so those sources summarize all of my tricks and strategy.

V: Have you designed anything else beside your work at Stanford and on Shanghai?

L: I have a few lessons on the Plato system on architecture, mostly about drawing on the architectural level. I also wrote a graphics program, called Altamira, for the IBM PC. It is similar to MACDraw and uses color.

V: For anyone interested, what's a good way to get started in the design of video games?

L: Devote as much time as possible. If you start with a simple game, you can eventually work your way up to a larger project. You don't need major funding or a huge staff to produce something, just an idea and the desire to get something done.

V: Do you have plans for any software in the near future?

L: I've got a few good ideas. That's the best I can say. I wish I had some definite ideas, but I really don't. I would very much like to design another game and I'm on the lookout for ideas. I have a few, but they're still very fuzzy.

V: If you had another idea, would you jump on it, or would you take a little bit easier than before?

L: No, I think I would go at it at full force.

Thanks to Melinda Mongelluzzo of Activision for all her help in conducting the interview with Brodie Lockard.

Coming Up . . .

As the pressure of final exams draws near, and the task of preparing for them looms ahead, many college students experience unnecessary anxiety and trepidation. Even students who have not fallen behind in their studies often approach finals with extreme dread.

These feelings of apprehension could perhaps be alleviated if students cultivated some basic study skills, since anxiety can only add to the existing pressure.

The counseling center at Villanova has designed a study skills workshop program to assist students in various areas. The program addresses topics such as time management, textbook mastery and self-motivation. The center, located in 106 Corr Hall, offers the workshops on Wednesdays from 3:30-4:30 p.m. and on Thursdays from 3-4 p.m. There is no charge, and no appointment is necessary.

N.D.

Villanova Summer Theatre will hold auditions for its 1987 season on April 26 from 11 a.m.-5 p.m. at Villanova.

The following shows are being cast: Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar," which runs June 7 to July 3; and the comedy "Lysistrata" by Aristophanes, which runs July 8 to July 25. Auditioners are asked to prepare two contrasting classical pieces of about two minutes each. Call 645-4760 for appointments and information.

Resumes are also being accepted for those interested in working this summer in costumes and scene construction. Experienced carpenters and stitchers may address resumes and letters of application to the Rev. Peter Donohue, Villanova Theatre, Villanova, PA 19085

Buster Keaton's most famous silent film comedy, "The General," will be presented in the Connelly Center Cinema as part of Villanova's Cultural Film Series.

It will be showing on April 12 at 3:30 p.m. and 7 p.m. and April 13 at 7 p.m. Tickets are $1.50 for students and senior citizens and $3 for the general public.

Date rape discussed

(I.P.B.) — A major difference between acquaintance rape and stranger rape is the after-effects on the victim, according to Dr. Jonathan Perry of the University of Arkansas (UA) counseling and psychological services. Perry said acquaintance rape causes longer lasting effects and makes the situation more complicated for the victim.

"Assuming there hasn't been any injury associated with the attack, stranger rape is a serious trauma. However, a victim of stranger rape can more easily not blame herself," he said.

"With acquaintance rape, there is a much more complicated issue. The effects are more damaging in a subtle way because the victim usually questions how she can ever trust someone again."

Perry also believes that acquaintance rape is much more common than stranger rape, especially on college campuses. He said that a sizable portion of students will be the victim of rape at some point.

Don Beebe and Betty Guhman of the UA sociology department have researched the phenomenon of acquaintance rape. Their findings show that statistically, over half of all rapes occur between people who know each other.

Beebe believes one reason behind the incidence of acquaintance rape is a society that supports it. "We live in a rape supportive culture," he said. "This behavior is often condoned, especially on a college campus," Guhman said. "It's a big joke — they don't see it as rape. But that's not an excuse."

Perry said that the first step a rape victim should take is to seek help. "All too often the victim is ashamed or frightened," he said.

"She needs to get help for herself, and if physical force was involved, she should seek medical attention."

In his attempt to improve upon Löwenbräu's formula for the best way in the world to brew beer, Albert stumbled upon another formula.

Early in his career Albert realized that his life's dream of improving Löwenbräu's formula was a futile one.

Bottle by bottle, he would examine and discuss the subatomic particles of Löwenbräu's rich taste. He would often theorize that Bavarian supervision, plus the richness of Bavarian hops brewed fresh and smooth, was the best way in the world to brew beer.

And at about ten o'clock on any given Thursday, he and the other professors in his department would gather at the Cyclotron Tavern where they would obtain hard evidence to support their findings. Usually a tournament of quarter bounce would evolve, during which Albert and his friends would lose all track of time and space. Finally, by evening's end, he would further theorize that Löwenbräu's mass appeal would grow exponentially in an ever-expanding universe, and in all the great beer drinking countries, because... it's the best way in the world to brew beer.

This World Calls for Löwenbräu.

Willis 'moonlights' in new comedy

By ROBERT DUGGAN

Walter Davis is a workaholic stock portfolio analyst who is told to improve his shabby image to something more in line with the company's standards. Knowing that he must get in style for an important business dinner that night, Davis gets a new suit and then looks for a new lady to take along.

In a final, desperate move, he finally lets his brother set him up with his wife's cousin from out of town. With the warning not to let her drink under any circumstances, Davis sets out on the blind date of his life.

"Blind Date" is the new, slapstick comedy directed by Blake Edwards, starring Bruce Willis as Walter Davis and Kim Basinger as Nadia Gates, his blind date.

Walter goes to Nadia's hotel and cannot believe his luck. They go to an exhibition of art done by a friend of Nadia's. (The blatant sexual suggestiveness of the artworks they casually walk among is so hilariously shocking I found it hard to believe this film drew a PG-13 rating).

At the exhibit they run into Nadia's ex-boyfriend, David Bedford, played by John Larroquette, who is best known as Dan Fielding, America's favorite sleeze from "Night Court." After a hilarious fit of raging jealousy by David, Walter and Nadia get away from him and go to a quiet place to relax before dinner. Forgetting his brother's warning, Walter buys champagne and convinces Nadia that "one little glass won't hurt." Then the fun starts.

They arrive at the company dinner and Nadia wreaks havoc. In the first 15 minutes after they arrive, she destroys a floral arrangement, ruins the suit of nearly every man in the room, insults the big client, gets into a heated argument with a waiter in obscene French, and loses Walter's job for him.

Basinger is great as the beautiful, screwball drunk and seems more comfortable in this comedic role than in her previous dramatic roles.

When she finally sobers up, Walter decides to go crazy at a party filled with her friends. Willis pulls out his David Addison character and lets him roam free in the longest stretch of quality slapstick in the movie.

Meanwhile, Larroquette's character has been chasing the couple around town all night and finally catches up at the party. Walter and David then brawl it out for Nadia's honor.

Larroquette was good in this film, but I was disappointed that his role was just a slightly modified Dan Fielding, even to the point that David was a lawyer of the same unscrupulous vein. In my opinion, Larroquette is the funniest man on television today, and he should have opted for a role that would have given him a chance to expand.

Kim Basinger, Bruce Willis and John Larroquette star in the new comedy motion picture, "Blind Date," directed by Blake Edwards.

After brawling it out and shooting at David, Walter is thrown in jail in the disheveled condition seen in all the ads for the film. What follows is such a funny, screwy sequence of events that I would not want to give them away to those who have not seen it yet.

As an aside for all those "Family Ties" fans out there, make sure you do not miss the scene in the disco. The house band is none other than the balding Bill Vera and the Beaters of "At This Moment" fame.

With this film, Edwards rebounds from his last film, the appropriately titled turkey, "A Fine Mess." This film does have lapses where the quality sinks to a neo-Three Stooges level, but the finer aspects, Willis, Bassinger and Larroquette, make this a comedy well worth paying to see.

The DuPont Pavilion hosts Debut Orchestra

By JOANNE LOFTUS

The Philadelphia Debut Orchestra (PDO) launched its very first concert ever in the DuPont Pavilion last Saturday night. The PDO was founded in February 1985 for the sole purpose of giving young, exceptional, unknown instrumentalists the chance to exhibit their talent and to gain the exposure and experience needed to further their musical careers. It is comprised of 65 highly skilled individuals who wish to perform in an orchestral atmosphere.

David Reichman, one of the founders and the conductor of the PDO, began the evening's performance with a warm welcome and introduction. His lifelong dream of creating an orchestra to promote young musicians was finally realized. Reichman was extremely grateful to John Dunphy, director of Music Activities, and to Villanova University for helping to make this concert possible.

The orchestra made its debut into the music world with its rendition of Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait." Copland's goal was to create a musical portrait of a great American; and that he did. He chose Lincoln because of what he represented to the people of the United States: democracy, freedom and responsibility.

Simple, yet at the same time impressive, the music proudly evoked a sense of patriotism. This apparently was a wise choice considering that Reichman chose the piece in accordance with Philadelphia's bicentennial celebration of the signing of the Constitution.

Strategically, in the middle of the performance, the Rev. Peter Donahue gave an inspirational reading on this famous President, which included several well-known quotations from some of Lincoln's speeches and letters.

The second piece of music performed by the PDO was "Overture to 'La Gazza Ladra' " by Rossini. "The Thieving Magpie," as it is known in English, was a popular tragic opera. Therefore, the music touches upon many heights of emotions: anger, excitement, grief and, in the end, happiness. The audience seemed to get caught up in this attractive and stirring music.

Rita Reichman, sister of the conductor, played the piano most beautifully during the third work, Tchaikovsky's "Piano Concerto No. 1 in B minor, OP. 23." Ms. Reichman is a world-renowned pianist who flew in from Australia Saturday afternoon to be with her brother, David.

This masterpiece was Tchaikovsky's first work, and among his finest. It consisted of three major parts, each unique in itself concerning the tempo and spirit. Nevertheless, each part contibuted equally to the grandeur of the whole.

The finale of the performance was Dvorak's "Symphony No. 8 in G Major, Op. 88." Dvorak has long been known for the ethereal quality of his music. The music simply flows without interruption. Magical and delightful, this symphony seems to celebrate nature and life. Because of his keen sense of movement, Dvorak never let his music approach monotony, just beauty.

The concert was relaxing and enjoyable. The instrumentalists' love and dedication to classical music shone throughout the concert. Hopefully, this will have been the first of many concerts to be performed by the PDO in the future.

The PDO's debut performance was greatly appreciated by the few who experienced it. Unfortunately, the saddest part of the evening was the attendance, or lack thereof.

REO Speedwagon, a group that has had a string of hits in recent years, flops with their latest release, Life as We Know It.

The Speedwagon slows down

By KEVIN HECHT

While many major artists such as Springsteen, Bono and Sting have produced music with a significant emphasis on social consciousness in recent years, REO Speedwagon has consistently put forth the type of music that has been relegated to sweet 16 parties, cookouts and the back of school buses. Some of their music has been catchy and suitable for radio play, but certainly forgettable.

REO's latest release, Life as We Know It, on Epic Records, spotlights a band that is trying to break out of the stagnant mold they have built up over the years, and which in the process, fails flat on its face.

The sound on the album ranges from an attempt at funky soul, to guitar solos that sould like ZZ Top on acid. Kevin Cronin, the talented lead-singer and songwriter for the group, is joined by the songwriting team of Tom Kelly and Billy Steinberg on several of the albums compositions. They manage to crank out some catchy tunes that are unfortunately bogged down in a relentless outpouring of cliches about unrequited love.

Even some of the names of the songs suggest that there is an overkill of the old heartbreak routine here, as the album opens with "New Way to Love," and then goes on to include "That Ain't Love," "One Too Many Girlfriends" and "Can't Get You Out of My Heart."

There are some bright spots however, "In My Dreams" is a lovely ballad in the tradition of previous hits such as "Keep on Loving You," and "I Can't Fight This Feeling Anymore." In addition, the guitar playing of Gary Richrath, although overdone at times, provides a searing and impressive force to some of the songs. Cronin, who has never been accused of having the strongest voice in the world, sounds competent on most of the tracks.

It is hard to take a song seriously when it begins on a driving, powerful note and then goes on to spew off lyrics such as "There's danger in romance at every turn, be careful boy that you don't crash and burn," from "One Too Many Girlfriends" on Side One. I am sure that this is sage advice, but the audience has probably heard it before.

Most REO Speedwagon fans may find this album thoroughly enjoyable, but they are probably used to them by now. It is not likely to win over too many new fans, although the music is harmless, and an honest attempt at something different. The band may be talented, and the music may be up beat, but if the name of this new album applies to reality, Life as We Know It stinks.

Little America's potential grows with new release

By MEGAN GUIDERA

With the constant outpour of techno-pop computerized rock, it is a rarity to find a genuinely simple and pure rock-and-roll band.

Geffen Records has discovered a young, gimmickless rock-and-roll band, Little America. Little America is a California-based band that has a short, crisp rock sound that contains a great deal of potential.

Little America is a group consisting of four men: Mike Magrisi, lead vocals and bass; Andy Logan, lead guitar and backing vocals; and Custer, drums and vocals.

Little America is a young band that recorded a series of demos in 1985. They chose their name, Little America, to make a statement. The band feels that even though the United States is a superpower, it is the average little people that make up the heart of America.

After making their second demo with the help of Paul Sabu, best known for his work with Motels, Cory Hart, Rockwell and others, Little America signed an exclusive contract with Geffen Records. Little America also snatched up the acclaimed British producer, John Punter, as their new producer. Punter has produced albums with The Hollies, Moody Blues and Slade.

With their growing success, Little America released their first album of 12 songs from Geffen Records. The album, which takes the group's name as its own, Little America, has a fresh rock sound that is unique to today's computer pop.

Little America embodies a massive amount of potential waiting to be developed. The band is talented and vibrant; however, they lack polish.

Side One of Little America disappoints the listener. Songs such as "Walk on Fire," "Perfect World" and "Lies" have an essentially good rock tune; however, the songs are not developed and turn into long, drawn-out, repetious songs.

The disappointment of the monotonous six songs on the first side is rapidly dispelled when the listener flips to Side Two. The first three songs on Side Two, "Walk the Land," "Heroes" and "Underground," are excellent, well put together, fun songs.

"Walk the Land" is the only slow-paced song on the album. However, it is pretty and its symbolic lyrics give a strong message of patriotism.

"Heroes" has a great dance beat and is easy to sing along to. The vocals are smooth and powerful. This song is a tribute to the film idols of yesterday: "Heroes, larger than life/ Up on the screen, every night/ On the late show/ What a great show."

The other songs on Side Two, "Underground," "Out of Bounds," "Coversations" and "Standin' On Top," display Little America's instinctive talent and fiery potential.

Although Little America is not an incredible album, it is a preview of what is to come from a highly talented group.

After opening for the Romantics, Steve Marriot and Belinda Carlisle and planning a major U.S. tour, Little America is destined to take their fresh original rock sound to the top.

It is refreshing to see a young band sticking to the original crisp rock sound. Even though Little America is not headed for instant success, the band Little America has a few excellent albums in them, and I am eager to hear them!

Members of Geffen Record's new band, Little America, promote their first album of the same name.

DATA MANAGER  TIMEWORKS C64, C128, AP, AT, AMIGA, MAC, IBM

A lot of productivity software is difficult to use. Sometimes, the instructions are so complex that it is bothersome to learn the system. Other times, the program is too simple — with no outstanding features. A definite must for all people that handle lots of data is Data Manager from Timeworks. It is so simple to use, yet accomplishes so much.

Data Manager has lots of features that make it worth the price tag. Two elements that give it its excellence are the manual and the on-screen menus. All commands are entered via a pull-down menu and sub-menus at the top of the screen. This eliminates all memorization of commands, as well as typing them in. This element separates Timeworks from all other companies.

The manual is excellently written and so simple to read that you can just pick it up and start with the program. These two features build up the others, so that we have a system based upon simplicity.

Some of the other features of Data Manager are the following: 80-column capability, sample data to work with on the disk, ability to print items by any range, X-SEARCH to find common items and X-SORT for sorting data.

Users of Data Manager also are able to graphically view information about their data, create customized data reports, print mailing labels and tags, generate statistical analysis of data and make calculations. Different systems have different capabilities as well. Either way, Data Manager is the program that you should have to keep everything in order.

ROADWAR 2000  STRATEGIC SIMULATIONS, INC. C64, AP

It is the year 2000. Bacteriological warfare has taken over America and cities have become gangs' hideouts and the roads are sites for battles. You are the leader of one of these gangs. You have been assigned by the federal government to find eight scientists and return them to an underground laboratory to neutralize the deadly microbes in the atmosphere. You have to search the whole country and have only a short amount of time to find them.

Roadwar 2000 sends you, as the above gang leader, onto the roads of America. There are so many options at your disposal that it will take a long while to find the scientists. There are eight regions in which you can travel: Canada, Mexico, California, California2, West Central U.S., Northwest U.S., North Central U.S., South U.S., Northeast U.S. and Border States. Each region contains about 10-15 cities, so that you have a huge area to explore.

Included in the game manual is a map of the roads and locations of cities in North America. What you have to discover, by both combat and exploration, is which gang controls which city. As you are struggling to use your Radio Direction Finder to locate the scientists, you have to contend with rival gangs in all kinds of vehicles. Through both tactical combat and strategy, you must outwit and take over the other gangs.

In total, Roadwar 2000 is an excellent attempt at predicting a violent future. The graphics are suitably detailed and the game play balanced so that you do not have to memorize the manual to play Roadwar 2000. So, if you are looking for a good fantasy combat game, get Roadwar 2000 and save the country.

CERTIFICATE MAKER * * * * SPRINGBOARD C64, IBM, AP

Have you ever wanted to give somebody an award for something really stupid, or maybe for being the best member of a club or organization? Well, now you can with this recent release from Springboard Software. Certificate Maker allows you to create from scratch a certificate for someone for any reason. From fishing to playing the trumpet, you can recognize someone with a certificate fresh from your printer.

It is easy to create a certificate with the program. To aid you, the manual walks you through the creation of one. If you are stuck for ideas or maybe just want to do something nice for somebody, there is a catalog of 220 pre-made templates for certificates. All you have to do is fill in the text and name.

From a Certificate of Proficiency to The Most Coffee Breaks Award, you have a lot of choices before you start to create your own certificate. The certificates are both horizontal and vertical, so you can set up the format you want.

Making a certificate consists of simply choosing the title and body fonts, typing in your text, choosing a template, finding a border for your needs and printing your certificate out on one of the possible printers. There are five fonts that you can use: Serif, Sans Serif, Script, Gothic and Art Deco. With these five, you are pretty well-armed for any design.

Certificate Maker is a fresh new face in the software world and deserves the chance to award somebody you know. The price is modest and the possibilities many, giving you some incentive to pick up this great program.

WRITER'S WORKSHOP * * *1/2 BERKELEY SOFTWORK C64

GEOS is the successful MAC-like operating system for the Commodore 64. New to the product line of enhancements on the system is Writer's Workshop, a new set of word processing options in the GEOS environment. Consisting of geowrite 2.0, geoMerge, geoLaser and Text Grabber, Writer's Workshop is all that the GEOS user needs for word processing.

The new version of geoWrite, geoWrite 2.0, is a much better version than the first. This enhanced word processor comes with the following new features: center, right and full justification, single and double spacing, decimal tabs, superscript and subscript, headers, footers, pagination, search and replace and keyboard shortcuts to commands. In total, geoWrite has all of the best things that a word processor for the C64 needs.

A new feature is geoMerge, which lets you create form letters quite easily. It lets you specify many variables in a letter, so that they can be customized later. To print your text onto a laser printer, geoLaser was put on the Writer's Workshop disk. It allows you to print onto an Apple Laserwriter laser printer or to upload your text to QuantumLink for copies.

Finally, Text Grabber allows you to pull text from other word processors and use it in geoWrite. In this way, the jump from another word processor to geoWrite is made easily. Text Grabber is just another reason to buy Writer's Workshop; the program gives you all you need for professional writing.

WORLD CLASS LEADER BOARD * * * * * ACCESS SOFTWARE C64, AP, IBM

New from the makers of Leader Board and continuing in that same tradition is World Class Leader Board. Combining all of the best of Leader Board with some very unique holes, World Class Leader Board is a stand-alone game that challenges the video golf player like never before. With the three best courses in the world and a fourth designed to be the toughest, World Class Leader Board surpasses its predecessor.

The three famous courses are: St. Andrews, Doral Country Club and Cypress Creek. A map of each course is included in the manual along with other info about the course. Gauntlet Country Club puts all golf difficulties against you in creating the toughest course in the world. All four give you a challenge like never before seen in golf.

New features include a driving range, putting practice, a "bird's eye" view of the course option and an option that allows you to print out the score card. I never thought that Leader Board could be topped, but Access has succeeded in surpassing their own classic.

PITFALL!/DEMON ATTACK * * * * ACTIVISION C64, AT

There are many classic video games. For the most part, they gather dust and clutter your room. Now, one company has done something about this problem. Activision has released two classic games in the first of a new series of titles called Solid Gold Software. Pitfall! and Demon Attack are two that have proven themselves on the market and are deserving of the distinction.

Pitfall! puts you, as Pitfall Harry, against an assortment of creatures in the jungle to find and retrieve a collection of treasures. A simple game to play, Pitfall! stumped people for years because you have just enough time to finish the game. Any mistakes and you might as well give up.

Demon Attack is a totally different game in that you shoot at randomly descending bird-like creatures that want to shoot your ship with their lasers and to drop on top of you. The key to success in this game is knowing the varied birds and their manners of movement and attack. This game together with Pitfall! are two great choices for starting a new line of software from Activision.

Cinderella blows Bon Jovi away at the Spectrum

By RUSS CECCOLA

Bon Jovi is currently riding the top of the charts with their latest album, Slippery When Wet, and their hit single "Livin' On A Prayer." Their popularity has reached a high in the band's career. For the first time, Bon Jovi is headlining a tour as opposed to opening up for such bands as The Scorpions and .38 Special in the past. The only reason for this headline tour is the sales of Slippery When Wet and the attention paid to the band by rock fans of all ages. I expected that Bon Jovi would have a phenomenal stage show and concert.

I expected wrong. As a fan of Bon Jovi on vinyl, I thought that nothing less than a very good show was to be performed. However, too much time was wasted in talking to the audience and telling stupid stories about girls in bars. The show turned into mediocre trash from the current hottest band in America. Opening act Cinderella, although deprived of money and fame, put Bon Jovi to shame with their solid set of nine out of the 10 songs from their debut album, Night Songs.

Cinderella broke into an hour-long show with "Once Around The Ride," causing their hometown audience to go wild. A popular local band three or four years old, Cinderella played the local clubs and concert halls until national success came with the release of Night Songs on a major label. Now Cinderella is playing in bigger places and for bigger bands.

Cinderella played all of the other songs on Night Songs except for "Hell On Wheels." The band members are: Jeff LaBar (guitar), Eric Brittingham (bass), Fred Coury (drums) and Tom Keifer (vocals and guitar). All the band members played hard. Actually playing in their hometown in the biggest concert hall in town (The Spectrum) must give them an even bigger incentive to keep it going strong.

Highlights of Cinderella's show were LaBar's unique guitar solo before the title track of Night Songs and Coury's powerful, but short, drum solo, leading into their hit song, "Shake Me." Cinderella proved their supremacy in the realm of local Philly metal bands, and I would look for headlining tours in a couple of years.

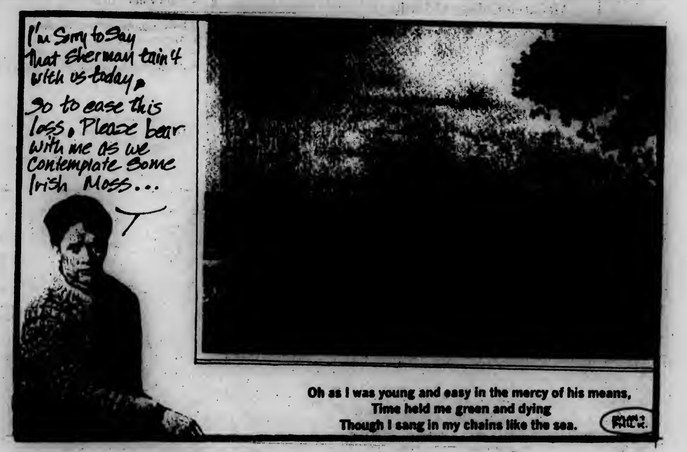
"Nobody's Fool" and "Shake Me" met the greatest crowd response because of the hits' popularity, but all of the other songs were excellently performed. "In From The Outside" and "Back Home Again" translated well to a wild, headbanging Spectrum. Cinderella's great set only proved my conclusion after seeing Bon Jovi: Cinderella blew Bon Jovi away as far as solid performance and professionalism go.

Now to Bon Jovi. After all, they did headline. All right, we will give the awards to Bon Jovi for stage set and crowd response, but as far as overall performance, Cinderella takes it. Bon Jovi started off a two-hour show with "Raise Your Hands" from Slippery When Wet. The song versions that they did were great, but the problem with the show was that there were not enough.

The unique part of Bon Jovi's show was the track far above the crowd's heads that extended to a platform in the back of the Spectrum. Early in the show, Jon Bon Jovi, the man of mucho ego, rode a trapeze to the back and sang the best version of "Silent Night" I have ever heard. Again, the songs were great, but Jon Bon Jovi's ego got in the way. All right, you are the hottest thing in America, but we do not need to see and hear it.

Bon Jovi performed a total of 13 songs, including the mega-hits "You Give Love A Bad Name" (which had a wasteful 10-minute introduction), "Livin' On A Prayer," "Runaway" and "In And Out Of Love." These were all well-done and the crowd went wild. A personal favorite from Slippery When Wet is "Wild In The Streets," which featured the Bon Jovi light display.

What ruined the concert was Jon Bon Jovi. His attitude was too much to handle on an empty stomach. His antics included wrapping the American flag around himself and coming out for a few songs in hat and shades, like he was super-cool or something. Too bad, Bon Bozo, that you did not play down your success some more. This might actually be a supportive review. Typical of the waste of time was a 20-minute discourse with the crowd during "Let It Rock" to get the crowd rowdy.



If you have tickets to the other Bon Jovi shows on the 15 and 16, do not miss them. Cinderella is worth the trip. You can just sit back and relax during Bon Jovi. Maybe he will change the show by then and make the concert what it should have been.

Fans pursue Bruce trivia

Deborah Mayer's new book, "Prove it all Night," will challenge even Bruce's staunchest fans.

By KEVIN HECHT

So you think you know everything about Bruce Springsteen? You say that you have seen him seven times, that you have all his albums, that you have made dozens of trips to the Stone Pony and that you have worn out both sides of Born to Run, but do you really know everything about the Boss?

If you think you do, Prove it all Night, a new book by Deborah Mayer, may just prove you wrong. This book contains the ultimate in Springsteen trivia, and poses questions that would probably stump the Boss himself.

For instance, do you know the maiden name of Bruce's mother? How about the name of his first writing partner? Well if you can figure them out, can you tell me for whom did Bruce open at the Schaefer Music Festival in August 1974? How about telling me what California DJ Bruce asked for a date while on the air in July 1978?

Prove it all Night was a brainstorm that Mayer had after none of her friends could stump her on Springsteen trivia. The television production assistant became a fanatic of the Boss during the disco craze, when "listening to 'Thunder Road' and 'Backstreets' was like breathing fresh air." Her love for Bruce can be sensed throughout the book, and her enthusiasm for the legendary rocker is hard to match.

Besides containing dozens of stumpers, the new book also showcases some great pictures of the Boss and his band, and many match-up quizzes challenging the reader to match up Bruce's characters and the songs that they are in. For instance, who went to Greasy Lake in "Spirits in the Night?"

Do you think that you can match up songs and the album on which they appear? Well then, tell me the classic record that contained "Jungleland." Okay, that is an easy one, so prove that you are a real fan and name the album that introduced us to "My Father's House."

Should I continue? How about "Factory," "Kitty's Back" and "Crush on You?" Getting confused? No problem, here is a list of some of the answers so you do not go crazy trying to figure out these puzzling questions.

The maiden name of Bruce's mother is Adele Zirilli. His first writing partner was George Theiss. The band for whom Bruce opened at the Shaefer Music Festival in August 1974 was none other than Anne Murray. The DJ he asked for a date on the air is Mary Turner. (She turned him down.)

Furthermore, it was Crazy Janey, Wild Billy, Hazy Davey and Killer Joe who drove to Greasy Lake. "Jungleland" is on Born to Run, "My Father's House" is on Nebraska, "Factory" on Darkness on the Edge of Town, "Kitty's Back" is on The Wild, the Innocent and the E Street Shuffle, and "Crush on You" is on The River.

You may just be the biggest Bruce fan who ever lived, but Prove it all Night is bound to stump you.

Atlantic Starr shines 'In the Name of Love'

By PATRICIA McGOLDRICK

All in the Name of Love
Atlantic Starr

The candles are lit, the champagne is chilled and all you need is the soft music playing in the background. Atlantic Starr's new album, All in the name of Love, is just what you are looking for.

Atlantic Starr is: David Lewis, vocals, guitar; Johnathan Lewis, keyboards; Wayne Lewis, vocals, keyboards; Joseph Phillips, percussion and Barbara Weathers, vocals.

This hot new rhythm and blues group is on their way to the top with their single "Always," which appears on the end of the First Side of their recent release. This is a meaningful song for anyone in love. A song well-worth calling "our song."

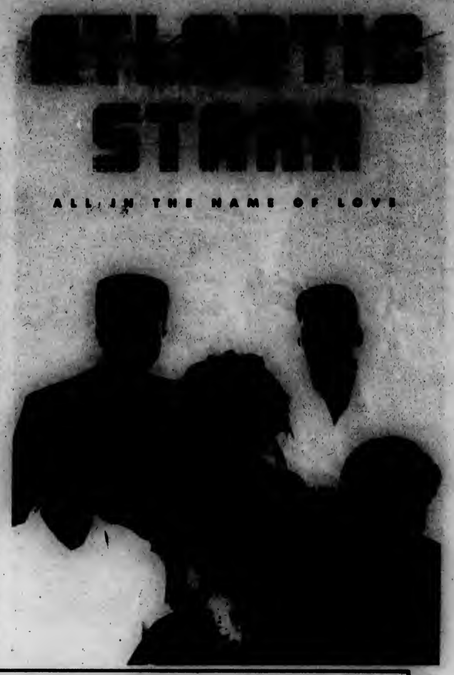
All in the name of Love is a most appropriate title for this release. Not only just the title of one of the tracks, it is also the perfect summary to encompass the subject matter of all the songs on the album.

Weathers' beautiful voice takes the lead with "One Lover at a Time." She advises us that having too many lovers spreads you too thin. Putting all your energy into one lover will give you direction and depth.

Wayne Lewis persists with "You Belong With Me." Lewis says he knows she wants to try something new. She's thinking, "I'm missing out on something." But he explains, "I don't care where you wanna go. You belong with me. I'm the only one that loves you so."

David and Wayne show their appreciation of their lady fans with the song "Females": "There's females in the lobby and outside by the pool. Oh! Let them stay and party 'cuz females are so cool."

"Don't Take Me for Granted" pleads Weathers. Making a relationship work takes two. She wants to make things work as long as he is willing to make time for their love. "Be good to me, show emotion. Show me that you care and I'll give you complete devotion."



Opening up to love is a problem people have at one time or another. The reasons for this are many, but you have to give love a chance. "Let the Sun In," David Lewis says, in "Never let the shades down to the windows of your heart 'cuz ya can't find love if it hides."

On a more religious note, we have the song "Thankful." As the title suggests, we should appreciate and be thankful for all that we have. "If we only stopped to count our blessings, we'd find that there would be no time to complain for what we don't have."

"I'm in Love" and "All in the Name of Love" share the common theme of (I'm sure you'll never guess) love. "The feeling of being on a cloud, and there is no feeling quite like it, is the same, like a picture in a frame."

Lewis concludes with "My Mistake" and "Interlude." Making mistakes is natural in love. Some mistakes hurt more than others. Loving someone who did not love me back was "My Mistake." "Interlude" is a four-line Utopian statement about the love of the world. It asks the Lord for a time when we will learn to love each other as brothers.

Rhythm and blues gives us some of the most meaningful lyrics in music today. Atlantic Starr's All in the Name of Love promotes one of the best things there is ... love.

Finn builds a 'Crowded House'

By SYLVIA DeSANTIS

Crowded House
Crowded House
Capitol Records

Neil Finn more than outdoes himself with his current creation of Crowded House, a new pop band with a surprisingly crisp, original sound. The lead singer's voice may seem pleasantly familiar, and rightfully so. The New Zealander is a former member and key contributor to the ephemeral European band, Split Enz. The music of Crowded House goes just a little deeper, but still entertains with simplicity.

"World Where You Live" begins Side One of the self-titled new album on a somewhat strange note. We encounter a confused boyfriend wondering where his girlfriend is headed. We never actually find out if he joins her though, as Finn himself is relatively clueless.

One of the best contributions to this side is "Don't Dream It's Over." It begins with soft keyboards and presents a determined Finn vowing, "Hey now, hey now/ Don't dream it's over/Hey now, hey now/when the world comes in/They come, they come/To build a wall between us/Don't ever let them win."

There is a definite change of pace with "Mean To Me." Crowded House sarcastically recounts some encounters their lead singer once had with a groupie. Not surprisingly, the groupie is a girl and her affections are not very appreciated. (Oh well, sigh ...).

Side One rounds out nicely with "Love You 'Til The Day I Die." Through a series of howls and some squeaky chords, one can detect a definite protectiveness. The title basically says it all, and it is a sure bet he will live up to his plethora of promises.

The flip side is no less soulful and clears up any doubts as to this band's capabilities. The highlight comes early on Side Two with "Hole In The River." This is a structured stab at a progressive sound, which adds a new dimension to their accomplishments. They voice their suspicions about mortality in a corny, but touching way. "Dreaming of glory/Miles above the mountains and plains/ Fee at last ... There's a hole in the river where a memory lies."

The next two tracks, "I Walk Away" and "Tombstone," are both cute pop ballads that soar between breaking off relationships and reforming Finn into a new man.

A sense of romance is revealed in "That's What I Call Love." Love is equated with devastation and Finn quickly gains pity through his marytr-like appeals. This track speeds along with a plucky acoustic sound. Every other line of the chorus is essentially a background moan from the band accompanied by some mumbling voices.

The entire album is permeated with a likeable and entertaining form of progressive pop. Finn, through each song, delivers a clear and moving note, usually with a cute message no one could take too seriously. The selections are original and entertaining, with some of the tracks enhanced by a few additional instruments.

Finn, with his core duet, impressively carries most of the songs with only a basic sound of drums, bass, guitar and piano. Crowded House has succeeded in doing a great job with their release of a vibrant debut album, noteworthy in its own right. With an impressive album, Finn and his band have left newly found fans anticipating more.

Cultural Film Series offers students alternatives

By NANCY J. GROGAN

Have you seen the latest "Freddy" movie — "A Nightmare on Elm Street 3: Dream Warriors?" Yes, it's another blood-and-guts movie, but unlike other movies of the sort, the writer attempted to put a story behind it: irrational killings with a reason.

I will admit that the actions in the movie do make you tense, but the scariest part about "Nightmare" is the fact that it is only one of the many meaningless films you are likely to find in neighborhood theatres.

If you have had enough of tedious, nonsensical films, or if you would like to see a different type of film for a change of pace, there is an alternative: Villanova's Cultural Film Series.

The Cultural Film Series offers students, faculty and community members an opportunity to see a variety of distinguished films, many of which are rarely, if ever, screened in area theatres.

This spring the series has shown such films as Orson Welles' "Citizen Kane," Akira Kurosowa's "Seven Samural," and "Singin' in the Rain" with Gene Kelly. Still to come are Alfred Hitchcock's "Vertigo," Buster Keaton's "The General," John Ford's "The archers," and several others.

The films in the series all relate to a specific theme or themes chosen each semester. This semester's theme is "Critic's Choice;" the films showing were chosen by an international panel of critics as the best ever made. Some themes that had been employed in the past were "Myths, Memories and Obsessions," "Art: The Artist Looks at Himself," and "The Comic Spirit: Reflective and Self-Reflective."

"Metamorphosis" will be the theme for the Fall '87 semester and will include such films as "Sheer Madness," "The Emerald Forest," "Kiss of the Spiderwoman," and "The Official Story" as Alicia, the central character, is awakened to the horrifying realities of her war torn country, Argentina. Alicia is at first blind to the military sweeps that brutalize war prisoners and tear their children from them: "I always believed what I was told," she said, but she was always told lies.

Only after discovering her adopted child was a victim of a military sweep and hearing an old friend's account of the punishments she suffered, does Alicia come to face the lies haunting the lives of Argentina's citizens.

The theme or themes of the series are chosen each semester by Dr. Joan D. Lynch, associate professor of communication arts and director of the Cultural Film Series. After Lynch has decided upon a theme, she compiles a list of related films. The final choices are made with the approval of the Cultural Film Series Committee — a committee comprised of faculty, administrators, staff and students.

The Cultural Films, well-made, complex and often classic films, are shown on Sundays, Mondays and occasional Wednesdays in the Connelly Center Cinema. They are easily accessible to students and faculty and also attract a great number of people from the surrounding community.

With ticket prices at only $1.50 for students and faculty and $3 for the public, the Cultural Films promise to be one of the most extraordinary bargains anywhere.

The Faction plays Jake's

By LINI MULLEN

The day was warm and sunny, a sure sign that spring had sprung. The wall was packed with people and the "beach" was full of bathers. As the sun set, I headed for Falvey to study. That sounds so anticlimactic. After spending the day conversing with friends and enjoying the sun without a care in the world, suddenly, it was time to study.

A few pages turned, some notes were written, but concentration was hard to find. When the time to study is not going as planned, it is time to do something else. But what? It is 9 p.m. on a Wednesday night. The savings account is depleted because of Spring Break. "I'm so bored!"

What can I do? Luckily, there is Jake's Place. Ah, now there is something to do. I can leave my books at the library; I will be back soon. But right now free pizza, chips and soda are calling my name. Oh, and what is this? There is a band playing. Well, I will just listen to a few tunes and then hit the books again.

Hey, not bad. They sound okay. They seem to know their suff. My feet are tapping, I am getting into this. Hey, look at that guy out on the dance floor. He is having a good time. Obviously he is a fan of good time rock-and-roll. It is the kind of music of which classics are made of.

I am liking this band even more now. They are doing a block of Motown. That is something to get in to, unlike that philosophy book waiting for me at the library.

Uh oh, the band is taking a break. I guess I have to go back to the books now. What is this? More pizza? Well, I suppose I could stick around for just a few more minutes.

They are back! "The Faction," featuring Fabian on the drums; Ben Dority on the bass; Paul Spiegler on guitar, keyboards, and vocals; and Jeff Byrne on guitars and vocals. They start off this set with an original, "The Borderline." It sounds familiar, I know I have heard it before, but where? Where? Where? That is it! "Street

The Beastie Boys party in Philly

By JOE MC GOWAN

The rap ensemble Public Enemy opened for Beastie Boys for a Tuesday night of rap and hardcore punk music at the Spectrum. The evening's show was delayed because of a rush by the crowd at the stage that collapsed the retaining barrier. Only constant coaxing and haranguing by local DJs over the microphone enabled security personnel to restore the barrier.

Public Enemy put on 30 minutes of politically charged raps that took aim at everything from First World complacency to the KKK. Murphy's Law followed, performing a set of similar length that differed enormously from the rap style. With song titles such as "Crusoe Barbecue" and "Ilse, She-Wolf of the SS," Murphy's Law delivered angry, pounding numbers that, in style, resembled those of thrash metal.

Each song thundered away for the span of one and one-half to two minutes at a ridiculous pace. Like the other acts on the bill, Murphy's Law is a DefJam recording artist, but where they will go from here is difficult to say.

At the top of the bill, the Beastie Boys brought their "white rap" to Philadelphia for a disappointingly brief set — just under one hour. But, despite their humor and gross sense of charm, perhaps one hour of the Beastie Boys is enough.

The phenomenal popularity of the Beastie Boys — over two million copies of Licensed To Ill sold so far — defies explanation. The Beastie Boys are the "pet rock" of the music world — an inane gimmick that cornered the wealthy market of youth culture.

The Beasties, all between the ages 20 and 22, after brief college careers got their start in the hard-core punk outfit, The Young & the Useless. They departed from the hard-core punk world to establish their own territory — the obnoxious rap.

The Beasties were given free reign to what they could do with the stage show — and they used this freedom quite liberally. Beer and sex is the motif of everything the Beastie Boys do, and the show is no exception.

The Beastie Boys, the bad boys of rap, invaded the Philadelphia Spectrum on Tuesday night.

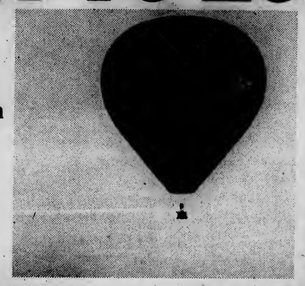
While Public Enemy infused their rap music with political and anti-racist energy, the Beasties extol anything that will offend. This attitude is the key to the success of the Beasties on college campuses.

"She's On It," "No Sleep till Brooklyn" (their localized version of Motorhead's "No Sleep Till Hammersmith"), "Hold It, Now Hit It," "Paul Revere," "Brass Monkey," "She's Crafty" and "The New Style" are all basically dumb songs. But they do seem to work for the fans — and that is the only requirement that rock music need fulfill.

The anthemic "Fight For Your Right" brought the Beasties' Philadelphia debut to a roaring close, as the group continues across the country on their Licensed To Ill tour. While the Beastie Boys do represent a cross-over trend in the music world, only a second album will prove their durability. Until then the Beastie Boys will continue to laugh all the way to the bank.

VIRGIN PROUDLY ANNOUNCES THE WORLD'S MOST EXPENSIVE AND UNCOMFORTABLE FLIGHT TO LONDON.

Unfortunately, you can't go on that flight.



That privilege is reserved for Richard Branson, founder of Virgin Atlantic. This summer, he'll actually be attempting to cross the ocean in a hot air balloon.

And you? If you want to fly from Newark to London, you'll just have to settle for our very inexpensive and comfortable Virgin 747's.

Sorry. But while Mr. Branson gets to spend three fun-filled days (maybe even more) bouncing around in a tiny capsule, boiling by day and freezing by night, and staring endlessly at blinking instrument panels and motionless pressure gauges, you'll be forced to settle for a comfortable seat and attentive service. Plus hit movies, music videos, comedy programs, etc. All coming at you through a pair of serious electronic headsets.

Can you believe it?

And while Richard is living it up on re-hydrated whatever-it-is and yummy vitamin supplements, you'll have to make do with a hot meal, and a snack besides.

And get this. To top it off, Richard Branson gets to pay over a million dollars more than you do.

That's right! Over a million dollars more!

Some people have all the luck.

The 'Dead' bring fans back to life

By JIM WOOD

"The Grateful Dead are not the best at what they do, they are the only ones who do what they do."

When I sat down to write this article, I knew I had something of a problem on my hands. If I write a piece that is completely from within the perspective of the Deadhead, then I would not be covering it for the general Villanova population. If I covered the shows for the general Villanova population, then the essential Deadhead perspective would be slighted in the process. So I will try to walk a tightrope. Here it goes...

The Grateful Dead. Those three words evoke images of tie-dies, people in sandals and an attitude; an attitude not of commerciality or of passing interest in a couple of songs, but of a 20-year-old travelling rock-and-roll band that is unique in the history of music.

The Grateful Dead came to Philadelphia to play three shows at the Spectrum on March 29, 30 and 31. This story was written to make public the essential qualities of the shows in Philadelphia but also of Dead shows in general. Because you are reading this means you are at least mildly interested. A simple report about the Grateful Dead, for anyone who appreciates what they do, is impossible.

Everyone I talked to about these three shows agreed that the band is very hot right now. Jerry Garcia, the band's spiritual leader, is now apparently (hard) drug-free, and is now playing with an energy that he lacked in the early 1980s. Bob Weir, the Dead's front man, is in rare form, although there are some who say that he is getting a little out of hand with his identity as the band's on stage center of attention.

Trying to find patterns in Grateful Dead concerts is like trying to find specific patterns in the way different people interpret an event; everyone has a unique perspective through which they perceive incidents. For those who have never seen a Dead show, I will try to give a brief structural outline of how one flows along (and I do mean flows).

The Grateful Dead generally plays concerts consisting of two sets with a break separating them. The analogy of a car works well here — in the first set, the car warms up; in the second, the car (the band) goes through its gears and works the way it was designed to. If this word imagery has brought a mental picture to you, good, I am getting somewhere.

The Dead; a 20-year-old traveling rock-and-roll band that is unique in the history of music.

Getting into some specifics on individual shows, the first show, on March 29, started late because of "Wrestlemania," which occurred earlier that day. Although the potential for conflict between the arriving Deadheads and the departing Hulksters was high, there were no incidents of violence reported.

The show featured two new songs on the band's forthcoming album, due this summer. Tony Burton, a resident of that bastion of Deadheadism in Ardmore, "Rule City," and a proud attendee of all three shows, called Sunday's show "the best. The energy level on stage was amazing."

The second show, on March 30, was generally, but not universally, considered the mellowest. Kate Thomas, a proud Grateful Dead concert-goer, called Sunday's show "great. The best I've ever seen them do."

The third show, on March 31, was generally agreed to be the craziest, probably because of the fact that WMMR's presence at the show made people more hyper than they would have ordinarily been.

Of course, the best way to experience the Grateful Dead fully is, according to Fred Sicre, "to see two shows on back-to-back nights, because then you can get totally into the mode."

Our Constitution was born out of a cacophony of competing voices.

But today the freedom of speech that remains the hallmark of our Constitution may be threatened.

The NAAAF Essay Contest is designed to emphasize the importance of free speech and open debate in a vital area.

In his best-selling book, They Dare to Speak Out: People and Institutions Confront Israel's Lobby, former Congressman Paul Findley sounds an alarm: "It is clear that many Americans do not feel they can speak freely on one of the most complicated and challenging current issues: The Arab-Israeli dispute."

Is he right? What do you think?

Full time college and university students are invited to submit a critical essay of 2,500 words or less on the subject "The Development of American Middle East Policy: Is Free Speech Threatened?"

There will be 200 regional winners of $1,000 each and 10 national winners of an additional $4,000 each.

The contest is sponsored by the NAAA Foundation, a charitable organization which carries out educational programs on Middle East subjects.

Television commentator Tom Braden serves as Honorary Chairman of the Selection Committee. Distinguished columnist Carl Rowan is Awards Chairman.

On the Scene . . . Entertainment tidbits

By MARYJO YANNACONE

For the week ending April 10, we have the return of old favorites and the debut of new hopefuls. From literature to television programs to commercials, everyone seems to be buying into the oldies as the greatest and fastest way to the bank.

IBM, one of the top-grossing personal computer companies in the world, has abandoned its Charlie Chaplin commercials for something newer and better. Taking the Little Tramp's place will be most of the cast of M*A*S*H, the television series that earned countless honors and awards while on national TV, and that continues to attract viewers while in syndication. Seen in the commercials, which debuted last Thursday night, are Jamie Farr (Klinger), Gary Burghoff (Radar), Loretta Swit (Hot Lips), Larry Linville (Frank Burns), Wayne Rogers (Trapper John) Harry Morgan (Colonel Potter) and William Christopher (Father Mulcahy).

Surprisingly, Alan Alda, who played the outrageous Hawkeye Pierce, is not seen in the commercials. It seems to me that Alda has done computer commercials before. Perhaps he is tired and wary of the limelight and the Korean War. Who could blame him?

In other back-from-the-dead news, those daring brothers from Bayport are back in print. Yes, the infamous Hardy Boys, Frank and Joe, are back to solving mysteries and crimes and anything else the CIA cannot handle. They have been revived by Simon and Schuster Publishers, who just last year brought back the Nancy Drew series.

Like Drew, the boys have been updated to attract and interest the contemporary 12-year-old. There will no longer be plotlines about hidden treasure and haunted houses. The new, improved foes will involve organized crime, evil cults and international terrorists.

In the first issue to be released this month, Dead on Target, which carries the subtitle "Revenge is always a personal matter," the boys go after the bad guys who killed Joe's girlfriend accidentally by a car bomb, which was initially intended for the boys. Right away, the boys start spewing computer talk and fiddling with high-tech detection devices. They are prototypes of Buck Rogers, Matt Houston, Crockett and Tubbs, Maddie and David and every other modern-day crime stopper.

Reaching the bookstores just after Dead on Target will be Evil Inc., to be followed by Cult of Crime and The Lazarus Plot later in the year. The series will continue as long as people keep buying the books, according to publicity assistant Joanne Finkelstein.

In other news, Fox Broadcasting Co., owned by media tycoon Rupert Murdoch, will premiere six series within the next month. The company has signed up 110 stations to carry its broadcasts, including WTAF (Channel 29), in an attempt to make strides in its goal of equality with ABC, CBS and NBC.

In an unusual arrangement, Fox's first two series were presented three times on opening night to give viewers more opportunities to watch. "Married ... with Children" aired Sunday at 7, 8 and 9 p.m., and "The Tracey Ullman Show" followed it at 7:30, 8:30 and 9:30 p.m. The remaining series will be aired normally.

"21 Jump Street" will air at 7 p.m., April 12, "Duet" at 8:30 p.m., April 19 and "Mr. President" at 9 p.m., May 3. The final series' starting date and time is not definite yet, but is tentatively scheduled for April 26 at 9 p.m., and is a spin-off of the movie "Down and Out in Beverly Hills," to be given the same title.

McElwee produces 'Improbable Search For Love'

By RICH ABRAHAM

Woody Allen and Ross McElwee have a lot in common. They both film what happens in their life (particularly their love life). They both carry realistic, but unusual, characters within their films, and they are both losers at love who hold perpetual hope.

There is one critical difference, however. Allen's films are fantasy based upon the facts of his life, whereas McElwee's film, "Sherman's March," is literally based on his life. He carried a camera on his shoulder while interacting with the principal people of his life, primarily women, and compiled these tapes into a film for our consumption.

Nothing was scripted, and yet the audience could still feel the frustration, fear, pity and humor that went on in this man's life, and in the lives around him. Interestingly enough, it is the film's humor that is most often and most strongly felt by the audience, with it sometimes reaching into hilarity.

"Sherman's March" begins just as its title suggests. McElwee intended to chronicle the march of Sherman during the Civil War, the effect it had on the southern communities involved, and on Sherman himself. Fortunately, for us, McElwee's New York girlfriend leaves him and he gets hopelessly off the track.

He starts for the south at a family get-together where his sister sweetly suggests that he should use his video camera to meet a woman because a camera can even make a Harvard film teacher with a poor physical appearance seem like an attractive lover. Immediately following this suggestion, we join Ross, who is tall, thin and shaggily bearded, on "An Improbable Search For Love," which is also the film's new subtitle.

The search of the South begins with Pat, an aspiring actress. Her primary ambition in life is to get a part in a Burt Reynolds picture, and when she leaves him, it is to perform a three-line role in a movie.

In 'Sherman's March,' we are treated to a wonderful film about people, happiness and how they find it.

Never slowing down, McElwee then meets Wini, a linguist who lives in the swampish wild; Claudia, a divorced mother who tries to teach him how to rollerskate; Joyous, a bar-lounge blues singer; and Karen, an old high-school beauty of Ross' that he tries to turn into a lover. With each experience we learn of the ambitions, idiosyncracies, fears, desires and, sometimes, sorrowfulness in each of these lives.

However, the highlight of the film comes with a burst of matchmaking, humor and shock embodied in the person called Charleen. A friend and former teacher of Ross', she thinks he is getting old and is determined to see him married as soon as possible. Among other, more private things, Charleen comments upon his hiding behind the camera, his appearance, boredom and, above all, his lack of passion and drive.

To Charleen, Deedee was the perfect girl for him. Believing her to be simply a folk singer, the situation between Ross and Deedee seemed to be a little awkward (especially with Charleen as the "chief advisor" of the relationship). But, when McElwee discovers Deedee to also be a Mormon survivalist, complete with fully stocked bomb shelter, he decides to break it off.

Do not feel too sorry for Ross. His search for love is never-ending and, in the end, it is revived with a return to New York. On his search, he occasionally returns to his original concept of chronicaling Sherman's march and we learn many interesting truths about Sherman as well. But ultimately love reigns supreme and we are treated to a wonderful film about people, happiness and how they attempt to find it.

Unfortunately, by the time this review is printed, "Sherman's March" will not be playing at the Ritz Five any longer, but if it opens at a theater that shows "art films," such as Narbeth or Bala, the Roxy or TLA, go see it. Even though it lasts over two-and-one-half hours, it is worth watching if only for its sheer ability to be unique and humorous by simply filming the lives of others with a genuine affection.

Beat" on WMMR Sunday nights. Pretty soon WMMR will be playing "Just a Dream" on the "Psychedelic Supper."

This band is hot! "Everything I Feel" brings back memories of Spring Break. If you have ever driven down to Florida in a convertible, you know what I mean. The Faction's tunes are uptempo, exciting sounds. "Don'tcha Give Me Away" gets your energy level up. It is one of those tunes you pop into the stereo when you are gettng ready to go out at night.

In addition to their originals, The Faction does covers of such classics as Marvin Gaye's "I Heard It Through The Grapevine" and The Kingsmen's "Louie Louie."

Oh no! The band is done. It is midnight. So much for a night a Falvey. Even if I was going to get any work done, I am glad I did not try too hard. Hearing The Faction was a lot more fun than reading Kant's view of life.

I recommend that you see this band when you get the chance, and there will be plenty of places to see them. The Faction appeared at Orlean's in Paoli on April 1 and they will be there again tonight. They will be at Old Smoke's on April 15. On April 18, The Faction will be at 23 East with Tommy Conwell; on April 22, at Ambler Cabaret; and on April 29, at the Khyber Pass Pub. So, take a night off. Leave the books behind and see this band. You will be glad you did!

'Cats float into spring

By KAREN THOMA

Villanova crew braved the downpour of last Saturday to take on a host of crews from area schools. The women's and men's teams faced opposition from Connecticut College, Drexel University, Williams College, Stockton State, Franklin and Marshall (F&M) and St. Joe's University.

Rowing in a heavy rain, the crew met with mixed results, faring well in the novice and lightweight categories, but struggling somewhat in the varsity heavyweight races.

Most encouraging was the success of the men's novices, who remain undefeated for the season after taking both the heavy-4 and the light-8 events. In the latter race, the novices topped four other boats.

Coach Tully Vaughan is optimistic about his novice crew's future. "They've surprised even me with the way they've been rowing. Those were some very tough crews they beat today."

The women's novices were not quite as fortunate in their eight race, losing a close one to Connecticut, while still outpulling Drexel and F&M. They later redeemed themselves by finishing first and second in the four event.

Novice coach Ann Dollarton commented, "The girls rowed as hard as they could in the eight. They just came up a little short."

The competition proved a little tougher for the varsity squads, however. Though the lightweight men were able to record another win for that boat, the heavyweight men, and both the heavyweight and lightweight women, fell to an accomplished Connecticut College squad.

Alley Cat Tournament previewed

By MICHAEL J. HEALEY

You have your basic athletic events. There is the World Series. And the Stanley Cup. The Final Four. The Triple Crown. The Indy 500. The Super Bowl. Ali-Frazier III. Ho-hum. Real yawners in the scheme of things. Mundane City. All sizzle and no steak.

And you have your athletic extravaganzas. These are sports spectaculars so spectacular that they transcend sport itself.

There are only four. Can you name them? Not even many true sports fans can.

Time is up.

If you guessed Wrestlemania I, II and III and the Alley Cat Basketball Tournament, you were correct. And you win an all-expenses-paid trip to Camden, N.J., and a year's subscription to Sports Illustrated.

Wrestlemania may have surprised you. But certainly not Alley Cat. Not the Alley Cat.

For the unilluminated, Alley Cat was begun in 1981 by one Eddie Wallace as a way to raise money for the Balloon Day Fund.

With minor exceptions, the tourney format has remained unchanged over the years: double elimination with games to 15. If a ballgame is tied at 14, it goes to 21. There is one varsity player per team, if you are lucky enough, and a $2 entry fee per person. (This year's proceeds go to the Saint Francis Inn in Philadelphia and the Augustinian mission in Peru.)

"It has definitely become a spring ritual," said tournament commissioner and basketball maven the Rev. John Stack, O.S.A., who serves in his spare time as Villanova dean of students.

"It's popular because it's an opportunity for people who didn't do well in intramurals to play," he said, "and also, because people rally around the fact that it's a fundraiser for Balloon Day."

With 38 entries, this year's field promises to be the most wide-open ever. In a recent interview that was far-ranging and often heated, the commissioner agreed to discuss the 1987 Alley Cat. What follows are his thoughts on sundry tournament topics. (Editorial additions are in parentheses.)

* On this year's field: "Mud (with Mark Plansky and the "Mayberry Boys") is favored. They should be pumped up since they lost in the intramural semi-finals (on a foul whistled by, yup, you guessed it, the commissioner).

"I also like Gary Who? (featuring accomplished aerialist Kevin "Dog" Monagle. Oh yeah. And Harold Jensen's pretty good, too.)

"My dark horse would be Tim Brunock (a squad starring Tim Brunock). My real dark horse is the Six Disciples of Bio (coached by Marco Way and captained by Mike Newell).

"And I would be remiss (naturally) if I did not mention the sixth-seed, The Real Thing (Stack's team, comprised of such stalwarts as Brian Harrington and Ed "Elbows" Sullivan)."

* On the condition of Corr Courts, the tournament site: "Unfortunatelly, the instant replay screen will not be installed on time. We do, however, have all new backboards."

* On dunking: "This is our second year of allowing dunking. It's an automatic team forfeit if the dunker bends, breaks, damages, destroys or demolishes rims (an unlikelihood with the absence this year of noted rim-hanger Brian Mahady. Mahady is sidelined with an ankle injury). If you can dunk, fine. If not, you'll be penalized."

* On the controversial drug-testing of Alley Cat finalists: "There's been real pressure on me to enact it ... I'm having a blue-ribbon commission of former Alley Cat champions study the question."

* On the championship halftime show: "I'm really not at liberty to say exactly. All I can tell you is that some of Peter Ueberroth's assistants from the olympics have been consulted."

* On his being wooed by the NCAA Selection Committee: "There's been no formal offer yet, a few feelers maybe ... I'm usually more modest, but over the years Dave Gavitt, Wayne Duke and Dick Shulz, past and present Selection Committee chairmen, have looked at some of our computerized Alley Cat seeding stats to assist them in their decisions."

* On the tremendous popularity and growing manageability of Alley Cat: "We have requested space from Father Driscoll for an office to house the AC (jargon for Alley Cat) archives and funds to hire a statistician."

'Cats excel outside

By DOUG SCANCARELLA

The Villanova's men's track team enjoyed a successful week. On March 28, Gerry O'Reilly and Sean O'Neill turned in excellent performances at the Jamacian National Relays, while on April 4, the 'Cats officially opened their outdoor season with a fine performance in the Colonial Relays at Williamsburg, Va.

The Jamaica National Relays were very good to the 'Cats. O'Reilly, the 6-foot-2-inch, 158-pound senior won the 1,500-meter run with a stunning 3:45.3 performance. The time allowed O'Reilly to defeat Jamaica's Lyston McKennzie.

Senior O'Neill finished third in the 800-meter run. O'Neill ran a fine race, but was held off by Jamaica's Elton Lewis and Edwin Kockick.

On April 3 and 4, the 'Cats ventured to Williamsburg, Va for the Colonial Relays. The Wildcats would be forced to deal with bad weather all weekend. It was cold and windy, and it rained off and on all weekend. Despite the horrid conditions, the 'Cats still had some fine performances.

Freshman Jan Freidli easily won the freshman 1,500-meter run. His time of 3:54.4 left all competitors far behind.

While Freidli dominated his race, the 1,600-meter relay won their event with a 3:11.11 time. The winning team of Grant Davis (47.4), Mark Rainey (48.4), Marc Jones (47.6) and Edwin Modebedi (47.7) narrowly edged second place finisher, Howard Univesity, which finished with a time of 3:11.17.

'Nova's 4 x 800-meter relay also performed well, finishing second to Virginia Tech. The team, which included, Howard Jackson, Mark Sullivan, Freidli and O'Neill ran a 7:38.1. The time was not their best, but it enabled them to finish second.

In addition to V.U.'s runners doing well, their long jumpers had excellent performances as well. Rainey, a freshman, had an outstanding jump of 24 feet, 4 inches. Rainey was narrowly edged by Maryland's Howard Lindsey, who jumped 24 feet, 6 inches. Another freshman, Jeremy Worrell, leaped 22 feet and 7 inches, a length that earned him a ninth place finish.

The future looks bright for the Wildcats, who performed well in the lousy weather conditions at the Colonial Relays. Next for 'Nova are the Dogwood Relays, in Knoxville, Tenn., which is followed by the Rutgers Relay in New Brunswick, N.J.

V.U. improves to 7-4

By JOHN FAY

Villanova's men's tennis team posted two victories in three matches this past week, increasing their record to 7-4.

The squad began the week with a 6-3 loss at Monmouth. Despite the unfortunate outcome, senior Mike Parks played extremely well, capturing victories in both singles and doubles play. After winning his singles match in straight sets 6-3, 6-1, he teamed with Pete Leonard to prevail in doubles by the identical score. Dave Lyons won a three-set affair, extending his unbeaten streak to an incredible seven matches.

The 'Cats bounced back the next day and pounded helpless West Chester, 7-2. Unbelievably, Parks, Leonard, Greg Ackerman, Mike Fredman and John O'Dwyer all were victorious in singles play.

Finally, Villanova closed the week with an exciting 5-4 victory over Queens College. Ironically, the three single winners' Lyons, Freedman and Amendola, prevailed in three-set marathons. Amendola paired with O'Dwyer to win their first doubles match, while Freedman and Leonard disposed of their two opponents.

Athlete of the Week

KRIS BRANCA

This week's Athlete of the Week is softball pitcher Kris Branca. Branca was chosen for her stunning performance versus West Chester in the second game of the doubleheader.

Branca stifled West Chester at the plate, throwing the first no-hitter for Villanova since Eileen McEvoy threw one versus Widener in the 1978 season.

Branca after three games has a 0.00 ERA.

Branca is a freshman from Camden Catholic high school in Penneauken, N.J.

Wildcat bats shoot down Hawks

By JOHN G. RICCO

The Villanova baseball team is off to its best start since 1908. Though Mother Nature tried her hardest to prevent it, the Wildcats were able to get one game in among last week's rain and snow. Head Coach George Bennet's squad capitalized on a break in the bad weather and on April 2 routed St. Joe's 15-4 to raise their record to 17-8.

Mike Schick, a pitcher/outfield for the 'Cats, had an outstanding day against the Hawks. The freshman started for Villanova and went five innings allowing only four runs on three hits and running his 1987 record to 3-1. At the plate, Schick was as impressive helping himself with a three-for-three effort, including a double, a home run and two RBIs.

The Wildcats jumped out quickly, scoring runs in each of the first six innings. In the first, the team came up with four runs, two on back-to-back solo homers by Schick and Bob McCreary. Glenn Cordick, who went four for five with three RBIs on the day, kept the inning alive with a two-out single. He eventually scored on a double by Gary Scott, who in turn came around for the 'Cats' fourth run on a base hit by catcher Mike Svanson.

In the second, designated hitter Mike Jones got the Hawks on the board with a solo homer, cutting Villanova's lead to 4-1. The Wildcats answered with two second inning runs of their own, however, and maintained a comfortable lead.

Schick's only real trouble came in the third inning. With two outs and two men on, St. Joe's right-fielder Scott Gilbert got hold of a Schick pitch and drove it out of the park. The three-run shot, which would represent St. Joe's last runs of the game, made the score 6-4.

Villanova countered with four runs in their half of the third, putting the game out of reach. Cordick and Schick both had key hits in the inning.

Following a single Wildcat run in the fourth inning and three in the fifth, Villanova wrapped up its 15-4 victory with one run in the sixth. The win was the 'Cats' second over St. Joseph's this season and marked their 11th win in their last 13 games.

The bad weather last week caused the cancellation of six games, including a three-game series against Seton Hall. The three Pirate contests will be made up in a double-header May 9 and a single game May 10, but the other rain outs will not be rescheduled.

'Cat football club organized

By DOUG SCANCARELLA

Last football season the Wildcats suffered from a lack of fan support. It seemed that all students were more involved in the tailgates than the games which they precede. According to Head Football Coach Andy Talley, "Villanova football at this time has no home field advantage."

Obviously a solution was needed. This solution was the creation of the Villanova University Football Club.

Talley announced the club's formation last week. The club, which will be headed by Todd Budnick and Tom Vogtle, has been designed to generate more enthusiasm toward Villanova's football program and provide adequate service for those wanting to purchase tickets.

One way the club will be attempting to sell tickets is through the University's fraternities and sororities. Talley said, "We'd like to get the fraternities and sororities into the stadium as a unified force, to get them to leave the tailgates and come to the games as a unit."

Talley wants to make it convenient for the fraternities and sororities by offering them a package where they can sit together. Season ticket packages are scheduled to go on sale at $15 each on April 20-24 and April 24-30 in the Connelly Center and Bartley cafeteria from 11-2:30 p.m.

In addition to selling tickets for games in Villanova, the club is going to sponsor road trips to away games. Plans are also being made to create a new mascot that will complement the Wildcat in stirring up excitement in the stands. A third idea, which is in the works, is to have a different theme for each game such as a Toga Day, a Kazzoo Day or a Hawaiian Shirt Day.

Hopefully, this club will create a lot more fan support and improve the team's home field advantage in both the upcoming season and the many years to follow.

What is to become of America's colleges and universities? Are our institutions of higher education becoming mere farm systems for the professional ranks of basketball and football?

It is a known fact that college athletics have helped many young men enjoy a college education that they would not have had otherwise. On the other side of the coin, however, is the collegiate athlete who does not care at all about his academic surroundings. The concern is merely his performance on the turf or on the playing area. To them, college is nothing more than a springboard into the professional ranks..

What are the students looking for in their university's team? Are we, as students, looking for student-athletes who are concerned about their performance off the playing area as much as they are concerned about their performance on the playing area? Or are we looking for a nationally-ranked team of pseudo-professionals going to college for the purpose of getting to the pros?

What is the solution? The "ideal" situation could be found in the sport of baseball. Professional baseball teams have set up farm teams for those without the desire or intelligence to enter the world of higher academics. For those who wish to continue with the educational process, scholarships are still available.

The competition in the collegiate ranks has not faltered because of the farm systems. The thrill and pride attained from victory and the agony received in defeat is still as great.

Student-athletes who participate in baseball do not destroy the possibility of achieving professional status by going to college. Instead they enhance the possibility. They can now achieve professional status in either the world of sports or the world of business, medicine or law.

It is up to the colleges and universities of America to restore meaning to college athletics. If they are professionals, pay them. If they are students, make sure they have the ability and desire to learn.

Women's softball record, 6-1

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

The Villanova women's softball team is wreaking havoc in the dust of Sullivan field this season. The once much maligned team has terrorized opponents and surged to a 6-1 record.

The Wildcats took a double-header from Long Island University last week and then traveled to Monmouth College to take on the Lady Hawks. For the first time this season, the Wildcats tasted defeat. They lost 8-6.

The Wildcats took the defeat well and responded in true Wildcat fashion by burying West Chester the following day.

The Wildcats took the first game of the double header 6-4, and improved on that by annihilating their opponents, 6-0, in the second game.

The Wildcats are led at the plate by sophomore Mindy Kahn. Kahn leads Villanova with a .583 batting average after seven games.

Freshman Lisa Ann Kelly is the runner-up in the batting average category with a .555 batting average.

The highlight of the week was the performance of Kris Branca. Branca took control of the second game of the dou[illegible]eheader by way of the mound. Branca threw a no-hit shut-out. This was the first no-hitter in Villanova softball since Eileen McEvoy threw one versus Widener in 1978.

In the seven innings that Branca pitched, she allowed no runs, no hits, walked two and struck out three.

Branca on the season has an earned run average of 0.00.

The Wildcats will continue their rampage through the softball league by taking traveling to Boston College for the next three days.

Athletics to be evaluated

By DIANE CILIONE

The athletic program at Villanova will be evaluated from April 26-29. This evaluation, which is one part of a University-wide evaluation program, will focus on the value of the athletics program to the University.

The program evaluation committee, which is chaired by Dr. Angelo Armenti, dean of University College, was charged by the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, "to evaluate all existing academic and non-academic programs and to analyze certain proposed programs using guidelines and parameters delineated in the documents entitled Villanova University: Mission Statements, Goals and Objectives' and 'Planning Assumptions'," according to the February 1987 Program Evaluation Newsletter (PEN).

The program evaluation committee, in order to fulfill its charge, has formed subcommittees and has enlisted the help of outside evaluators, according to the PEN. Gaylor B. Hanford, a member of the college board, will be responsible for evaluating Villanova's athletics department and for submitting a report to the program evaluation committee along with recommendations, if necessary, said the Rev. George F. Burnell, O.S.A., assistant to the president.

According to Burnell, Hanford will be here to analyze the program according to its ability to satisfy the needs of the students and according to its degree of conformity with the values of Villanova University as a whole, just as the other University programs were previously analyzed.

Dr. Theodore A. Aceto, director of Athletics, said that he expects the focus of the evaluation to be on individual athletic programs, coaches, organizational structure and budgets. Aceto does not expect drugs or alcohol or individual athletes' academic performances to be a significant point of investigation for the evaluator. According to Aceto, the University has other means of dealing with those issues.

"I look forward to the evaluation because I welcome the suggestions or constructive criticism," said Aceto.

Housekeeping service questioned

By LYNN PERDEK

On-campus residents have recently expressed differing opinions as to the effectiveness of the housekeeping staff and facilities in the residence halls on Villanova's campus.

The department of Custodial Services has not made any major changes in staff or in housekeeping methods for next year, according to Victoria Denelli, supervisor of Housekeeping. No complaints have been registered with Custodial Services as to the adequacy of the services on campus.

Many students, however, have raised questions as to the cleanliness of the dormitories and have expressed some sort of housekeeping services on the weekends, in addition to the present service during the week.

A junior resident on the ground floor of Stanford Hall claimed that the hallway and bathrooms are [illegible] clean thoroughly and often act as if they couldn't be bothered."

Other residents stated that they have no complaints with the services and that the housekeepers do the best they can.

The opinion of the housekeepers interviewed remains that they are doing all that is possible to keep the hallways clean.

Denelli stated that the housekeepers will be assigned to assist, in order to maintain and improve the present level of cleanliness in the dormitories.

Vandalism reduction sought

By NOEL E. FALCO

A Student Government peer pressure committee sent letters to students during the week of March 23 urging "peers against vandalism" in response to vandalism on campus, said Patrick Mousseau, head of the committee.

"It's to get students aware of vandalism, to let them know there's a minority of students who create the destruction. The money that's wasted [repairing vandalism] could easily be spent toward something else," Mousseau said.

According to Thomas N. Trucks, director of Maintenance, $70,000 was due as of March 31 for repairs.

"I predict it will hit $100,000 to $110,000 [by the end of the semester]," he said.

Mousseau said, "Sometimes it reaches $10,000 a weekend. One weekend a couple of years ago it was $30,000 just for one weekend. Something like that is after a major basketball game when students are hyped up."

Trucks said the three worst dormitories are Stanford, Sullivan and Sheehan halls, with Moriarty Hall being the worst of the smaller dormitories.

Maintenance does all the repair work except for repair of glass, fence damage, plastering and vents, which are done by an outside firm.

According to Trucks, repair costs are charged to students.

"Rooms are charged, along with dorms. Wings can be charged, too," he said.

However, he also stated that only "half [of the fines) are collectible."

"[With] vandalism on campus or vandalism in academic buildings.... we can't be sure of responsibility. The only place that is charged back is where we can be sure of responsibility," said Trucks.

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, said of vandalism, "It is a problem. We trace it to the person who is responsible. If it can't be traced, either [the residents of] the wing or floor or building pay for it."

He added, "They [the residents of the building] are not necessarily the ones who did it but more than likely they are. They are also the ones put out if something is not usable. They suffer for it."

I predict it [vandalism] will hit $100,000 to $110,000 [by the end of the semester.]

Thomas N. Trucks
director of Maintenance

Of academic or exterior damage, he said, "It's general wear and tear. Maintenance takes care of it [absorbs the cost] ... housing is involved with something directly concerning housing."

Questioned about the supposed decrease of vandalism in coeducational dormitories, he replied, "You hear there is less with coed housing, but I don't know."

Stack said of the irresponsibility of vandalism, "I'm talking about people doing what is expected civilized behavior, there shouldn't have to be a rule about it."

He also stressed peer pressure as a means of curbing vandalism. "It's not the only thing ... but I think there are people who witness vandalism and take the attitude, 'it's not my business,' but in fact it is — it affects the community."

Mousseau said if vandalism were kept to a minimum, the money saved "could take care of a lot of problems. Instead of repairing everything, we can have more benefits for the students."

Besides the money factor, "People's health and safety is endangered," he said.

"If there's ever a serious fire, almost every fire extinguisher is empty in the dorms mentioned. We've been very lucky so far that no deaths or serious injuries have occurred," said Mousseau.

He stated that there is an average of 11 fires per weekend, mostly in trash cans or on bulletin boards. He added that many fire alarms are broken.

Mousseau commented that the intent of the committee is "to make students aware that the school is their property. If somebody breaks a window, it's their window."

He added, "We're having a meeting next week to discuss ideas. We're trying to get the administration and maintenance to fix up the dorms so students will want to take better care of them."

The committee is supported by the Interfraternity Council, the Panhellenic Council, the Resident Student Association, the Association of Commuting Students and Student Government.

Forum held on sexual issues

By MEG KLUCSARITS

Villanova University's Honors Forum presented a panel discussion, "A Catholic Dilemma: Birth, Sex and Technology," on April 9. The discussion centered on current issues affecting biology and reproduction, including the recent Vatican statement Human Life and Procreation, which was issued March 19.

The panel included the Rev. Donald X. Burt, O.S.A., philosophy professor; Dr. Jeffrey Johnson, history professor; Dr. William Marks, biology professor; and Barbara Kimmelman of the history and sociology department at the University of Pennsylvania, who is teaching a course, "The Politics of Biology," at Villanova this semester. Dr. Joseph Des Jardins of the peace and justice department moderated the discussion.

Des Jardins opened the discussion with the observation that at Catholic universities, "The tendency is to shy away from debates" whenever the topic of sex is mentioned. He commended the honors program for providing an opportunity to discuss such controversial issues.

Johnson followed with his opening statement, in which he questioned the Catholic Church's negative stand on invitro fertilization (IVF), which is used to create "test tube" babies.

He explained that the procedure, which was first performed in 1978, consists of extracting a number of eggs from a woman and fertilizing all of them in the laboratory. All of the eggs are observed, and the one which shows the most normal development is reimplanted in the mother's womb.

A big question from the Church's standpoint, Johnson observed, is what happens to those fertilized eggs that are not used, which must be treated with the same respect as all other human life. If the fertilized eggs are simply disposed of, this constitutes murder, he said. Johnson pointed out, however, that in Australia none of the embryos are allowed to die. Instead, they are preserved frozen.

Johnson also mentioned the Church's concern that IVF could open the door for further genetic experimentation and human cloning, which are both considered contrary to human dignity.

If all respect to human dignity is given to the embryos, Johnson inquired, "Why should invitro fertilization without killing embryos not be permitted?" Johnson's conclusion from the Church's point of view was that the importance of sexuality is so strongly emphasized that reproduction without sexuality denies the baby its perfection.

Johnson pointed out, however, that, "Natural sexual transmission is already imperfect. Seventy-five percent [of fertilization attempts] result in spontaneous abortions." The IVF rate of failure, according to Johnson is 80 percent, a difference of only 5 percent. "One might argue that this is not so bad," Johnson said.

He concluded, "If this question is not fully answered, it will cause serious problems with transferring these ideas into law."

Marks then presented his opening statement from a biologist's point of view. "Fundamentally," he said, "the issue is biological in nature." He continued that contraception, artificial insemination, invitro fertilization and surrogate motherhood all deal with biological technology and functions.

However, Marks feels that the controversy does not lie in the technology itself. Rather, the controversy is an ethical and philosophical one.

Marks posed the question, "At what point do we let our ethical indignation dictate what is going on?" He felt that this question and other related ones, such as when human life begins or when the soul enters the body, are not ones to be dealt with by a biologist. Hence, Marks stated that what on the surface seems to be a biological question is not biological at all.

Kimmelman felt that the Vatican's statement focused on both a women's rights issue as well as a family issue. "Experts have told women what to do over all times; how many children to have and when to have them. Women should be wary of advisement for such a personal issue."

She also noted that despite the professionalization of women, they are still desperate for children. The Church should be happy, according to Kimmelman, because women are putting such a high value on the family.

The Vatican's statement, Kimmelman believes, produces a conflict for women who feel frustrated in the workplace because of sex discrimination and then turn back to the family only to face further frustrations and limitations from the Church.

Kimmelman questioned the ethics of surrogate motherhood but from a socio-economic point of view. Some women will have greater access to such a procedure because they are rich. Kimmelman questioned the ethics of surrogate motherhood because it could lead to the exploitation of the poor by the rich.

She concluded that it is wishful thinking for the Church to believe that a theological solution alone will solve such a complex problem.

Burt gave the final statement. He said that he did not want to speak as a theologian on this issue, but he wanted to give a rational foundation for the Vatican's document.

The Church is against IVF because "a person is subordinate to God in determining the life of oneself and others," Burt said. Thus, a person cannot determine which embryo is to survive, as this is a decision reserved solely for God, according to Burt.

Burt added, "Invitro fertilization is contrary to the right of every individual to be conceived, nurtured, raised, live and die in the 'crucible of love' [marriage]."

Burt disagreed with the claim that parents have a constitutional right to a child, thereby denying the morality of surrogate motherhood. "A child is not an object to which one has a right," he said. Burt continued that considering the child an object decreases his or her dignity as a human being.

He stressed that medical intervention has not been rejected by the Church simply because the means are artificial but because they have been considered in light of the dignity of the human being. Burt added later that an artificial womb could be ethical if it was the only way to save either the life of the child or the mother.

Burt concluded with the statement that even if one acts ethically, "Every tragic situation [such as sterility] will not be able to be solved."

Lindback Award finalists chosen

Approximately 600 sophomores, juniors, seniors and faculty members participated in this year's recent voting for Lindback Award nominations for distinguished teaching.

The six finalists, listed alphabetically, are: Andreas Athinaios, economics; James N. Giordano, economics; Daniel J. O'Mara, accounting; James J. Schuster, chemical engineering; Priptal Singh, electrical engineering; and Michael W. Varano, management.

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, will select two winners from these nominees and present $1,000 cash prizes to each at commencement in May. Funds for the awards are made available by the Lindback Foundation.

Named to the honorable mention category in this year's voting are the following, listed alphabetically: Sterling Delano, English; Joseph R. Desjardins, philosophy; Harry Gelman, accounting; the Rev. John J. Hagen, O.S.A., English; John Immerwahr, philosophy; Martin J. Manley, political science; Charles H. Marston, mechanical engineering; James C. O'Brien, mechanical engineering; and Richard J. Perry, electrical engineering.

Team competes in College Bowl

On Feb. 21, Villanova competed in the Association of College Unions International Region III College Bowl competition. Schools from New York City, Long Island, New Jersey, the Philadelphia area and Delaware were represented.

College Bowl, referred to as "the varsity sport of the mind," provides the arena for fast minds in college to demonstrate their skills under the fire of varsity competition.

The team representing Villanova was chosen through an intramural competition run last fall by the Villanova Union. The team consisted of Jim Fellin, senior accounting major; John Frohnhofer, senior accounting major; Steven Happ, team captain and a senior accounting major, and Nesi Calderon, sophomore history major.

Villanova's team reportedly made a good showing in the competition, which was won by New York University.

New classics courses offered

Villanova University's classical studies department is introducing two new courses to comply with a resurging national interest in Greek and Roman culture.

"Classical Archaeology" will examine the material remains of the major Greek and Roman cities.

Dr. Henry Bender, who teaches "Classical Mythology," will teach the new course.

"Women in the Classical World" will explore the roles, images and contributions of women in Greek and Roman literature and history.

Lynn Smith will teach the course.

1,000 students sign grape petition

By JENNIFER REIDY

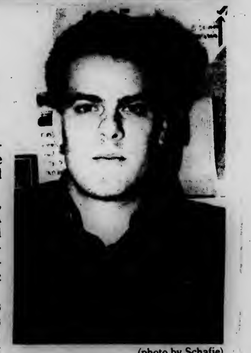
Edward A. Sullivan of the peace and justice education department and Edward Canchez, a mid-Atlantic regional representative of the United Farm Workers of America (U.F.W.), recently initiated and completed a petition, signed by 1,000 students, supporting the boycott of grapes headed by Cesar Chavez, founder and president of U.F.W.

The petition was a direct result of a meeting between Sullivan, Canchez and J. Les Gies, director of Food Services. According to Canchez, Gies showed interest in the program but wanted concrete evidence of resident student support. Consequently, Sullivan and Canchez have accumulated 1,000 student signatures.

However, Gies has been unavailable for comment.

Canchez stated that the reason he and Sullivan directed the petition to Gies specifically is that Gies is directly responsible for the purchase of grapes found in Villanova's cafeterias.

Canchez, who reportedly collected many of the students' signatures, described student reaction as "very supportive." He also stated that most Villanova students realize the plight of the farm laborers underlying the public health concern objectives of the boycott.



One question to be addressed is how the government can allow the distribution of produce that has been suspected to be extremely hazardous to people's health. Canchez responded that because the grapes are grown in California, the state and local government, specifically the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), is responsible for the regulation and the safety of the products presented to the public.

However, Canchez continued, the director of California's FDA is a powerful and influential grower, thus explaining the continued distribution of the poisonous grapes because of economic considerations.

The federal government has shown concern for the dangerous pesticides but has taken no action to combat the situation, according to Canchez. In a recent Wall Street Journal article, an Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) representative stated that pesticides are a high priority for the EPA. However, this concern is "tied up in red tape" right now, according to Canchez.

Grapes are the target crop for the boycott because they are the most heavily sprayed crop in the United States and are in high demand by consumers from May to January of each season, according to Canchez.

Student response has reportedly been very supportive of the boycott.

Registrar cracks down on fake IDs

By CAROLYN R. MIRABILE

Cathy Connor, assistant to the registrar, said this week, "Students were memorizing social security numbers of other students who were 21 in order to get fake student identification cards [ID s]."

A few weeks ago, the Registrar's Office was notified by Lower Merion Police that students were gaining access into local bars with fake Villanova University IDs. According to the police, students were using the school IDs as a second form of identification.

Currently, the Registrar's Office is taking measures that will prevent students from getting ID cards under false circumstances. Students who try to obtain new cards will be asked personal information, and they will have to show another valid form of identification.

Connor also stated, "Students who are currently trying to get new IDs are being turned away if they do not have the proper identification or if the office feels that they are lying."

Since the students who already received the fake IDs are not easily identifiable, they will not be punished. But Connor said, "If the matter would have gotten out of hand, then the University would have had to deal with the situation."

Apparently, Connor said, "This year there was an abundant number of students who claimed to have lost their Villanova ID cards." In addition, she stated, "The $5 fee obviously did not act as a deterrent."

Drug probe concluded

Radnor Township Police Department's Investigation Division has recently completed a joint investigation with Villanova University Security regarding alleged drug use and drug sales at the University in 1985, according to the Main Line Times.

Radnor Police announced that the investigation obtained no substantial evidence and will result in no arrests.

The investigation was spurred by the March 16 issue of Sports Illustrated which printed an article in which Gary McLain, the point guard for the 1985 NCAA championship Villanova men's basketball team, reported that drugs were readily available to basketball players while they were at Villanova.

Radnor Police interviewed University officials, coaches and basketball team members who played while McLain was a Villanova player. Those interviewed at the University denied any awareness of drug use on campus according to the Radnor Police.

Radnor Police Chief Maurice Hennessy stated, "I really think his [McLain's] story is false. For $40,000 he [McLain] has made a lot of statements."

proposal, written by Gene Linkmeyer of Student Government, suggests the organization of a "task force on college cost alternatives to research and recommend solutions for the problem of tuition increases for future Villanova University students."

Allman considers this an "important motion." Allman said, "Hopefully it will be passed so as to increase the possibility of more financial aid for students."

Stephen J. Flanagan, student caucus leader and executive secretary of the Senate, said that he sees no problem in the passing of this new proposal.

"I don't think anyone will be hostile toward looking for other means of financing college education," said Flanagan.

President-elect Phil Brach, currently secretary of external affairs, explained that he believes the financial aid proposal to be "very important" also. Brach said, "The proposal is clear-cut. It emphasizes the seriousness of rising costs of a college education. This is a national problem, and Villanova must look into it."

The second proposal to be discussed is a motion from the graduate committee of the University Senate to make changes in the composition of the graduate committee.

Joe Allman, Student Government president, will give his farewell address at today's Senate meeting.

Allman expressed favor for this proposal. "I would like to see representation from all colleges of the University since there are graduate issues brought up affecting all colleges, such as the addition of Ph.D. [doctorate] programs," he said.

Today's Senate meeting will be the first official meeting for Phil Brach as president-elect, although his presidential duties will not begin until May 1.

Society names inductees

By SHARON KELLY

Villanova University's chapter of Phi Kappa Phi Honor Society will induct 131 members at a ceremony and banquet on April 26 in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

Phi Kappa Phi is a national scholastic honor society founded in 1897 to recognize academic excellence in all disciplines. The inductees represent the top 10 percent of the senior class and the top 5 percent of the junior class.

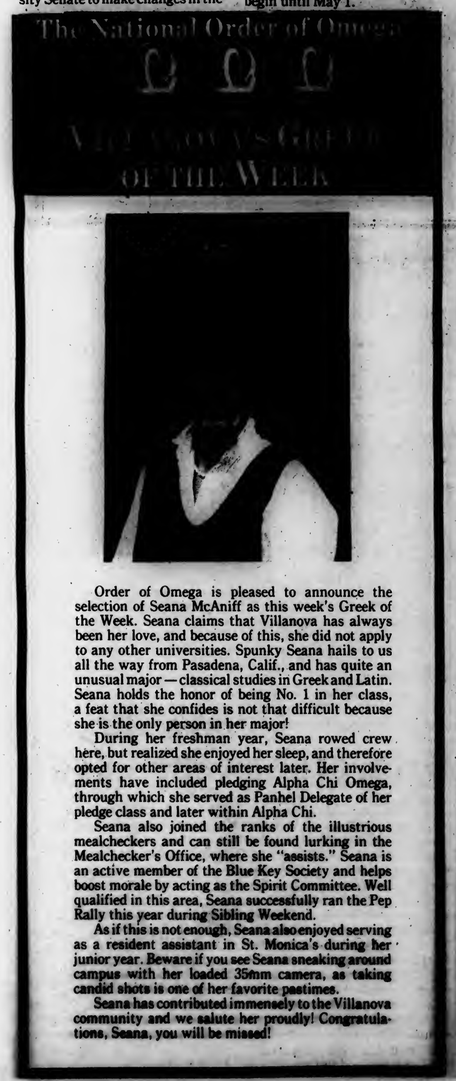
The juniors to be inducted include: Janine P. Andrews, Maria A. Bendinelli, Anne Louise Bendinger, Lisa A. Bisaga, Sharon A. Blais, Mary E. Charest, Wilson Cheung, Karen Chiappone, Joanne L. Conrad, Robert F. Copel and Robert A. Crognale.

Other juniors are: Jami-Michele D'Ambra, Stephen J. DeAngelis, John D. DiLullo, Charles A. Dougherty III, Joette F. Eline, Kathleen E. Engel, Glenn C. Fletcher, Paul R. Gaudrault, William J. Haubert, Terrie M. Hopkins, Lawrence E. Hudy, Rose Ann Januzelli and Marcos Justine.

Additional juniors are: Sean V. Kemether, Hugo A. Kostelni, Phyllis Krieger, Christopher P. Kriesen, Catherine M. Lafferty, Joanne M. Loftus, Joan E. London, Alison P. Lowery, Patricia L. Maccagnano, Jane A. Manze, Roy E. Mascolino, Donna J. Mastrangelo, Mary Frances McAleer, Kathleen M. McAveney and John S. McNally.

Others are: Frances A. Meehan, Carla A. Monticelli, Rosemary R. Morse, Donald P. Mullikin, Timothy J. Murtha, Carol A. Niehay, David M. O'Toole, Carol E. Orrson, John L. Palme, Lorraine M. Reiter, William J. Ruth, Robert B. Sauder, Joseph T. Sixeas, David W. Smith, Anne E. Specker, Stephen Turano, Barbara A. Walsh, Cathleen Whelan, Gail M. Williams and Marianne Wolfram.

Seniors that will be inducted include: Lisa A. Almeida, Diana M. Barnes, Agnes M. Bernal, Geordi K. Borsari, Meoghan M. Byrne, William P. Byrne, Lawrence F. Carlin, Christopher J. Carrozza, Thomas J. Cherneskie, Josephine Chiaradonna, Amy R. Coval, Dorothy L. Doughty, David J. Dudrear, Deanna C. Elia and Maryanne T. Elliott.



Additional seniors are: Marilyn Giedgowd Michaels, Adriane M. Glodek, Karen F. Grass, Cynthia M. Gunn, Bonita K. Hadrick, Mary Sue V. Haydt, Jane C. Herling, Eleanor R. Hersh, Geoffrey L. Hulme, Melda Ann Isaac, Beth N. Jacobs, Michael H. Jacobs, Lorna Johnson, Joseph E. Krisciunas, John C. Kucharczuk, Thomas E. Lafferty, Gene M. Linkmeyer and Paul L. Manganelli.

Other seniors to be inducted are: Geoffrey R. Marczyk, Sheila R. Masterson, Cecelia McGarvey, Sheila A. McKenna, Carolyn Mirsky, Kathleen S. Olex, Tracy L. Prestopino, Paula A. Pullano, Jane W. Riley, Susan J. Ruff, Hernando Ruiz-Jimenez, Alice M. Ryan, Steven H. Santini and Susan I. Schelpf.

Other seniors are: Anna M. Serrao, Peggy J. Sheehy, Constance B. Smith, Gerald L. Spearman, John D. Szulgit, Stacey A. Tower, John M. Travaglione, Susan M. Treskolasky, Karen A. Walsh and Lorraine K. Zinar.

Some Villanova graduate students will be inducted also. They are: Deborah T. Affonsa, Barbara E. Bowen, Irene G. Doniger, Bonnie S. Garchinsky, Eleanor B. Hanna, Jo Ann T. Lister, Darrell J. Savastio, Mary E. Sheetz, Jessica L. Stickley and Bruce J. Vogel.

Finally, five members of the faculty will be initiated. They are: Dr. Walter E. Conn, religious studies professor; Dr. Bijan G. Mobasseri, electrical engineering professor; Dr. Purusottam Mookerjee, electrical engineering professor; Dr. Vincent Sherry, English professor; and Dr. Theresa M. Valiga, nursing professor.

Order of Omega is pleased to announce the selection of Seana McAniff as this week's Greek of the Week. Seana claims that Villanova has always been her love, and because of this, she did not apply to any other universities. Spunky Seana hails to us all the way from Pasadena, Calif., and has quite an unusual major — classical studies in Greek and Latin. Seana holds the honor of being No. 1 in her class, a feat that she confides is not that difficult because she is the only person in her major!

During her freshman year, Seana rowed crew here, but realized she enjoyed her sleep, and therefore opted for other areas of interest later. Her involvements have included pledging Alpha Chi Omega, through which she served as Panhel Delegate of her pledge class and later within Alpha Chi.

Seana also joined the ranks of the illustrious mealcheckers and can still be found lurking in the Mealchecker's Office, where she "assists." Seana is an active member of the Blue Key Society and helps boost morale by acting as the Spirit Committee. Well qualified in this area, Seana successfully ran the Pep Rally this year during Sibling Weekend.

As if this is not enough, Seana also enjoyed serving as a resident assistant in St. Monica's during her junior year. Beware if you see Seana sneaking around campus with her loaded 35mm camera, as taking candid shots is one of her favorite pastimes.

Seana has contributed immensely to the Villanova community and we salute her proudly! Congratulations, Seana, you will be missed!

Vietnam veterans air views

By SHARON A. WATERS

Vietnam veterans spoke to the Villanova community April 8 in the Connelly Center Cinema about their individual views of the war. The discussion included each veteran's account of his experiences, which differed depending upon the places, people and events each encountered.

Albert J. Dorley, history professor, introduced the veterans, who were Dr. James Kirschke of the English department, Jim Ulmer, Glenn Burtnett, Don Yost, and John Kane.

Steve Bell of KYW-TV was also included on the panel of guest speakers because he served as a media correspondent in Vietnam for 18 months.

The panel explained that they have visited high schools and colleges to talk about the Vietnam War because there is not much written about the war in history books. The presentation centered upon questions the audience asked the veterans so that the veterans could address the issues which concerned the audience most.

When asked how realistic "Platoon" (the recent movie which depicted the war in Vietnam) was, there were mixed responses from the veterans.

Ulmer felt that "Platoon" showed the worst that happened in Vietnam and that all veterans could "relate to the ants crawling down your back, the heat, dust, fear and frustration." Ulmer contrasted "Platoon's" realism with "Rambo," another movie about the Vietnam War, which he considered unrealistic and "a fantasy, a cartoon."

Yost also attested to the validity of the movie "Platoon" and told the audience that he had witnessed scenes similar to and worse than those found in the movie. Yost, who said he had "never witnessed anything so realistic, true to life, sad and pathetic but absolutely true," considered "Platoon" to be the story he had been trying to tell for 17 years.

Albert J. Dorley, history professor, recently organized a discussion in which Vietnam veterans aired their views.

On the other hand, Kirschke had less praise for "Platoon." He saw the men in the movie as casting a negative image which contradicted the caring and respectful men he encountered in Vietnam. Kirschke also "refused to accept that the average fighting man went to the other side of the world and . . . became an animal."

Kirschke's only regret concerning his service was the fact that he had to be telling an audience that the men who fought in Vietnam were decent people. Kirschke felt so strongly about the men with whom he fought and the experiences they shared, that he said he would go through the pain and the entire experience again rather than not have Vietnam be a part of his life.

Other veterans echoed Kirshke's feelings of camaraderie. They also spoke of the high spirits and morale of the men who fought. Several compared their group experiences to being a part of a family.

The panel also discussed problems Vietnam veterans encountered on their return and are still confronting today. They spoke of higher divorce and suicide rates for veterans and problems with alcohol and drug abuse. Also, they said that veterans must deal with feelings of alienation, rage and guilt.

Ulmer thought that the way veterans were treated upon their arrival home was a national disgrace. Insulted by the fact that Vietnam veterans are sometimes considered the bad guys, he reminded the audience that they just fought in the war and were not involved in policymaking.

Yost spoke of a collective guilt which should be assumed by all Americans, and that until we acknowledge and accept the Vietnam War, it can happen again.

Kane felt that Vietnam was different from any other war because each person went into it as an individual, while in other wars you "won as a unit."

Bell said that the media coverage of the war impacted upon the people at home by bringing Vietnam into their living rooms. While he believed that the press was a definite part of the process and influenced people's perspectives about what was at stake in the war, Bell did not feel the media dominated the war.

All the veterans expressed that they just wanted to be treated the same as other veterans and encouraged other veterans to speak out about their experiences instead of trying to forget them.

Class time schedule revised

By PAULA A. SEEFELDT

A rumor recently circulated around campus that several classes, a large number of them communications arts courses, that were offered in the master schedule for the fall 1987 semester were cancelled.

Joan Lynch of the Registrar's Office explained that classes listed in the master schedule were not cancelled but that a few time changes were made.

One hundred twenty-five classes were scheduled for 105 classrooms, which meant that some of the courses initially offered at "prime time" were changed to earlier or later in the day, said Lynch.

Lynch explained that the most popular hours for classes are Monday/Wednesday/Friday at 9:30, 10:30, 11:30 and 1:30. The most frequently requested Tuesday/Thursday classes are at 10:00 and 1:30.

"We did not cancel because of space — we changed times instead," said Lynch.

The Rev. John P. Beteni, O.S.A., assistant to the Registrar, believes the rumour may have started with the changing of a freshman engineering course.

The course, Physics 1131, was originally a three-credit class. It was changed to 1151 and offered for four credits. This was the only change made, and it would only affect incoming freshman engineering majors.

Warren O. Richardson, dean of communication arts, also verified that the rumor was false.

"We changed two or three classes before the master schedule was published, but those changes were just between my office and the Registrar," said Richardson.

Carter acquitted in protest trial

The 15 defendants arrested during a student protest at Brown University in November were acquitted on April 15 in Northampton, Mass.

The rally, led by Amy Carter, protested the recruitment by the Central Intelligence Agency at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Carter was aided by 50-year-old Abbie Hoffman in working toward the acquittal of the activists. The lawyers defending the students stated that the highly publicized Carter-Hoffman victory will bring new life into political causes and issues.

The defendants declared that this success is only the beginning and that although this movement is reminiscent of the past, it is highly important for the future.

Wesley student killed in fire

Two Wesley College students were arrested and charged with manslaughter, assault and conspiracy earlier this month, after allegedly setting off a smoke device in a dormitory room. The smoke device started a fire on the second floor of the dormitory and resulted in the death of one student, while four others sustained injuries.

The incident occurred at approximately 2 a.m. in Williams Hall on the Wesley College campus located in Dover, Del.. The smoke device, which was apparently ignited as a prank, caused heavy smoke damage in the building.

The five students were taken to Kent General Hospital, where one was pronounced dead on arrival and the other four were treated for smoke inhalation.

Fund shortage closes W.Va. colleges

The West Virginia state universities and colleges were ordered by Gov. Arch A. Moore and the West Virginia Board of Regents to close for one week in order to save the state $10 million.

In addition, all employees will be furloughed and summer school classes will be cancelled until after July 1, which is the start of the new fiscal year. The school presidents were also asked to postpone any non-emergency maintenance, travel and equipment purchases.

The cancelled classes will not alter the accreditation of the 16 state-supported colleges and universities, but 60,000 students will be affected by this decision.

V.U. hosts band competition

By KATHLEEN REICHNER

The finals of the "Energizer Rock 'N Roll Challenge," a contest to find the best college rock group in America's Northeast and Mid-Atlantic regions, will take place on April 26 at 6 p.m. in the duPont Pavilion, according to Lisa Sheehe, concerts coordinator of the Villanova Union.

The event will receive coverage from MTV, said Sheehe, and the Hooters, a band which launched its career in Philadelphia, are scheduled to act as judges for the challenge. Sheehe also stated that radio station WMMR is giving away tickets to the event.

The challenge is going to be hosted by the comedian Sinbad, who is the 1986 Star Search winner and who has appeared on "The Cosby Show," said Sheehe.

The event will be the final round in a battle of the bands sponsored by the Eveready Battery Co. The contest began last October and has involved bands from over 120 colleges in the Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Washington, D.C. areas.

The winning band from each school went on to a regional elimination round. The winners of that contest went on to the semi-finals, which determined the No. 1 band from each area. Those four bands will be competing Sunday night.

The bands are Rhythm Method from Harvard University, Byzon iz Pyaon from the State University of New York at Fredonia, The Beat Clinic from the University of Delaware and The New Buicks from Georgetown University.

The winning band of the challenge will receive a recording session, $5,000 cash and a $5,000 scholarship given to their school in their names.

The bands will be judged by other celebrity judges besides the Hooters. Scheduled to be judges are Joel Derouin, keyboard performer from Emerson, Lake and Palmer; Jeffrey Zahn, songwriter and judge for the Emmy Awards; Eric Bloom, lead singer of Blue Oyster Cult; and John Post, president of Nola Recording Studio, who will be producing a demo tape for the winning band.

The bands will be judged on musical content, originality, creativity and performance.

Tickets for the rock 'n roll challenge can be purchased at the Connelly Center ticket office for $3 with Villanova ID or at the duPont Pavilion the night of the concert.

Soviet literature discussed in forum

By KATHLEEN REICHNER

The April Honors Forum, "Individual Expression and Institutional Integrity" began on April 2, with a lecture delivered by Dr. Maria Lekic on "Poetic Calling and Political Imperatives: Antimonies of Socialist Realism," according to Maria Chiappetta, member of the April Honors Forum committee.

Dr. Lekic, who is from the Soviet Union, graduated from Moscow State Pedagogical Institute and received her doctorate in Slavic languages and literatures from the University of Pennsylvania.

She is currently the director of the language department at the University of Maryland but is teaching an honors course in Soviet literature at Villanova this semester.

In the lecture, Lekic stated that socialist realism is the basic method of Soviet literature and literary criticism. It demands truthful and historically concrete representation of reality in its revolutionary development and it must be linked with ideological transformation and the education of workers in the system.

In the Soviet Union, explained Lekic, literature is considered to be a powerful force that can be a foe or ally of the government. Therefore, Soviet writers must follow certain rules laid down by socialist realism in order to gain recognition.

Approve new dorms

On April 27, the Radnor Township Board of Commissioners will vote on Villanova University's plans to build two new dormitories. Approval for this much-needed on-campus housing is crucial to the welfare of University students, as well as to township residents, and should be granted without delay.

Housing shortages at Villanova are a fact of life, and the squeeze is likely to tighten. More and more students are forced to seek off-campus housing, and area residents are not pleased that students have become their neighbors. They want the students out.

Yet, the University's plans for more on-campus housing have met with opposition from Radnor residents. They cite the expected noise and traffic from the new dorms. But residents fail to recognize that, if there is no place to live on campus, students will once again be off campus.

Radnor residents must realize that they will not be able to both deny students the opportunity to live on campus and exclude them from off-campus living as well. Villanova University has been in existence in the community that bears its name since 1842, and is highly likely to remain here. And its students have to live somewhere.

Radnor residents are entitled to their preferences, but they are not entitled to deny students their rights. And surely they do not help their own interests by opposing the University when it seeks to provide more on-campus housing for students.

When the Board of Commissioners meets on April 27, they should consider the interests of both the residents and the University and its students, who give a major boost to the local economy every year. The commissioners would do well also to contemplate, proverbially speaking, whether denying approval for new dorms would be cutting off their noses to spite their faces.

Summer credit policy unfair

To the Editor:

A recent decision by Villanova's administration demonstrates that Villanova suffers from academic arrogance. Villanova will no longer accept credits for courses from community and junior colleges, if a student is currently attending Villanova. This means that summer school credits will only be granted for courses taken at Villanova and other four-year institutions.

This decision was supposedly motivated by a desire to upgrade Villanova's academic standards. However this reasoning is fraudulent when you consider that many two-year and community colleges have considerable accreditation.

It is more likely that this decision was motivated by economics. The administration may be trying to boost its own summer program revenues.

At any rate, this decision and other insufficiencies in the Villanova experience (lack of quality housing for example) illustrates that the administration of Villanova University is out of tune with the needs of its students.

The cost per credit at junior and community colleges could be as much as 60 percent less than the cost per credit at Villanova and other four-year institutions. This decision will once again raise the cost of education for many — something the administration takes little concern in doing.

This latest decision can only be seen as reactionary. Perhaps, by asserting that good education does not have to be expensive, the mere existence of junior and community colleges threatens the control that major universities seem to have on the education industry.

Eric E. Borio
Class of 1989

The year in review

There is a rule which states that history is constantly in the making. Villanova can certainly justify that rule with the changes and additions made to its history in the past year.

Villanova's women athletes made history with a number of spectacular achievements. The track team collected two world record setting wins, one in the distance medley relay during the Florida Classic in February, and the other in the 3,200-meter relay during the NCAA indoor championships in March. Shelley Pennefather was honored with the Wade Trophy, an award considered equal to the Heisman Trophy. She also reached a total of 2,408 points, the most for any V.U. basketball player, and led the women's basketball team to another Big East Championship.

In March, Sports Illustrated published an 18-page, cover story confession of Gary McLain's cocaine addiction. Villanova's 1985 Cinderella NCAA basketball victory seemed shadowed.

In addition, the University Senate set the pace for future history-making events with several hard fought decisions. After years of consideration, the Senate in November made a permanent space in the calendar for Fall Break. Furthermore, they recently approved the addition of minuses to the grading system. And a tuition hike that will move the combined costs of tuition and room and board past the $11,000 mark next year was also approved by the Senate.

The 1986-87 school year included, as well, the addition of many new names to Villanova's history. The names St. Monica's and Katharine were given to Dorms A and B after two years of namelessness. Most recently the name of Phil Brach became a part of history with his overwhelming election to the position of Student Government president. And on May 17, the names of over 1,700 graduates will find a permanent place in Villanova history.

History is constantly in the making. During the past year, Villanova has made history, and, good or bad, we are proud.

Journalists defend independence

By SUSAN TOLVE

Thomas Jefferson once said, "Were it left to me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate to prefer the latter."

Were he alive today, Jefferson would probably admire the actions of William P. Cheshire, former head of the editorial page of the Washington Times, and many of his colleagues for their pride in the news profession.

The Washington Times was established five years ago to provide a conservative alternative to the Washington Post. There was trouble from the start for the paper, because its financing is provided by associates of the Rev. Sun Myung Moon, head of the South Korean-based Unification Church.

Unlike the news pages of a paper, which strive for accuracy and objectivity, editorial pages allow for the expression of opinions, without jeopardizing a newspaper's journalistic integrity.

Although top officials and owners of the Washington Times have repeatedly denied charges that the church was influencing its editorial policy, employee actions do not support this claim.

Two years ago, the editor in chief, James R. Whelan, quit, calling the Washington Times a "Moonie paper" and saying the paper had lost its editorial independence, according to the April 17, 1987, issue of the New York Times. Recently Cheshire and four members of his staff left the paper over similar issues.

Cheshire claims that the current editor in chief, Arnaud de Borchgrave, consulted with an associate of Moon who is an official of the paper, and then urged Cheshire to revise an editorial that criticized the South Korean government.

The editorial was not printed. And after Cheshire and de Borchgrave spoke on April 14, Cheshire and four of his editorial writers quit.

If Cheshire were the only one with complaints about the Washington Times' editorial policy, one might wonder whether a personal conflict were involved. But when six people quit, all charging that the paper has lost its editorial independence, their claims should be taken seriously.

Not everyone on the Washington Times rallies for Cheshire's cause. In fact, a column by Wesley Pruden in the April 17 issue of the Washington Times stated, "William P. Cheshire, who quit as the editor of the editorial page of this newspaper with the grave but fanciful accusation that the cherished editorial independence of the Times had been breached, is one of the ones who never quite learned to survive in the rough-and-tumble pace that 'the news' demands. Bill's a man for tweeds and a pipe."

From Pruden's description, Cheshire sounds like a real wimp. Individuals, however, who believe so firmly in a principle that they are willing to sacrifice their job for it, are very strong. It takes a lot more courage to stand up for what you believe in than to sit back and criticize.

Unlike the news pages of a paper, which strive for accuracy and objectivity, editorial pages allow for the expression of opinions, without jeopardizing a newspaper's journalistic integrity. Editorial pages contain editorials, op-eds and letters to the editor. Editorials express the opinions of the editorial board. Op-eds (the name stands for opposite to the editorial page) are by-lined points of view written by a staff member or an outside contributor. And letters to the editor are personal opinions sent in to a paper by individuals in order to raise an issue to the editor and the public.

The editorial pages can raise questions, offer reflections and make comparisons not acceptable on other pages of the paper. In any newspaper, the content of these pages is ultimately decided by the editorial board. Therefore, the Washington Times staff should have full control over its pages, without the interference of a foreign-based church.

Whelan, Cheshire and four other editorial staff members all departed from the Washington Times because they believed in the editorial independence of newspapers and in the separation of church and state.

It is because of dedicated editors and journalists like these individuals, that Jefferson's choice — newspapers without a government — could still be made today.

Brach landslide

The start of a new tradition?

By DANTE J. SCALA

They [students] want to see a Student Government which will actively work for them.

As joyous supporters mobbed Phil Brach at the election night climax of his presidential campaign, one could only sit back, marvel at the results, and ponder the implications of his stunning landslide victory.

Brach was not regarded as an underdog, but not even his most faithful supporters expected that he would garner 71 percent of the vote, especially in a three-man race. Indeed, a run-off was considered a real possibility.

Instead, Brach collected more votes than the other two candidates combined. The voters had indeed spoken clearly, and their message may well have long-lasting implications for the future of student presidents and Student Government.

For instance, future presidential candidates will have to seriously consider the Brach and Joe Allman campaigns as models for their own. Any doubters of this need only look at the results and see what their campaign strategies have accomplished. The obvious message to candidates: The students will not come to you, so you had better go to the students.

The poor student turnout at the April 7 election shows that a candidate must reach out to the student and encourage him to make the effort to vote. For example, in 1986 Allman and his campaign staff went door-to-door in the dorms to canvass student support. Also, they wrote letters to the editor and op-eds of the Villanovan to broadcast their message campus-wide. In all, they continually went to the students, and the students responded.

Brach followed many of the same methods en route to his victory. He and his staffers meticulously planned their campaign, complete with pamphlets, door-to-door visiting of dorms, statements in the Villanovan's opinion pages and public canvassing on election day. Chris Dura and Wally McCurdy tried some of the same techniques, but neither seemed to match the effectiveness of their rival. Once again, the advantage of superior campaigning had been proven.

However, Brach also won because of what he said, not only for how he said it. He continually referred to his record, to what he had done as secretary of external affairs for Student Government. Indeed, he asked voters to "re-elect Student Government" during the campaign and called himself the incumbent, the man with experience and knowledge who knew how to get things done.

And for the second time in as many years, the voters looked at the records. In 1986, they saw what Greg Noone had not done and chose a new president. A year later, they examined what Brach had done and elected him.

This sends another message to presidential hopefuls: Do not count on vague, empty "qualifications" such as being "popular" or "energetic" to get elected, for voters have heard those adjectives all too often. They want to see what you have done, and especially what you have done for them.

With this in mind, Brach faces a stern task as president. He swept into office on the quality of his record and the accomplishments of Student Government, and he will now have to show that the best is indeed yet to come. He persuaded students to believe in him, and he is now expected to live up to his promises.

In the euphoria of the election aftermath, one Brach staffer praised his candidate and Allman as "the new tradition" at Villanova. Indeed, Allman planted the idea that Student Government can be an effective voice for the students, and this idea aided Brach in his victory.

In all, the Brach landslide was a mandate from the voters. They want to see a Student Government which will actively work for them. If Brach and future presidents can accomplish this, then a new tradition will truly begin.

Balloon Day raises $5,000 for needy

To the Editor:

As coordinator of Balloon Day for the third consecutive year, I take this opportunity to thank all the people involved in producing a successful Balloon Day event. Many homeless and hungry people around the world will benefit from your efforts. About $5,000 was raosed and it was your hard work which helped in doing so.

First, I thank the entire Campus Ministry staff for being so cooperative in helping me organize the event. Special thanks go to Linda Jaczynski and Fr. Ray Jackson for their roles in moderating my position. Also, thanks to Mary Jane Magee and Ann Marie Descenza for their dedication throughout the weeks prior to Balloon Day.

Next, I thank the cast of "characters" who worked wholeheartedly with me to produce the entire event. Again, special thanks are necessary. To my coordinator, Melissa Esposito, what can I say? You were awesome as usual! Also, to each and every chairperson, I thank you. It was the combination of your efforts which ultimately culminated in the best Balloon Day ever.

Last, but certainly not least, I thank the maintenance department for setting up the event and being patient with my wishes. Also, special thanks to Zeta Psi fraternity pledges for their overall contribution and dedication to Balloon Day. I thank each of you for selling many tags and for setting up the helium tanks.

Finally, I thank each Villanova student for their support of the day. Whether you were a hugger, a clown, a singer or a patron, I really appreciate your efforts.

Allman thankful

To the Editor:

It has been a privilege and a pleasure for me to serve you, the students, as your president. Last April we in Student Government set out to redefine student governance at Villanova, and because of the hard work and dedication of many, many people, we have been successful.

Many issues have been addressed this year by the government, ranging from freshmen academic advisement, to vandalism in the dormitories, to student tuition increases, to off-campus housing. Much work is still needed on several of these issues. The work on other specific issues has been completed.

This past year, for the first time ever, Student Government opened its doors to the participation of any interested student. Much deserved appreciaton goes to the some 200 people who were involved in the process this year and were responsible for us having the successes that we did.

Fortunately this level of involvement will continue. Many students who were involved in the government this past year and new student participants will keep the wheels in motion. The best truly is yet to come.

Thank you for having allowed me to serve you. The experience of dealing and working with so many great people in the community has been rewarding and challenging.

Contest a disgrace

To the Editor:

Being a proud member of the Villanova Greek community, I was very disappointed with actions of fellow fraternity and sorority members during the Greek God and Goddess contest held during Greek Week.

Unfortunately, some things that took place were utterly disgraceful and an embarrassment to those who attended the function. It was a shame that a few tasteless acts had to overpower those other acts of participants who showed class, while displaying a good sense of humor.

The Greek God and Goddess contest should be a fun, worthwhile event that raises money tór an excellent charity. I believe this can be done with a much better attitude.

Future audiences should be much more supportive of those who have given up their time to participate, so acts will not have to turn to crudity to gain applause.

I commend all those who participated tastefully this year, and I only hope that people will be much more respectful to themselves and our outstanding Greek system in the future.

Allman praised for accomplishments

To the Editor:

One year ago today the name Joe Allman did not mean anything to me other than another name running for Student Government president. But today I must thank Joe for being such a good friend to Villanova University.

As president, he was motivated and tackled many issues that deaperately needed to be addreased by Student Government. He constantly spoke out at Senate meetings for the rights of students and worked closely with faculty and administrators to facilitate student needs.

I can honestly say Joe Allman is the only person I know at Villanova who would help any student, no matter who he or she is, in any way he possibly could. I would like to thank Joe for his consistent giving of himself for the good of the Villanova student and wish him luck in his career as a teacher.

Balloon Day becomes soaring success

By JEANNE SAVITSCUS

"Half of all the children in Peru die before age 10," stated Linda Jaczynski of Campus Ministry. The Villanova community reaches out to these children and others through the donations collected during the Balloon Day event.

For 14 years Balloon Day has been an annual charity event that involves most of the Villanova student community.

Held this year on April 9, Balloon Day was initiated by the Rev. Ray Jackson, O.S.A., and Barbara Hahn of Campus Ministry. Jaczinski, who coordinated the event with two student chairpersons, stated, "Balloon Day is a two-fold event. It is a major social event and it raises money for the poor and hungry. Last year we raised $5,000."

This year the profits were split, as usual, between a local and an international charity. The St. Francis Inn soup kitchen in Kensington will receive part of the proceeds to help feed the needy of Philadelphia.

Proceeds will also go to Balloon Day's international cause, the Augustinian missions in Peru. "The Augustinians are building a hospital for children, and we felt that was a very worthy cause," stated Jaczinski.

The band New World highlighted Balloon Day.

Balloon Day took place outside, between Kennedy Hall and Connelly Center. It ran from 11 a.m. until 5 p.m., with the highlight of the day being the 3 p.m. balloon launch.

Brett Datto and Melissa Esposito were the students who organized this year's event. Datto has been coordinator of the event for three years and explained its procedure. Balloon tags are sold a few weeks before the event. Two $25 prizes are awarded — one to the person whose balloon goes the farthest and is sent back, and the other to the sender.

Balloon Day is a good way to do some charitable work. Since all fraternities and sororities are required by Villanova to do a service project, Balloon Day is one way to fulfill this requirement and have fun doing it.

Datto stated, "They can either sell balloon tags, be a hugger or run a booth."

Focusing on the new colored contact lenses

By ELANA STARR

Statistics have shown that when American fashion magazines for women put brown-eyed models on their covers, sales plummet. Fashion mavens in this country, no matter the hue of their own eyes, consistently prefer magazines featuring blue or green-eyed beauties.

Mundane brown peepers are seen as less desirable than exotic blue, green or gray, probably because brown orbs are genetically predominant, with other shades less common.

As a tawny-eyed member of a family with numerous blue and green-eyed relations, I have always felt cheated by Mother Nature. I have been particularly envious of my sister, whose jewel-toned eyes change with the light and the color of her clothing.

Thus, you can imagine my delight when I read that, at last, contact lenses that change brown eyes to blue, green, or aqua have become available.

While tinted lenses have been around since the '60s, they merely enhanced the natural color of light eyes. Someone with gray eyes, for example, could change them to jade green or Paul Newman blue. Those of us with dark orbs, however, could not alter the color until now.

Durasoft's new "Flexi-wear Color Lenses" are opaque and camouflage the iris, no matter the color. (The center, which covers the pupil, is left clear.) Made of 50 percent water, these contacts are extremely fragile and must be handled with care. They are available in both prescription and nonprescription forms.

Never having worn either glasses or contact lenses, I consulted a well-known ophthalmologist, Dr. Juan Grunwald of the Scheie Eye Institute, about the colored lenses' safety. He explained that any lens wearer can end up with an "infection or corneal erosion ... the danger of damaging your eyes is minimal, but it's a risk."

Grunwald added that someone who is conscientious about keeping the lenses clean, however, lowers the potential for trouble. I decided to get the contacts and be scrupulously careful with them.

Before purchasing a pair, I did some comparison shopping. Prices varied from $150 at a small store on South Street to $250 at an upscale King of Purssia emporium. (All prices included a visit with an optometrist to determine the prescription, if any, and the fit.) When I learned that the American Vision Center at the Court of King of Prussia was selling the lenses at $50 off the regular cost of $229, I decided the time was right and made an appointment.

At this point, I began to feel uneasy. Having 20/20 vision, the idea of putting something foreign onto my eyeballs made me nervous. Also, I began wrestling with the notion that I must be exceedingly vain to consider spending a lot of money on such frivolous adornment. Still, I kept my appointment.

The American Vision Center is bright, airy, and very busy. Their optometrist kept me waiting for only a few minutes and immediately put me at ease with innocuous jokes. A painless, five-minute eye examination ensued. I then tried on the lenses, each color in succession. They were awkward to put in and take out, but they were not uncomfortable to wear.

When I peered at myself in the mirror, I was amazed at my image. My newly-colored eyes, though not unnatural looking, dominated my face, and I didn't feel as though I was looking at the real "me." It was as if part of me had changed, although not irrevocably. I paid the $35 consultation fee and left with my own familiar eyes.

I have a new appreciation of my orbs. Not only are they healthy, but I am beginning to like the color. I now think of them as "chocolate" instead of generic brown.

Last week, though, I read that the Durasoft contacts have been so successful, they are coming out wih three additional colors. Maybe they will have violet lenses, and I could look like a young Elizabeth Taylor ...

Whiskeys prepare for show

By DANA SHAFIE

Who are these bald students you see walking around campus? Are they rock musicians, Zen Buddhists, or perhaps technicians at the Three-Mile Island nuclear power plant?

The answer is that these couple dozen men are members of the Whiskey Company, Villanova's elite drill team. The team is sponsored by the Villanova Naval Reserve Officer Training Corps, an organization dedicated towards producing both Naval and Marine Corp unrestricted line officers.

Whiskey Company is comprised of mostly Marine Corps officer candidates, with a few dedicated Naval officer candidates. Both sport the distinctive Marine Corps "high and tight" haircut.

The training and discipline necessary to become a Whiskey Company member is intense. Practice begins every weekday morning at 6:30 a.m. and lasts until 8 a.m. It takes a year of training before one actually becomes a Whiskey Company team member. During this initiation process, the candidates are taught how to do basic drill with a rifle.

children from the Don Guanella School of Boys." These children, who are mentally handicapped, are brought to campus and given $4 worth of tickets to spend on games and food.

Some of the booths included Lamba Tau Delta's football toss, Zeta Psi's softball throw and the can knock-down and St. Monica and Stanford's concession stand.

Lamba Tau Delta's prizes included crayons, coloring books and other items geared toward children. Eric DeGrabe, a sophomore working at the booth said, "It is a great atmosphere, good bands, a good all-around time. And it's a great excuse to blow off classes."

A Zeta Psi brother exclaimed, "We're establishing the fundamental love and affection provided by the Villanova community in attempting to show brotherhood for all mankind."

Another Zete, John Holbert, said, "It's a great day and should always be. Plus all the proceeds go for hunger relief."

At the balloon tag booth, freshman Andy Dorley was pleased. "It's going great! I'm glad I can help the community. The weather's great and the music and food add to the festive atmosphere. Sales are just fantastic; I feel this will really be successful," he said.

Terise Fusco, a sophomore, added, "It's great fun for the students and it really, really helps the people who need it."

Diane Hopkins, a vendor at the St. Monica's stand felt, "It took a lot of time to get the U-Haul, the supplies and the equipment, but it was worth it."

Overall, Balloon Day seemed a success and Datto summed it up by saying, "It gives V.U. students a great opportunity to come out, have a good time and raise money for a good cause."

Members of new society are announced

By STACEY WILKINS

The 1986-87 academic year is the first year of existence for the Chi Alpha Honor Society, which will be the official academic honorary society for communication arts majors at Villanova.

Chi Alpha is open to second semester sophomores, juniors and senior communication arts majors who have an overall 3.5 grade point average. Out of 214 majors, 19 qualified for admission.

The members were inducted at a ceremony where Chi Alpha faculty moderator James Gross gave a congratulatory address. Department chairman Warren Richardson presented the certificates of membership to the inductees.

The first recipients of the Chi Alpha merits were Janine Andrews, Cynthia Bosnian (induction chairman), Maria Breck, Mary Charest, Linda Cilea, Amy Coval (treasurer), Maureen Doherty, Daniel Gilbert, Adriane Glodek, Katherine Krackeler (secretary), Nancy McGrath, Lori McKenna (constitution chairman), April Peterson, Jolene Rubbo, Raymond Saputelli, Susan Tolve (vice president), Kara Vlahos and Stacey Wilkins (president and communication arts transfer advisor).

Chi Alpha is unique because, unlike other honor societies on campus who have an affiliation with a national organization, Chi Alpha does not. Because there is not a national-communication arts honorary society in existence, Villanova originated its own in response to a growing number of communication arts majors at Villanova.

Quest offers second chance

By MARIA KARR

VisionQuest, a 14-year-old, national organization, with programs in Arizona and Pennsylvania, will open new programs in June in New Jersey and next April in California. The privately owned, for-profit corporation has 650 full-time dedicated and caring staff members who provide guidance and support to troubled youths and their families throughout all of the program's phases.

VisionQuest contracts with various governmental agencies in order to provide its specialized services. It provides successful programs for troubled teenagers ranging in age from 10 to 21 years old.

Most youths come from broken or fragmented homes and are usually placed in VisionQuest's program by the courts. Youths who have not been able to develop or maintain satisfactory relationships with family or friends and have not been able to adapt to the school environment find help through the program. There are currently 700 boys and girls in the program of which 85 percent are boys.

VisionQuest offers a variety of high-adventure, outdoor programs to these youths. These programs include wilderness camps, wagon trails, sailing and biking expeditions, group homes, at-home treatment and learning centers. Youths are in the program for a minimum of one year.

The various programs allow the adolescents to live in a tepee village with their counselors. They learn to develop a sense of responsibility, self-discipline and a respect for authority.

According to Jim Yester, VisionQuest's regional personnel director, "We touch kids four ways in our program: physically, mentally, spiritually and emotionally.

"Physically, kids need to be touched in a positive way. We also want them to get bigger and stronger physically through our program — this helps build up their self-confidence," Yester said.

"The emotional way we touch kids focuses on the child being in touch with his heart. We want them to utilize the energy in their hearts in a positive, not a destructive, way," said Yester.

The spiritual part is a little more complicated. The name VisionQuest comes from the experience the American Indians used to express the rite of passage from childhood to adulthood.

"The counselors and youths get in a circle, as the Indians did, and then a youth is motioned to come to the center of the circle. The youth is sent on a mission to find something and to bring it back to the circle, and if the task is completed, the youth is an adult, if not, he's still a child," said Yester.

VisionQuest offers full-time career positions for adventurous people of all backgrounds, who can present a positive role model for youths. In addition, they also hire nurses and secondary and special education teachers.

"We look for commitment in the people we interview," said Yester. "When you deal with troubled kids it's a day-in and day-out commitment."

The majority of incoming staff are in their 20's and is almost equally divided between men and women. Entry level salaries are $925 per month, plus board.

Staff members work five days and have two days off. Typical employee benefits such as health insurance, paid holiday and vacation days, sick leave and pension plan are offered.

There is a three-day orientation program for new staff members, plus a required 40 hours of formal learning. Present staff members must also take this 40 hours of formal training once each year.

So, if you are a person with a lot of energy and expertise, and if you want to make a career out of child care, the number to call is (215) 524-0330. VisionQuest offers a bright and promising future to staff members and to youths as well.

Vision Quest provides some youngsters the opportunity to see the great outdoors.

Faculty-student exchange

By DEBBIE GROSS

A newly developed program sponsored by Alumni Hall was held in late March. Entitled the Faculty-Fellow Program, its main purpose is to increase the interaction between students and faculty by bringing them together in a setting outside the constraints of the classroom.

In this case, a luncheon was planned at which both Alumni residents and the faculty members shared various social and intellectual experiences.

The idea was developed by Jeaneen Riely, head resident assistant of Alumni Hall, and was planned with the aid of Luci Jankowski, president of Alumni Hall, Jennifer Chantz, west area coordinator, and the Alumni Hall house council.

Residents of Alumni were asked to choose specific faculty members whom they wished to attend. "The faculty members chosen were quite diverse," stated Jankowski, "and it is this diversity which leads to the intellectual growth of the residents."

The response rate was good and many faculty members expressed an interest in seeing this program flourish, commented Jankowski. Her hope for the future is that it will spread to other residence halls on campus, and that the program will sponsor various topics of interest to both faculty and students.

As Chantz stated, "This program is a pilot program. We are testing the ground to see how the Villanova community responds to it."

The coordinators of this program were not the only ones glad to see it established. Dan Regan, director of the Peace and Justice department, who attended the luncheon, said, "It was a very positive experience, and I believe that all residence halls on campus should have it."

Dr. Helen Lafferty, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, who also attended, stated, "It was an excellent idea, and the possibilities for future programming efforts are much better because of efforts such as this."

Faculty members were not the only ones impressed by this program. Michele Dahan, a senior Alumni resident, thought that, "It was a great program and I hope to see it continue."

The next Faculty-Fellow program will be held on April 28 at 4:00 p.m. in Alumni Hall. This program will include a coffee hour and a discussion of the topic of "Academic Excellence at Villanova."

Alumni Hall was the first to host this faculty-student gathering.

Cultural Film Series

By NANCY J. GROGAN

One of the foremost writers on movie director John Ford will speak at Villanova on April 27. Tag Gallagher will lead a discussion entitled "A Quest For Self-Identity: John Ford's 'The Searchers' " following the Cultural Film Series showing of Ford's western drama "The Searchers."

Gallagher, who has done extensive research on Ford, recently published a book entitled John Ford: The Man and His Work, which is a blend of biography, criticism and interpretations of the director's major works. The book has been called "...the best book so far on Ford in any language." Here is an exerpt:

"...attitudes in 'The Searchers' are externalized and theatricalized. The movie itself, with each bright Technicolor frame organized into painterly, definitive portraiture, expressionistically composed and lighted, and with the yearning tune 'Laurina,' is not realistic but symbol of reality; everything is saturated in myth, everything is a commentary upon myth."

The discussion, led by Gallagher, will be in the Wayne Room of the Connelly Center following Monday's 7 p.m. showing of 'The Searchers'. Tickets for the film are $1.50 for students and senior citizens and $3 for the general public. The discussion is free.

Island's hopes raised by students

By MICHELLE CICCOLO

Although it has been over a month since Spring Break, my experience this April is one that will forever remain vivid in my mind. Sponsored by Campus Ministry, 13 people, all affiliated with Villanova University, traveled down to Haiti to witness first-hand, the poverty of Port au Prince, the capital city.

The experience of visiting a Third World country is in many ways difficult to communicate. How does one understand and explain the numerous problems the Haitian people face?

Most of those who live in the slums of Port au Prince have no source of income, no food and no electricity. Since there is no plumbing, people must buy their own water with money they often do not have.

Sickness and disease are constant threats the Haitians face and the scarce medical care is often too expensive for the average citizen. Disease and starvation limit people's life expectancies to approximately 40 years.

The primary purpose of our trip was to observe and learn about these problems. However, for several days we also assisted in a very basic medical clinic run by a retired dentist. There, in a closet-sized, cement hut, we were able to interact directly with the people.

Handing out clothing and baby food, bandaging wounds and administering aspirin were the only things we could do to ease their suffering. Frustrated, we asked ourselves, what more could be done for the Haitian people.

Education seems to be the

This drill involves marching in formation and performing rifle maneuvers both of which stress precision and strict adherence to military standards. All infantry soldiers become familiar with this type of drill.

Only after this drill is mastered are the candidates taught the "Trick" rifle drill, which literally has to be seen to be believed.

"Trick" is usually performed in squads or platoons. The "Trick" platoon is composed of 16 men who march out onto the drill deck spinning and throwing the heavy 10-pound rifle to each other in very close quarters. If the timing is off or precision is lacking, then injuries can occur.

The individual driller must be attentive at all times. Often he must concentrate on throwing his rifle perfectly so it arrives at a certain place in the air at exactly the right time, anticipate the next maneuver and concentrate on the rifle that has been thrown to him.

In some throws, such as the infamous "Suicide Throw," the drillers have their backs to each other when the throws are made. The rifle must be thrown over the shoulder with sufficient force to travel the couple meters, but must also have proper trajectory, spin rate and velocity, so that when the catchers turn around to face each other a split second later, the rifles are in a position to be caught. This manuever, along with many others, some of which are not even attempted by other teams, are what makes Whiskey Company one of the nation's finest drill teams.

With several national championships in the past, many other teams, such as the United States Naval Academy, line up to go toe-to-toe with Villanova's own. Because of this, Villanova annually sponsors the largest drill meet of its kind on the East Coast. This year, on February 21, the meet was held at Valley Forge Military Academy, where the movie "Taps" was filmed.

As usual, Whiskey Company dominated the competition. Although their scores in all areas of Basic and "Trick" drill were much higher than the next highest team, they only accepted trophies for the Individual Drill Routine, since it was their own drill meet. The individual trophies were won by Midshipman Second Class O'Connel for first place, and Midshipman Fourth Class Cullen for fourth place.

Tomorrow at 10 a.m. Whiskey Company will be performing a "Trick" routine for the N.R.O.T.C. Spring Review at Villanova Stadium. All are welcome to attend.

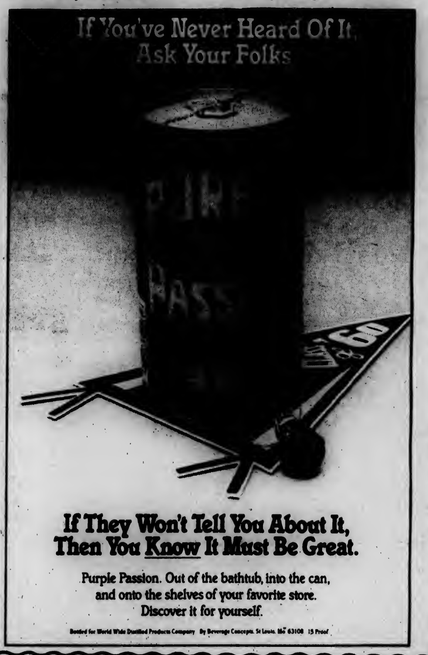
greatest long-term plan for improving the desperate living conditions. Teaching the children to read and write, and training them for possible employment, will give the people the ability to freely take care of themselves in the future. Knowledge strengthens the society, and hopefully, will enable the citizens to control their own government, which could then work to solve their problems.

Father Lawrence Bohnan, a Salesian priest, has dedicated the past 28 years of his life to establishing a school system in Boston, one of the worst slums in Port au Prince. His system runs entirely on donations, and through outside support, he has been able to build over 140 schools, educating over 15,000 children. In a country of 80 percent illiteracy, he is doing visible work to improve the situation.

The efforts of last year's Balloon Day as well as two past Hunger Awareness weeks allowed Villanova to raise $17,000 to build another of Fr. Bohnan's schools. The school we funded has just recently been dedicated and is one of the few two-story schools in Port au Prince. Its first floor specifically accomodates handicapped children.

All of the teachers at Fr. Bohnan's schools were previous students from his system, and are now employed and committed to passing on their knowledge.



Despite the great poverty from which the people suffer, the Haitians are extremely warm, friendly and cooperative. They have so little, yet they are happier than we are in many ways. Their lives are simple, and they are content merely to survive.

Tony Alfano: Former coach interviewed

By AMY TORACK

Behind the smiling face of Tony Alfano, a librarian at Villanova's Falvey Library, is a long history of basketball, marked by an astounding number of victories. Little does the Villanova community know that besides Rollie, there is yet another legendary basketball coach on the campus, one who achieved neither fame nor nationwide attention, but all the same, one who has achieved much.

Alfano, now 75 years old, lives in nearby Havertown. His past coaching experience consists of 23 years at Camden High School, a school renowned for its winning tradition. Beginning in 1947 and continuing through 1970, Alfano coached the Panthers to an astounding 414-121 record.

Along with this boastful record came 10 sectional championships and two Group Four state titles. The two state championship teams achieved noteworthy attention through their string of 51 consecutive victories over a three-year period. The success of the team and of Alfano was quite amazing.

After spending five years as a guidance counselor at the high school, Alfano left in 1975. However, this move was made without any ill feeling whatsoever toward the school, team or administration. Respectfully, he said, "I only have very fond memories. I coached some great athletes and worked with some fine people through the years, and that's all I need to remember."

Being from Philadelphia himself, Alfano spent three years on the Temple University basketball team. His winnings as a coach were nothing new to him, since he played on the 1938 Temple team that eventually went on to win the NIT championship by defeating Colorado.

Most would imagine that Alfano gained his greatest fulfillment through seeing his teams win more and more games and gain title after title. However, such is not the case.

In his own words, Alfano exhibits the true spirit of coaching when he says, "If I was able to do anything to help a kid grow up and maybe go to college, then it made coaching all worthwhile. And for me, it was all worthwhile."

"HOW I MAKE $18,000 FOR COLLEGE BY WORKING WEEKENDS."

When my friends and I graduated from high school, we all took part-time jobs to pay for college.

They ended up in car washes and hamburger joints, putting in long hours for little pay.

Not me. My job takes just one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Yet, I'm earning $18,000 for college.

Because I joined my local Army National Guard.

They're the people who help our state during emergencies like hurricanes and floods. They're also an important part of our country's military defense.

So, since I'm helping them do such an important job, they're helping me make it through school.

As soon as I finished Advanced Training, the Guard gave me a cash bonus of $2,000. Then, under the New GI Bill, I'm getting another $5,000 for tuition and books.

Not to mention my monthly Army Guard paychecks. They'll add up to more than $11,000 over the six years I'm in the Guard.

And if I take out a college loan, the Guard will help me pay it back—up to $1,500 a year, plus interest.

It all adds up to $18,000—or more—for college for just a little of my time. And that's a heck of a better deal than any car wash will give you.

THE GUARD CAN HELP PUT YOU THROUGH COLLEGE, TOO. SEE YOUR LOCAL RECRUITER FOR DETAILS, CALL TOLL-FREE 800-638-7600,* OR MAIL THIS COUPON.

Find out 'What the Butler Saw'

By MEGAN GUIDERA

Presently the name Joe Orton is becoming an increasingly popular sight along the Main Line. If you have not read John Lahr's recent biographical account of Orton's life, Prick Up Your Ears, perhaps you saw Orton's farcical comedy "What the Butler Saw" at Villanova's Vasey Theatre in February, or viewed the presentation of "What the Butler Saw" at The People's Light and Theatre Company in Malvern.

Either way, a great deal of attention is being paid to the deceased playwright's last work, "What the Butler Saw," which is playing at The People's Light and Theatre Company until April 26.

Orton was a British playwright whose brilliant career spanned only four years. Shortly after he wrote "What the Butler Saw" in 1967, Orton was murdered by his lover, Kenneth Halliwell, who later took his own life.

Some critics feel that Orton's aggressive and homosexual life style attributed to the elements of satire against society in Orton's work.

"What the Butler Saw" is a farce that satirizes institutions in society, especially the institution of psychiatry.

In "What the Butler Saw" a sexually repressed psychiatrist's (Dr. Prentice) attempts to seduce his prospective secretary turn into sheer madness when Prentice's nymphomaniac wife and a government inspector show up at his high society psychiatry office. "What the Butler Saw" is filled with a great deal of confusion, slapstick and sexual innuendoes that leave the audience in stitches.

Orton's farce is the first mainstage production this season at The People's Light and Theatre Company. Directed by Abigail Adams, the play is smooth and sophisticated. Taking place within one day, the script requires only one set, Prentice's elegant office. The office, well stocked with alcohol, displays psychiatric confusion with its raked props and large black and white checked floor.

Although small, the cast is powerful and impressive. Jarlath Conroy is excellent as Dr. Rance, the government inspector who certifies everyone in the play insane at least once. Conroy's British accent and facial expressions are scene stealers.

Michael K. Morgan is outstandingly funny as Nicolas Beckett, the bellhop who impersonates a woman. Morgan is hysterical during his female impersonation; his mannerisms and facial expressions prove superb.

Natsuko Ohama's portrayal of Mrs. Prentice is a near miss. Mrs. Prentice appears too cold for the part of a nymphomaniac. Ohama's portrayal of Mrs. Prentice was much more sophisticated than the character warrants.

John Jiler as Dr. Prentice and Stephen Novelli as Sergeant Match are funny and extremely well fit to their parts.

The costuming, despite a lack of it, is well done. Almost everyone in the play at one time or another stands on stage in his or her underwear, thus adding to the comic confusion of the play.

Orton's recent notoriety is well-founded. His last play, "What the Butler Saw," is a ridiculously funny show. The People's Light and Theatre Company does an excellent job in its portrayal of Orton's farce. "What the Butler Saw" is well-worth viewing both for its humor and Orton's social statement on the absurdity of institutions.

The play runs until Sunday and will be followed by David Mamet's "American Buffalo," which opens May 13.

Billy flashes a Whiplash Smile at the Spectrum

By PHIL KOUSOUBRIS

Anyone who has had enough of the Dead or Bon Jovi showed up at the Spectrum on April 11 for a hard-hitting whiplash smile from London's own Billy Idol. The Cult, after a major U.S. tour, revved the crowd up with a pounding of their tracks from the albums Love and Dream Time. After Ian Astbury of the Cult did his best to impress the crowd with his contortions, you could sense the crowd's anticipation for the "miracle boy" while Simple Minds played as background music.

This reviewer predicted that "Don't Need a Gun" would be the opener, but Idol surprised everyone by opening with a "better-than-studio" version of "Dancing with Myself." Continuing with the show, Idol rammed into newer material from Whiplash Smile, which the crowd devoured.

Notable amongst punkers, Idol and Steve Stevens have stayed together since 1978, putting together a more mature, yet still aggressive show. Stevens' guitar work was simply incredible. If you thought Idol's band was a studio band, forget it. The sound was flawless, unlike Idol's '84 tour.

Idol and Stevens kept a sense of personal contact with the crowd throughout the flying undergarments, screaming and even attacking fans. While Idol would scamper from speaker tower to speaker tower, Stevens would risk life and limb — quite literally — to play right to the front row fans, several of whom caught perspealized guitar picks! (I must mention here that my co-reviewers Steph and Nancy guard these picks with their lives!)

"Philadelphia ... I feel like rockin' ... what you want to do, some slow rock-and-roll." Idol leads the crowd into an extended "Flesh for Fantasy," contrasting the next track with "Kiss Me Deadly," a Stevens-Idol spotlighted song from Idol's old punk band Generation X. It seemed Idol could do no wrong that night, with his rhythm guitar lashing out "White Wedding" to a crowd that was out of control.

The background props, a pair of female legs bent into a promiscuous position, highlighted a sexually-charged, romantic side of Billy Idol to which everyone could relate. Including his ballads "Sweet-Sixteen" and "Eyes Without a Face." Idol's romantic side pleasantly surprised the crowd with mellifluous electric acoustic guitar work.

As soon as the Idol's leather jacket came off, Stevens, along with bass and drums, led off into a short riff reminiscent of "Top Gun's" theme. This tangent led into "Don't Need a Gun," which does not need an introduction.

Probably Billy's most hip cut of the night — a ripping version of "Mony, Mony" — built into absolute anarchy. People were virtually jumping off the railings! Did things calm down after this? Let us just say that "Blue Highway," played fast and hard, had the effect of causing helpless females to attack Idol onstage.

In the press box, we were all putting bets on when the kids would finally riot and destroy the Spectrum. Soon after this prophetic wagering, Idol appeared with a towel wrapped around his head, cooling him off after rebelliously yelling "More, More, More!" with a full house of half-crazed fans. We wondered, what would his next move be?

The opening notes on the Korg gave it away — "Hot in the City" was heating the Spectrum to boiling. Although Idol played around with the lyrics, no one cared. The fans were worse than piranhas. It was almost like a football game. As soon as a fan would cross the stage "line," huge "defensive" stage gorillas would complete flying tackles. Not just any tackle mind you; you could hear the bones crunch on these!

Finally, Idol and Stevens, who worked like magic throughout the night, gave more than magic to a delirious crowd with a pounding, pumping version of "To Be a Lover." Idol's stage antics had to be seen to be believed, and he knew it! Without a doubt, the finale was more explosive than the beginning.

On "interviewing" several post-concert survivors, comments ranging from "bitchin," to "legs," to "sexual" confirmed our experience. "Billy Idol is a god" stated one ecstatic groupie. The consensus was a well-planned song line-up and a climax that built up to the final "Good-night!"

Billy Idol returned to The Spectrum on April 11. The Cult opened for the heated Idol concert.

Seidelman's newest movie is not quite right

By ELANA STARR

"Making Mr. Right"
directed by Susan Seidelman

Susan Seidelman is arguably the best-known female film director in America today, having garnered a great deal of attention with her directorial debut, "Smithereens," followed by the wildly successful "Desperately Seeking Susan," starring Madonna in her "Boy Toy" incarnation. However, Seidelman's third picture, the just-released "Making Mr. Right," is a disappointment.

The film which centers on a love story between a savvy young woman and an android destined for space travel, ultimately fails because it tries to be funny, but its weak screenplay proffers few comedic moments. As in "Desperately Seeking Susan," many of the jokes revolve around a case of mistaken identity — the robot being mistaken for his look-alike creator and vice versa — but here they do a belly flop.

Also like "Susan," "Making Mr. Right" satirizes the middle-class, with the most tasteless wedding scene this side of "Goodbye, Columbus" and a daytime soap opera called "New Jersey" ("it's not a state, but a state of mind"), but with little success. However, there are interesting aspects to the movie, particularly the performances, the musical score, and the visual imagery.

John Malkovich, who has won accolades for his dramatic roles on stage and screen ("Places in the Heart," "Eleni") is engaging here in his first comedic role, as both scientist Jeff Peters and his high-tech robot Ulysses. He manages to imbue each of them with distinct personalities and mannerisms.

The only time Malkovich's character falters is when, as Ulysses, he acts in a stilted, silly fashion — spilling his food, bumping into walls, etc. Wonderful pantomimists, such as Charlie Chaplin, could regale audiences for hours with such horseplay; less physical actors such as Malkovich cannot sustain such action for even a few moments.

Performance artist Ann Magnuson, a veteran of New York's downtown scene, had a small role in "Desperately Seeking Susan" as a cigarette girl. Magnuson is terrific in her starring role here as Frankie Stone, a Miami-area public relations expert hired to spiff up the image of the Chemtech Company's android.

While not unattractive, Frankie is no Vanna White; thus, she represents millions of smart, driven, working women in the real world who are searching for Mr. Right and grappling with whether "any man is better than no man."

Of the supporting actresses, Glenne Headley (Malkovich's real-life spouse) is interesting as Frankie's man-hungry friend Trish, who speaks in a girlish, Jackie Kennedyesque voice and bats her eye lashes at anything in pants. And Susan Berman, the star of "Smithereens," has an effective cameo in "Making Mr. Right" as Frankie's punky sister, whose hair is prematurely turquoise.

Frankie's character is always fun to watch because she wears such startling, witty clothing; her outfits look like throwbacks to the '60s, when hard edged geometrically-shaped designs from the designer Courreges were the rage. Magnuson wears them with an unerring sense of personal style. Her apartment is visually appealing as well; it's neo-Deco a la "Miami Vice" punctuated with humor, such as judiciously placed plastic flamingos.

The movie's soundtrack is not only tuneful but commentative. Rock-and-roll classics such as "Too Many Fish in the Sea," "This Magic Moment" and "Happy Together" pointedly play up the film's jaundiced view of the current state of male/female relationships.

Alas, the film's fine performances, stylish appointments and zingy soundtrack cannot compensate for the lackluster script. It's a shame, because Seidelman addresses some timely issues in "Making Mr. Right" that could have attracted a wide audience.

Galileo often contemplated whether Löwenbräu's formula for the best way in the world to brew beer was also the best way in the universe.

In a little known footnote to Galileo's busy career as inventor, physicist, and astronomer, it was also discovered that he was an expert on beer and its relationships to the universe. "The Madman," as Galileo was known to friends, scientifically concluded during in-depth taste tests that Löwenbräu's Bavarian supervision, plus the richness of Bavarian hops brewed fresh and smooth, was truly the best way in the world to brew beer.

Tragically, Galileo's findings were destroyed in what is now known as the "Big Löwenbräu Bash of 1593" at which his soon-to-be-former girlfriend, Sophie, spilled beer all over the records. Luckily, by conducting your own taste tests with Löwenbräu today, you'll realize what Galileo did hundreds of years ago... it's the best way in the world to brew beer.

This World Calls for Löwenbräu.

ACTIONSOFT C64/128

There are only a couple of really good submarine games that show that some kind of effort was put into them. Now Up Periscope! enters into the market as the best submarine simulation package. Bringing together the 3D graphic technology of subLOGIC and the expertise of ActionSoft in the realm of the military aspects of the game, Up Periscope! has all that submarine enthusiasts need.

Complete with map, keyboard/joystick reference card, operations manual and a 121-page reference book entitled "Submarine Action In The South Pacific," Up Periscope! is a complete study of the history of submarines in recent years and the abilities that they possess. You can effectively simulate many actual historical situations and undergo maneuvers similar to the real ones.

The main option menu gives you many choices among scenarios and game play. You can choose one of five scenarios: Refresher Training at New London, Historical Situation, Pacific Patrol, Peacetime Patrol and Transit. Along with these scenario choices, the player of Up Periscope! has the ability to tailor the game to his liking with features such as: torpedo type, sub reliability, hull design, visibility, enemy expertise, etc. The point here is that never before was the player able to bring the game so closely to a desired product.

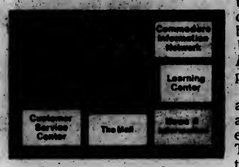
The materials at your disposal on the sub are very realistic. You have command of radar, periscope, a torpedo data computer and charts of the ocean. With all of this at your fingertips and the great graphics to boot, it is no wonder that ActionSoft is taking such large steps in marketing Up Periscope!

You have to plan your strategy carefully in Up Periscope! You have potential enemies such as freighters, tankers, troop ships, destroyers and battleships. The most difficult part of the game is the navigation. Although made as easy as possible for computer simulation, navigation is essentially hard to perform. ActionSoft did not try to hid this, but instead went for the throat in the realism department. In either case, Up Periscope! is an interesting game that allows you to learn a lot as you play.

DATAQUICK 64 •••• PRISM SOFTWARE C64/128

If you have ever wanted to have your own computer bulletin board system (BBS) for the posting of messages and transfer of programs via phone lines and modems, Dataquick 64 is the program that I have found to be one of the best. Complete with programs to build your own custom BBS, Dataquick 64 opens up to you the area of computer telecommunications.

Dataquick 64 has a lot of features that make it an excellent choice in BBS's. First of all, like any decent BBS, it has a large message capability, with eight message bases at 10-25 messages per base. It keeps track of the number of messages for the system operator (sysop). Dataquick 64 supports many different modems too. So do not worry about compatibility of the program to your system.



Dataquick 64 lets you control access of information and privileges of users very efficiently with levels of passwords. There is a polling function for voting, as well as mail and storyboard options for attractiveness to potential members of your BBS.

Also included with Dataquick 64 is Lightning Exchange, a BBS that eliminates messages and concentrates on program downloading and uploading. Using this program gets rid of unwanted BBS options and makes multi-file transfers very fast.

I would suggest the use of Dataquick 64 in the middle of the night, since that is when most BBS's are running. Also, if possible, get a dedicated line for your BBS. The phone company gives you a break on your bill because of the use for the line as a dedicated BBS phone number. Dataquick 64, at any rate, should be added to the computer hobbyist's collection.

QUANTUMLINK TELECOMMUNICATIONS STARTER KIT •••• FIREBIRD C64/128

Having just explained how to start your own BBS, I now turn to the best BBS of them all for Commodore computer owners. QuantumLink has been the leader in BBS's for Commodore since its inception and it can only get better. Through a joint agreement between QuantumLink and Firebird Software, you can sample all that this incredible showcase of Commodore users has to offer.

The QuantumLink Starter Kit comes with an hour of free on-line time to QuantumLink that requires no credit card or checking account for the initial connection. You can choose from one of the eight areas of QuantumLink to explore at any given time. They are: Commodore Software Showcase, Just For Fun, Customer Service Center, People Connection, The Mail, Commodore Information Network, Learning Center and News and Information.

Just from the list above, there must be many possibilities that can pop into your head. Some of the things you can do are: order albums and software, read the encyclopedia, talk to people live, send electronic mail, download public domain software, find all kinds of news and get exclusive Commodore information. These are just some more of the reasons that you should pick up a QuantumLink Starter Kit and begin your journey into telecommunications soon.

DECEPTOR ACCOLADE C64/128 ••••½

A new line from Accolade Software is the Avantage line, which derives its name from the low prices of the packages. I have the privilege to be able to review the first three in the series here.

The first, Deceptor, is an interesting game, with excellent animation and colors used to enhance the strong game play associated with the game. You are the Deceptor, able to change from land vehicle to air vehicle to humanoid. Your goal is to make it through the different levels, avoiding all of the creatures that stock the corridors of your journey.

You start out as a land vehicle and transform yourself into an air vehicle whenever you must cross gaps in the ground or fly. The ultimate challenge is when you meet the guardians of the gates. You have to kill them to enter the next level. The guardians come in the forms of Replicoids, Ion Vipers, Flying Sadytes and Plasmadons.

Although I would expect a simplistic, boring game because the Avantage Series is a series of lower-priced software, Deceptor is refreshing in a gaming world downtrodden by shoot-em-ups and car chases.

SPY VS. SPY VOLUME I & II ••••• ACCOLADE C64/128, AP, AT

Originally, the Spy vs. Spy cartoons were started by a man named Antonio Prohias as a means of poking fun at the people who persecuted him for his work. Now, the two bumbling, sinister spies from the pages of MAD magazine are immortalized in their two computer adventures on one single disk. Accolade has brought together Spy vs. Spy Volume I and Spy vs. Spy II: The Island Caper on the same disk and put it in the Avantage Series.

In Spy vs. Spy Volume I, you race against the other spy in obtaining all of the necessary parts and then exit on an airplane with the plans. The unique part of the game is that you see the other on the screen all the time, since the screen is a split view for both spies. Also, you can set booby traps for the other spy with the Trapulator. Still, Spy vs. Spy Volume I remains a classic.

Spy vs. Spy II takes place on an island. It is pretty much the same in that you must collect parts of a map, piece them together and take off from the island. The difference lies in the traps that you can set and the much better color graphics. Either volume is just as fun.

DESERT FOX •••• ACCOLADE C64/128

Desert Fox is the latest in the set of games from Accolade called the Avantage Series. In it, you control first a tank, then a plane and shoot at opposing enemies. In the tank mode, there is much greater ease of control. You do not have to worry about how the vehicle is facing, as in a plane. You simply go forward and shoot. Victories are acknowledged with loud explosions.

Realistic voice simulation accompanies enemy radio transmissions as you fly along in your plane, looking for other planes to shoot down. Although the number of enemies hit is placed on the screen, you should try to remember what exactly you have hit. In both modes, players meet startlingly realistic sounds and situations, so stay alert.

This trio of Avantage products is a nice addition to the gaming world for those who cannot afford the high prices of good software. With Avantage games, you get the good programs at low prices. In either case, this trio of titles lives up to the Accolade name of excellence in software design.

"The Searchers"

Michael J. Fox stars in another 'success'

By JOANNE LOFTUS

Michael J. Fox has been very busy lately. In February, "Light of Day" starring Fox and Joan Jett was released. A few weeks ago, "Secret of My Success" came out. Presently, he is working on two more movies that are scheduled for release in the near future.

In contrast to the serious, thought-provoking subject matter of "Light of Day," "Secret of My Success" is a shallow, mindless comedy. A very funny one, but shallow nonetheless. Fox plays a character who closely resembles the one he portrays on "Family Ties." Brentley Foster, Fox's character in "Success," is quite similar to the business-minded Alex P. Keaton.

When we first meet him, Foster is a recent college graduate who lives on a farm in Kansas with his parents. His lifelong dream is to move to New York City and work in a high-rise. After receiving a job offer there, he leaves Kansas with the promise to his worried folks that the next time he comes back he will fly in a privately owned airplane.

Upon his arrival in NYC, Foster reports to work at his new job only to discover that the firm unexpectedly went bankrupt, and has to close down. So there he is, in the middle of New York, with no job and no friends.

He desperately attempts to find a new job, but gets rejected at every turn. Finally, he decides to contact his long-lost uncle as a last resort.

"Uncle" Howard Prescott (played by Richard Jordan) is an egotistical, spoiled, middle-aged man. He is the president of a prosperous corporation, and he has no clue as to who Foster is. Eventually, Foster convinces Prescott that he is, in fact, a relative and that he seriously needs a job.

Being the generous sort of man that Prescott is, he gives Foster a lowly position in the mailroom, which offers virtually no progression whatsoever. Foster accepts.

One day Foster meets up with one of the executives' beautiful wives by pure accident. Vera (Margaret Whitton), lonely and depressed, takes an instant liking to him. She seduces a very reluctant Foster in a hysterical swimming pool scene.

The next thing you know, her husband pulls in the driveway. A panicky and exasperated Foster escapes in the nick of time. However, prior to his escape, he glimpses Vera's husband. Much to his surprise, he discovers that Vera is really his aunt, who is unhappily married to Prescott.

Meanwhile, back at his job, Foster learns as much as possible about the corporation and its operations. Then, he spots her — a beautiful blond executive, Christy Wills (portrayed by Fox's real-life girlfriend, Helen Slater). She will have nothing to do with him.

In his aspirations to hold a better position and to get to know Wills better, Foster devises a fantastic, far-fetched scheme. He poses as a newly-hired executive, Carlton Whittfield, who just moved into a recently vacated office.

Each day, Foster comes into work and performs his duties in the mailroom. Upon completion of them, he dons a three-piece suit wherever it is convenient (on the elevator or in the middle of his office) and goes to work in his office, wheeling and dealing.

He finally gets to talk to his dream girl, a stuffy Harvard graduate who is a workaholic. She does not give him the time of day. Also, she is opposed to everything that Whittfield (Foster) has to say at the executive meetings.

Unbeknownst to Foster and the other employees is the fact that Wills is having an affair with Prescott. He orders her to spy on Whittfield.

While obeying Prescott's orders, Wills and Whittfield become friends. In fact, Wills smiles for the first time in the movie, when they are together. They begin to fall in love.

As if the plot could not be more complicated, Vera is still after Foster. Prescott actually approves of Foster as Vera's love-toy.

Prescott decides to have a weekend party at his estate for all of the executive employees, and he invites Foster as a diversion for Vera. The climactic, zany scenes occur during this fun-filled weekend.

The plot is complicated and somewhat predictable, but it does provide for many laughs — especially the scenes at the Prescott estate. A little far-fetched and improbable maybe, but it is an enjoyable movie.

Herb Ross directed this Universal film. He did a pretty good job, considering "Success" has been number one since it came out where gross profits are concerned. However, that is all that it is: a crowd-pleaser, devoid of any real intelligence. The idea is unlikely, and at times stupid, but it keeps you entertained from one complex scene to the next.

The music in "Success" is quite fitting. Most of it was composed by David Foster. Each song fit the tempo and theme of each scene, especially the music playing during the seduction scene between Vera and Foster.

QUESTION #2.

HOW CAN THE BUDGET-CONSCIOUS COLLEGE STUDENT SAVE MONEY?

a) Save over 50% off AT&T's weekday rates on out-of-state calls during nights and weekends.

b) Don't buy textbooks when "Monarch Notes" will do just fine.

c) Save 38% off AT&T's weekday rate on out-of-state calls during evenings.

d) Count on AT&T for exceptional value and high quality service.

e) Hang around with the richest kids in school; let them pick up the tab whenever possible.

If you're like most college students in the western hemisphere, you try to make your money go a long way. That's why you should know that AT&T Long Distance Service is the right choice for you. AT&T offers so many terrific values. For example, you can save over 50% off AT&T's day rate on calls during weekends until 5 pm Sunday, and from 11 pm to 8 am, Sunday through Friday.

Call between 5 pm and 11 pm, Sunday through Friday, and you'll save 38% off our day rate.

Ever dial a wrong number? AT&T gives you immediate credit if you do. And of course, you can count on AT&T for clear long distance connections any place you call.

To find out more about how AT&T can help save you money, give us a call. With a little luck, you won't have to hang around with the rich kids. Call toll-free today, at 1 800 222-0300.

VILLANOVA SAFERIDES

On the Scene . . . Entertainment tidbits

By MARYJO YANNACONE

Welcome back from Easter break. I hope everyone took advantage of the beautiful weekend weather and hit the beaches. Regardless of the weather, though, this is the third week of April, and the last week for publication of the Villanovan this semester. Yes, the staff will be going on hiatus until September. September, doesn't that sound great? Only four short months to go before seeing an original episode of a television series, before beginning to get ready for Christmas, and for you seniors, well, there is no break for you, is there? Good luck out there in the real world, you will need it.

As this is the last edition of this semester's Villanovan, how about a nostalgic look back at the early months of '87 in the entertainment world? January was relatively uneventful, but February brought us the epic mini-series "Amerika," a 14-hour saga about the hypothetical takeover of the United States by the Soviets.

March was clearly more interesting, with birthdays, pregnancies, Award presentations and departures.

The People's Choice Awards opened up the month, with Bill Cosby, his show and his co-stars stealing just about every award. We were shocked and saddened to hear that Shelly Long, the ever-pompous, ever-daffy Diane Chambers on NBC's "Cheers," would be leaving the popular show at the end of the season to pursue a career in film.

Equally shocking were the dual pregnancies of the "Moonlighting" ladies, Cybill Shepherd and Allyce Beasley. Both are due in the early fall, and Cybill is to be blessed with twins. Imagine boyfriend David Oppenheimer's surprise when he was told that not only was he going to be a daddy, not of just one, but two, bouncing babies!

March was a big month for birthdays as well. The James Bond series celebrated its 25th, and will be releasing the latest Bond flick, "The Living Daylights," early this summer, with Timothy Dalton as the newest James to hit the silver screen. Snow White turned 50, and marked the milestone with the sixth release this summer of the classic Disney film, which continues to attract and delight youngsters and adults alike.

Sentimentality flooded the 59th Annual Academy Awards.

The 75th birthday of Paramount Studios was celebrated in grand style, with a barrage of stars showing up at Paramount for a party marking the historic occasion. Young and old alike, from Molly Ringwald to Charlton Heston, came out to honor a Hollywood institution that continues to put out quality viewing for the public.

The 59th Annual Academy Awards closed out the month, with hosts Chevy Chase and Goldie Hawn leading the group of talented but terribly corny actors and actresses who served as presenters. Sentimentality flooded the awards show, with the highest praises being paid to the truly dedicated performers who never seem to get enough exposure. In response to the slighting last year of young genius Stephen Spielberg, the Academy awarded him the Irving J. Thalberg Award, an honor which Spielberg accepted graciously. Woody Allen got his come-uppance as well, with his hit "Hannah and Her Sisters" collecting both the Best Supporting Actor and Actress awards for Michael Caine and Dianne Weist, respectively.

The Best Actor and Actress winners were highly sentimental favorites. Paul Newman may not have earned the award for his role in "The Color of Money," but after eight trips to the Oscars, who really cares? Somewhere along the line he earned it, so what if this character was not exactly award-winning material?

On the other hand, Marlee Matlin did a truly fantastic job in the masterful "Children of a Lesser God." She definitely earned her Oscar, and giving the award to a deaf woman certainly did not hurt the Academy's ego any either. Of course, the shoe-in for Best Picture, "Platoon," picked up its award. There is nothing more to say about that subject; it has been thoroughly exhausted.

April has seen the revival of old favorites. The Hardy Boys are back in the bookstores, and the cast of M*A*S*H, minus one Alan Alda, is peddling IBM computers. Finally, this past Sunday, the old standard "This is Your Life" returned to television, with legendary stars Betty White and Dick Van Dyke being honored. Here is hoping the show continues, because it is highly entertaining.

Well, sad to say it is time to go away for the summer. Fear not, though — I will be back next semester to keep you up-to-date on what is hip and happening in the world of entertainment. For now, have a fantastic summer, and see you in September.

Mr. Goodwrench GM QUALITY SERVICE PARTS

Hellion screams in the night

By CAESAR ETTORE

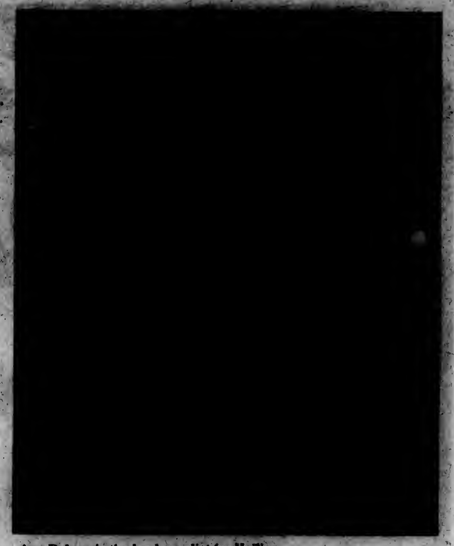
With so many bands that all sound and look alike coming out of the Los Angeles area these days, a combination of originality and talent is hard to find. Upon the release of Hellion's first full-length LP, Screams In The Night, this female fronted, L.A.-based foursome have come up with an album that should put them well ahead of most of their west coast counterparts.

Featuring the ripping vocals of founding member Ann Boleyn and the axe work of soon-to-be guitar hero Chet Thompson, Hellion has come up with a powerful and heavy debut that showcases the band's talent as musicians, as well as gives us strong, appealing songs.

This ten-song vinyl offering opens up with the title track "Screams In The Night," one of the album's stronger, if not strongest track. Beside's Boleyn's strong vocals, the thing that jumps out at the listener immediately is the killer guitar playing of Thompson. The man will definitely be turning a lot of heads with his playing once the album is heard.

The next two tracks, "Bad Attitude" and "Better Off Dead," are both strong, and once again, especially in the former, Thompson adds that little extra to the track with some top-notch, innovative playing.

After "Upside Down Guitar Solo," the side ends in grand style with "The Hand." This track has that mystique to it that is so often found in songs by artists such as Dio and Iron Maiden. "The Hand" works well for Hellion and shows the band's versatility in song writing, especially the lyrics, which depart from the lyrical content of the rest of the album.



Side two keeps the album in high gear with "Explode," with its pounding chorus provided by drummer Greg Pecka and bassist Alex Campbell. This is definitely the heaviest track on the album.

The next two tracks on Screams In The Night are perhaps the only two mediocre ones. "Easy Action" is obviously the most commercial track on the LP, while "Put The Hammer Down" has a good rhythm track during the verse, but becomes a little boring during the chorus. However, these tracks are still good; just average compared to the album's other tracks.

After a brief drum solo, "Stick 'Em," comes the powerful, "Children Of The Night," with its Ozzy Osbourne-type riff. This is a great song and my personal favorite on the LP. This album does not let down on the closing track, however, because "The Tower Of Air" once again shows strong Dio influences, which works well to the band's advantage.

If this album shows one thing, it is the band's versatility, and their ability to turn out songs in a variety of metal styles.

Overall, this album is a fine LP well-worth the $9 investment. It is the type of album that anyone can really appreciate. Great songs, superb musicianship and quality production make this album perhaps the most pleasant surprise of 1987 thus far.

Ann Boleyn is the lead vocalist for Hellion.

Nicolas Cage tries to raise a 'little Arizona'

By KATHRYN QUIGLEY

"Raising Arizona"
directed by Joel and Ethan Coen
Twentieth Century Fox

"Raising Arizona" is a very weird, but also very funny, movie. Nicolas Cage portrays H.I. ("Hi") McDunnough. "Hi" is a thrice-convicted convenience store robber. He falls in love with the policewoman who repeatedly takes his mug shot. Her name is Edwina ("Ed for short") and she is played by actress Holly Hunter.

Hi and Ed marry as soon as Hi is paroled. They live a blissful existence in a trailer park in the desert.

Things start to go sour when Ed finds out that she cannot have children. Ed is desolate; she even quits her job on the police force.

All is not lost, however. Ed and Hi are watching the news one evening and see a report about a couple in their town who have just had quintuplets.

The proud parents of the five babies are Florence and Nathan Arizona. The father is the owner of Unpainted Arizona, a large store that sells unpainted furniture. Nathan Arizona is famous for his commercials for the store; he is sort of the Crazy Eddie of chairs and tables.

The fact that the Arizonas have five babies (plus all that unpainted furniture), while Hi and Ed have none, does not seem very fair to Ed.

Ed convinces Hi to steal a baby for her. Hi climbs a ladder into the quints' nursery and kidnaps little Nathan Junior. Hi picks him because he seems to be a better baby than little Gary, Barry, Larry or Harry.

The Arizona family is a little upset by the kidnapping, even though they do have four left. Hi and Ed are ecstatic to be parents, however. Nathan Junior does not seem to be too fazed by anything.

Ed, Hi and the baby do not remain a nuclear family for long though. Things get complicated when two of Hi's friends from prison show up at his door. They have just tunneled their way out of jail.

What follows is a plot that involves wife-swapping, blue paint, Huggies, bank robberies, Huggies and a surreal, Mad Max-like, biker-bounty hunter.

I laughed my way through this movie — the humor is just so off-the-wall.

The demented minds responsible for this movie are Joel and Ethan Coen. They wrote, directed and produced "Raising Arizona." They first achieved notoriety last year with the film noir, "Blood Simple."

They employ many of their trademark cinematic touches: filming from odd angles (i.e., from the baby's point of view) and making violence humorous.

So, if you would like to see a movie that is definitely different, go to see "Raising Arizona."

How many times have you thought to yourself, "You know, I would really like to go on a cruise,"? Probably a lot as finals week gets closer.

Well, you can go on a cruise and it will only cost you from $7.50 to $26. No, you will not be sailing to Barbados but you will be sailing.

The Spirit of Philadelphia is a lunch-and-dinner cruise ship. It is docked at Penn's Landing in Philadelphia, just south of the Ben Franklin bridge.

There are a variety of cruises to take. The Fun-and-Sun lunch cruise runs Monday through Friday from 12-2 p.m. The price is $13.95 plus tax.

There are evening dinner cruises that are more expensive, but longer. The daily dinner cruises run from 7-10 p.m. and cost $21.95. The price increases to $29.95, plus tax, on the weekends. This price includes dinner, entertainment and the cruise.

The Sunday Brunch Cruise, which is from 1-3 p.m., costs $15.95 plus tax. The last set of cruises are the most affordable. The Moonlight Party Cruise if from 11 p.m.-1:30 a.m. On Thursday nights, the price is only $7.50, plus tax. On Friday and Saturday nights, the price increases to $12, plus tax.

Why go on the Spirit of Philadelphia? Because it is really a fun and different thing to do. The ship has three decks; two are enclosed and the other one is open so that you can watch the sights of the Delaware go by.

You do not have to worry about getting seasick (unless you are really prone to motion sickness) because the Delaware River is not exactly the high seas.

I am a veteran of two of the cruises. Last summer, my friends and I went on the Moonlight Party Cruise. We danced to two live bands and stuffed ourselves on the free hors d'oeuvres. The only problem is that we were slightly underdressed. We were wearing shorts and miniskirts and everyone else was in nice pants, dresses or skirts.

When the waiters are done serving food and drinks, they grab microphones and do a Broadway-style revue.

Most recently, I went on the Sunday Brunch cruise to celebrate a friend's birthday. It was a gorgeous day with smooth sailing.

We were seated at a table by ourselves. Our waiter came over to take our drink orders. (Important note: drinks are extra!) He told us that we could only go to the buffet table once — you can bet our plates were groaning as we walked back to our table.

We told the waiter that it was our friend's birthday. He brought us a chocolate cake and all the waiters and waitresses sang "Happy Birthday."

This brings me to the singing. The waiters and waitresses are hired on their singing ability as much as on their food serving skills. Most go to colleges in the area and are pursuing entertainment careers.

When they are done serving food and drinks, they grab microphones and do a Broadway-style revue. Now there is something you do not usually see when you go out to dinner. Our waiter even dedicated a song to our friend with the birthday.

Going on the Spirit of Philadelphia is not something you can do every week. It does get a little expensive, especially when you add in the bar tab and gratuities.

But, if you are looking for the ideal place for a romantic date, or some place different to go with your friends, you should go.

The boarding time for all cruises in one-half hour before the departure time. The number to call for reservations is: 923-1419. The number for groups is: 923-4993.

Dinner Theatre produces "The King and I"

By RUSS CECCOLA

It is often difficult to decide what to do on a weekend for entertainment. Usually, people decide to go out to dinner and a movie, the standard combination that keeps things simple and affordable. I have found the solution that makes any evening entertaining and keeps you fed as well. Riverfront Dinner Theatre offers a choice selection of food and a talented cast of characters in a Broadway-type show all for the same ticket price.

The currently running show is Rodgers and Hammerstein's "The King And I." I had the pleasure to attend the April 10 performance and can assuredly say that the cast was excellent, complementing each other's talents and producing a solidly built two-hour show. Watching a theater production of a major show is a good way to relax after the excellent buffet dinner served by the staff of Riverfront Dinner Theatre.

The menu consists of a clam and oyster bar, a salad bar with many different toppings, prime roast, seafood newburg, ravioli, chicken, fresh fish, steamed rice, browned potatoes, garden vegetables and fresh baked bread and rolls. There are usually additions to the menu — these are just the standard foods.

Desserts include french cheesecake, ice cream, coconut layer cake, German chocolate cake, fruit salad, rice pudding and raisin pudding. There is enough of a selection to keep everyone happy and full.

The main attraction of Riverfront Dinner Theatre is the show. "The King And I" is worth the trip alone. The story of an Englishwoman who goes to the court of the king of Siam to teach his children English and democracy, "The King And I" follows the woman's life during her stay in Siam. As a musical, "The King And I" offers award-winning songs along with the captivating tale of Anna Leonowens and her son Louis in this country strange to them.

The main attraction of Riverfront Dinner Theatre is the show. "The King and I" is worth the trip alone.

The lead characters are played by Carolyn Stewart (Anna) and director and actor Curry Freer (The King). Also starring are Lun Tha (Robert Worst) and Tuptim (Amy Ellsworth) as the two young lovers separated by their nationalities and the King. Louis Leonowens is played by Ryan Hurley and Lady Thiang is played by Christine Simpson. Michael Maes doubles as Captain Orton, the sailor who brings the Leonowens' to Siam, and Sir Edward Ramsey, visitor to Siam.

The rest of the actors in "The King And I" are the royal princes and princesses, the royal wives and the royal dancers. I found no flaws in the acting of the cast members at all and, in fact, was quite impressed by their acting and singing abilities. Riverfront has assembled the best cast that I have ever seen in the times I have been there.

A lot of the strength of the show comes from the popular and recognizable songs in the score. With such numbers as "I Whistle A Happy Tune," "Getting To Know You," "We Kiss In A Shadow" and "Shall We Dance," "The King And I" is a combination of fine acting and vocal abilities. Special praise must go to Carolyn Stewart and Curry Freer for their all-around acting. Do not miss these talented actors.

Vocal talent was best displayed by the strong voices of Stewart, Ellsworth, Simpson and Worst. In particular, Worst and Ellsworth are an excellent team, most evident in "We Kiss In A Shadow," easily the most emotional number. The women all have especially beautiful voices and stood out from the rest.

I would strongly recommend Riverfront Dinner Theatre's performance of "The King And I" for a night out. The shows are on Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings and Wednesday and Saturday afternoons (matinees). "The King And I" is running straight through July 5, so you have plenty of time to see it. Make a point of doing just that. Reservations can be made at 925-7000.

Assault revisited

By JOE MCGOWAN

The Assault
Harry Mulisch
Pantheon Books

The Fons Rademakers film "The Assault" has drawn the 1986 Academy Award for Best Foreign Film and attention towards the Dutch writer Harry Mulisch. Pantheon Books has released a new paperback edition of Mulisch's The Assault as part of its Modern Writers series.

The Assault clouds over an issue long held to be clear-cut — that of World War II. While it was manifestly clear that the Allied powers were on the side of good in fighting the Axis powers, on the level of the individual, the issues were less clear.

Mulisch was born into a tragically ironic family — a Jewish mother who lost her family to the Holocaust and an Austrian father convicted of collaboration with the Nazis. This difficult family situation is amplified as the central theme of The Assault with the Steenwijk family.

The Assault starts and, in a sense, ends in Haarlem 1945. In a deserted Haarlem street, the Dutch policeman Fake Ploeg, a well-known Nazi collaborator, is shot dead by members of the Dutch Resistance. Neighbors fearing Nazi reprisals drag Ploeg's body to the front of the Steenwijk residence. The Nazis promptly arrive, raze the Steenwijk home and gun down the family members excepting young Anton.

The rest of The Assault deals with the after effects of that assault. Piece by piece Anton discovers the whole of what occurred that evening through encounters with survivors and witnesses. Two of these encounters further cloud the issue of right and wrong.

The first of these is with the younger Fake Ploeg. The former schoolmates meet again in 1956 when Fake is participating in an anti-communist riot. The two end up alone in Anton's apartment reviewing the morality of that evening in 1945. On the one hand the elder Fake was a reputed Nazi collaborator and therefore a natural target of the Dutch Resistance. On the other, the Resistance knew full well that reprisals would follow and were therefore responsible for the execution of Anton's family.

The two probe these darker memories to the point of anger. Nevertheless, Fake remembers that despite the hatred the Resistance directed against his father, Anton had remained his friend. But in recalling with anguish his father's murder he asserts: "Besides, it didn't end the War one second sooner."

Ten years later Anton meets Cor Takes, the Dutch Resistance leader responsible for the assassination of policeman Fake Ploeg. Takes further contributes to the sense of numbness Anton feels toward the War and subsequent political affairs. He admits to Anton that the Resistance knew quite well of Nazi tendencies toward reprisals: "So we knew there would be reprisals, right? That one of the houses would be set on fire; and that some of the hostages would be shot. Is that a reason for not doing it?"

Despite his attempts to forget, Anton continues to meet with the key characters of the drama that obliterated his family. Anton is left, finally, with the truth, but with no satisfaction.

Anton finds he can assign blame to no one person or side in the War. Likewise, he can find not a single participant unstained with guilt. The only answer that can be reached in The Assault is that that evening, that division between rebel and collaborator, that War as a whole are things that are bearable only if they never occurred at all.

But these things did occur and Mulisch beautifully plots the pain and web of complexity that result.

Black 'N Blue's Tommy Thayer interviewed

By RUSS CECCOLA

Black 'N Blue is a hard rock band from the West Coast that has had hits with the songs "Miss Mystery" and, more recently, "I'll Be There For You." Both were videos on MTV and singles on Geffen Records. The band is getting ready to go into the studio in the summer to record their fourth album, which promises to be the best yet.

I first saw Black 'N Blue last year when they opened for Kiss. They greatly impressed me and have gathered many fans in this area because of their solid hard rock basis with a lethal dose of originality. All of the band members are very talented in their areas and I recently had the pleasure to speak with Tommy Thayer, one of the guitarists for Black 'N Blue. Other members include Jaime St. James (vocals), Jef "Woop" Warner (guitars), Patrick Young (bass) and Pete Holmes (drums).

Thanks go out to Tommy for taking the time for the interview and Gail Raimi of Jensen Communications for setting it up.

VILLANOVAN: Who formed Black 'N Blue and when? Also, where did the name come from?

TOMMY THAYER: I started the band with Jaime (St. James) right at the end of 1981. We began in Portland, Ore. — that's where we all grew up. We got the name by writing down a few names on a piece of paper. We decided on Black 'N Blue because it was direct and got right to the point — it sounded like rock-and-roll. The name hits you in the face — it's powerful.

V: The first album was released in 1984. What did you do between 1981 and then?

T: We played in small clubs and high schools in the Portland area, right up until the beginning of 1983 when we moved to Los Angeles. The reason we did that was because we were going nowhere fast. The club scene in Portland caters to Top 40 music and doesn't offer much for original bands. We had to go to LA.

V: What bands have you toured with in the past?

T: We've toured with Aerosmith, Night Ranger, Dio, Heart, Kiss, Queensryche, Yngwie Malmsteen, Triumph and the list goes on and on.

V: Have you been able to play everywhere you have dreamed of or are there still places you would like to go?

T: The one place we want to play at is The Forum in LA. We've never played there, but we've been at all of the other large arenas in the area. We were supposed to play at The Forum with Billy Squier in between two legs of the Aerosmith tour, but the deal fell through. We also have high ambitions to tour Europe — we've never really played over there.

V: Dieter Dierks of Scorpions fame produced your first album, followed by Bruce Fairbairn and finally Gene Simmons. What, if anything, have they contributed to Black 'N Blue on vinyl?

T: They all helped us out with different things in the studio, but for the most part, when we're recording, we drive the train. Dieter had some great ideas for the album, but the mix didn't come out too good. Bruce Fairbairn has had success with Bon Jovi and they used him because they like the sound of our second album, Without Love. That album has some of our best stuff on it.

I think the best song we've recorded is "Strange Things." Gene Simmons was the best producer to work with so far because he easily relates with the band and understands what we want. Besides Nasty Nasty, he's going to produce our next album. We go into the studio in June and this is going to be the most outrageous, definitive Black 'N Blue album you've ever head.

V: I have noticed with your music that there is a lot of power and energy behind it. Where is that energy coming from?

T: It comes from our roots, what we've been weaned on. A lot of it is from the '70s, just hard rock influences. But we also have wide musical tastes and get a lot of our influence from different areas, with bands like Kiss, Alice Cooper, Montrose and Aerosmith, the real hard rockers of the '70s. We want to have melodic music, but it's got to have an edge. If it doesn't, then we're not a happening band.

V: Are you going to release any more singles from Nasty Nasty?

T: Actually, the sales have died down a bit on the album and we can never find good times to meet with Geffen, so they've basically sent us into the studio to start working on the next album. For us, it's a slow climb to the top. Sometimes, I think that may be easier.

V: What is the studio like for Black 'N Blue?

T: We basically just try to have fun while making the songs. We try to keep creativity high and let the floodgates flow. For instance, at the beginning of "Bombastic Plastic," the weird sounds are actually Jaime's screaming played backwards. Playing around like that gives us more freedom.

V: Explain the Nasty Nasty album cover.

Black 'N Blue is currently heading back into the studio in order to make their fourth album, destined to be a classic.

T: It's the international symbol for poison (a hand dipping into a bucket of corrosive material and getting eaten away). It's sort of a warning for people to think about — look out, we'll eat you alive.

V: Why did Jonathan Cain of Journey produce "I'll Be There For You" instead of Gene Simmons?

T: It was originally recorded for a movie called "Out of Bounds." But Geffen wound up not producing the soundtrack. Instead, we put it on the album. We had a choice between that or "Promise The Moon." We picked "I'll Be there For You."

V: The last song on the album, "Best Of The West," has Peter Criss, Ron Keel and Marc Ferrari together for the song. Any reason why it was this song?

T: That's the tune where we decided to bring in our friends and just jam with them. It turned out well; it's the party tune with live sounds, etc.

V: You're all from the West coast. Any chances of coming out here soon?

T: Probably we'll come out there after the album is released, but not before.

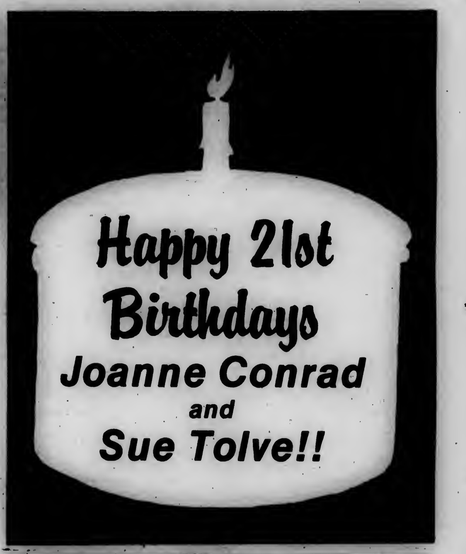
V: I see thanks given to Don Dokken on your albums. What's the connection?

T: Don's a good friend of the band's and actually helped us get a start down here. Don showed up at a small show and showed interest in us and produced our first demo tape. He's been a lot of help to us. There's also a new side to the Black 'N Blue story. We've been doing some stuff with Ted Nugent and he'll be writing a song or two with us for the new album.

V: You said that you are going into the studio in June. Should we be looking for the new album by the end of the summer?

T: No, more like the early fall, mid-fall.

V: What is a typical day/schedule for you like?



T: We mostly rehearse, but we have to go to different events, meet with the management, etc. We were on "Entertainment Tonight" last week. Things like that take up our time.

V: Is there anything else that you would like to say about Black 'N Blue?

T: Nothing more than that the new album is going to be the definitive album for us. It's going to have some of the best stuff that we've written. The band has taken its time and we're taking that slow climb. We're looking toward longevity, not to be a one-hit wonder. We just want to play to as many people as possible.

Band thrashes on Sunday

By RUSS CECCOLA

Local thrash band Sonic Annihilation stormed The MacDade House's Piccadilly Room on Palm Sunday in their second area appearance. Performing two raucous sets, Sonic Annihilation caused many young Headbangers to thrash and get thrown out by the MacDade House bouncers. The turnout was great for this new band and, backed by friends, family and newly-acquired fans, the quartet of metalheads played 12 songs in the two sets, including eight originals and four cover songs.

Band members are Caesar Ettore (vocals), Rob Creighton (drums), Jim Farmer (bass) and Jim "Hags" Haggerty (guitar). Having recently compiled a demo tape of three songs and constantly writing more each week, Sonic Annihilation is headed for notoriety sometime in the near future.

Lauded by local metal magazines for their demo tape, Sonic Annihilation practices constantly and impressed this reviewer, who expected nothing less than mayhem, with their talents.

The first set included four originals and two Venom covers. Opening with a Black Sabbath instrumental introduction, Sonic Annihilation launched into "Terminal Death." "Ride the Rod" was next, and by this time, the uninitiated were turned on to Sonic Annihilation. The MacDade House showcases the talents of local metal bands and Sunday nights are all-age nights. The local kids from the MacDade Boulevard/Route 420 area did not know what to expect, but soon felt at home with the foursome thrashers.

The two Venom songs were instantly recognized by a crowd hungry for rude music. "Buried Alive" proved to be the better of the two. "Kill 'Em All," a personal favorite, was the next Sonic Annihilation tune to be blared out on the huge sound system. The chorus of "Kill 'Em All" is: "Maim, Kill, Destroy/Pillage, Burn and Hack/And when you think you've had enough, We'll keep on coming back/We'll stop at nothing, we shall never fall/ Blazing on we fight until we Kill 'Em All!" "Nuclear War" ended the first phase of Sonic Annihilation's attack on metalheads' eardrums.

The second set continued after a short intermission, during which the house bouncers thought up new ways to persecute youth. "Obsessed With Torture" started things off with a bang, sliding straight into "Germ Warfare," one of the band's newer songs. "Obsessed With Torture," "Kill 'Em All" and "Terminal Death" are the three songs on the demo tape.

Two other new ones played were "Die!!!" and "Carbon Monoxide Poisoning," along with two cover songs of G.B.H. and D.O.A. After a couple of encores of the D.O.A. song, Sonic Annihilation left the stage because of the overwhelming presence of yet another bouncer.

Ettore has haunting vocals and Creighton is a pretty talented drummer. Farmer plays a pounding bass and Haggerty put out some pretty quick guitar riffs. Together, Sonic Annihilation put on a great Sunday show and will continue to "Kill 'Em All."

'Evil Dead 2' gives the audience non-stop terror

By RUSS CECCOLA

"Evil Dead 2"
directed by Sam Raimi Renaissance Films

It has been a long while since an all-out gore fest was released in the movie theaters. Just last week, however, the monumental sequel to a classic film, was unveiled to gore hounds everywhere. "Evil Dead 2: Dead By Dawn" continued what its predecessor started — no holds-barred blood 'n guts with a whole lot of humorous scenes and dialogue.

The film was so good that I had to go back again. The second time around, it was even better and funnier. I would recommend "Evil Dead 2" for people looking for a good cult film or just a good laugh.

"Evil Dead 2" has only one real star — and we do not even know his full name. The character is Ash (Bruce Campbell), who also was in the first film and is instrumental in both movies from the other side of the camera. Ash takes so much abuse in the film that it is a wonder that he is even alive at the end. Between getting beaten up by demons and chopping off his own hand, Ash definitely pays the price for unleashing monsters from hell.

"Evil Dead 2" revolves around necronomicon, loosely translated as The Book of the Dead. It was originally found by the owner of the cabin where all of the action takes place in the film. He was a scientist and was exploring an ancient castle when he stumbled upon the book, and began to translate the passages. As he spoke the words in the book, spirits from hell were unleashed, wreaking havoc upon those who were near. They were all eventually killed.

In "Evil Dead 2," Ash brings his girlfriend to a secluded cabin in the woods and stumbles upon the scientist's recordings of the passages. As he plays the reel-to-reel tape, an unseen force breaks through a window and snatches up his girlfriend, transforming her into a demon. Struck with fear, Ash gets attacked by his demon girlfriend (not to be confused with "My Demon Lover" that opens today and stars Scott Valentine from "Family Ties") and decapitates her with a shovel in one deft movement.

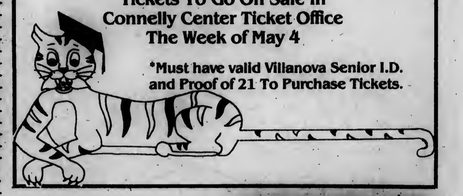
'Evil Dead 2' takes the best elements from all different kinds of horror films and puts them together into a one and one-half hour bloody mess.

Ash goes on to try to escape from the cabin and winds up fighting with more demons and getting more bloody. His escapades include chasing his amputated, but mobile, hand around the cabin, taking pot shots with a rifle on occasion. In the end, he misses the hand, but get's rained with a shower of blood. This is a classy film. It gets even better.

The daughter of the scientist who owns the cabin comes to the place with a boyfriend and a couple of rednecks who show them the way. She has recovered the last couple of pages of The Book of the Dead that are instrumental in making the demons return to hell. Unfortunately, one of the rednecks gets angry and throws the pages in the fruit cellar where an especially funny demon woman lives. She is the scientist's good wife and goes through some good transformation scenes.

The effects in "Evil Dead 2" are the backbone for the film. From blood baths to strange monsters and animatronics, "Evil Dead 2" will keep the gore freaks happy. One particularly good effect is the transformation of the fruit cellar demon into a long-necked giraffe-like monster. Of course, Ash manages to chop its head off, but not before an eyeball flies into the mouth of an unsuspecting screaming girl. All in all, the effects, combined with the humor, is what makes "Evil Dead 2" the classic horror/cult film that it is.

"Evil Dead 2" takes the best elements from all different kinds of horror films and puts them together into a one-and one-half hour bloody mess. From blue slime to green blood comes out of these creatures and the characters are not safe.



So go see "Evil Dead 2," a movie made for the use of blood bibs.

'Cats win in Florida

By JOHN G. RICCO

The women's track team continued its success outdoors on April 11 with a fine performance in the Tampa Track Classic. The meet, held in Tampa, Fla., included a host of schools including Missouri and cross state rival Penn State.

The Wildcats swept the 1,500-meter race, taking not only the first three slots, but fourth, sixth and eighth as well. Senior Gina Procaccio (4:15.19) and sophomore Vicki Huber (4:15.44), who finished first and second, both recorded personal bests and qualified for the ECAC and NCAA Championship meets. Their times are the two fastest collegiately in the United States this year, and Procaccio's set a new Villanova outdoor record.

Debbie Grant (4:21.17), Kathy Franey (4:23.86) and Lauren Searby (4:29.1) also qualified for the ECAC meet with their times.

The 'Cats also swept the 800-meter race with all three women

Tennis takes six straight

By JOHN FAY

After losing their first match of the week, Villanova's men's tennis team bounced back to cruise to six straight victories. This outstanding showing improves the squad's overall record to 13-5, with an 8-2 showing in April.

On April 7 the 'Cats traveled to Towson and bowed, 7-2. The one bright spot for the team was Dave Lyons, who increased his unbeaten streak to eight matches.

If there was any doubt that the 'Cats would be down after their loss to Towson, all skepticism was put to rest the following day. The squad annihilated a totally overmatched Drexel, 9-0, behind the inspired play of Mike Parks, Taylor Terisi, Peter Leonard, Greg Ackerman, Mike Freedman and Lyons.

Upsala provided even less competition than Drexel, with the 'Cats winning once again, 9-0. The squad so demolished Upsala that the match became little more than a light workout. In fact, the entire Upsala team took only seven games.

The team's onslaught continued at Montclair, with the 'Cats winning easily 8-1. Parks, Leonard, Ackerman, Lyons and Freedman all won in straight sets, while Terisi lost a grueling three setter, 6-2, 4-6, 7-5.

Pitted against Fairfield in Fairfield is no bargain, but the 'Cats made their victory look like a white elephant sale, thrashing the hapless Stags, 9-0. Freedman was victorious in the best match of the day, 3-6, 6-3, 6-2.

After yawning through four straight victories, the squad finally encountered some much needed competition from N.Y.U. Parks, Terisi and Leonard all fell short, but Ackerman, Lyons and Freedman, seeds four through six respectively, were victorious in their extremely important matches.

The 'Cats ended the week in patented form, crushing the undermanned Cheyney squad, 9-0. The way in which the team won reminded many of the massacre at Upsala.

Star player cited

By SUSAN GANEM

What do Carol Blazejowski, Nancy Lieberman, Lynette Woodard, Cheryl Miller and Villanova senior Shelly Pennefather have in common? They all have been awarded the Wade Trophy as the nation's most outstanding female senior basketball player.

On April 14, Pennefather was honored with the award, which is hailed as the Heisman Trophy of women's sports.

Presented by the National Association for Girls and Women in Sports, the Wade Trophy goes to the athlete who meets the following criteria. She must: (1) be a senior college basketball player; (2) be a Kodak All-American; (3) be a positive role model for women in sports; (4) be committed to academics; (5) demonstrate leadership; and (6) show sportsmanship.

The Wade Trophy was just one of the honors Pennefather earned during her college basketball career. As a senior, she was a Kodak All-American and one of the top 10 players in the country.

She also received Big East Conference Player of the Year (for the third consecutive year); Big East Conference Tournament Most Valuable Player (for the second straight year); Big East All-Conference team (for the third year, she has been named to the first team. She was named to second team as a freshman); and Street & Smith pre-season all-American (three seasons).

Pennefather became Vilanova's all-time leading scorer in both women's and men's basketball history, finishing with 2,408 points surpassing Keith Herron's total of 2,170.

In the 117 games played for Villanova out of a possible 121, Pennefather was the leading scorer in 86, the leading rebounder in 92, and she scored in double figures in 113. Villanova lost the four games which Shelly did not play. Furthermore, during her four years, Pennefather's talents combined with those of fellow seniors Lynn Tighe, Karen Hargadon, Kathy Miller, Mary Beth Kulp and Mary Delorey and the Wildcats allowed the team to compile a 93-28 record (.768 win pct.).

Head Coach Harry Perretta commented, "Shelly is the best all-around player I've ever coached. I don't feel anyone is more deserving of these awards than Shelly; not just because of the type of player she is, but because of the type of person she is."

qualifying for the ECAC Championships. Grant (2:05.65) and Procaccio (2:08.13) finished one-two while sophomore Michelle DiMuro (2:08.59) came in third.

After running fine races in the 1,500-meter, Huber (9:26.58) and Franey (9:36.24) came back under two hours later to take first and second in the 3,000-meter race. Again, both runners qualified for the ECAC meet with their times.

Sophomore Celeste Halliday, though she came in third place, ran an excellent race in the 400-meter.

Crew sinks Marist, drowns Washington

By KAREN THOMA

Villanova crew enjoyed its best showing last weekend, with convincing victories by most of the boats over crews from Marist College, Washington College and LaSalle. 'Nova dominated nearly every event, meeting with success across the board — men and women, novice and varsity categories.

Most impressive was the win by the women's varsity lightweight four, which took its race by more than a length of open water over three heavyweight varsity crews. The lightweights were forced to row in the heavy division due to a lack of lightweight women's crews, but they proved that they were more than equal to the challenge.

Coach Walter Young complimented his crew, comprised of Karen Lovett, Sally Poliwoda, Ellen Minzner, Lynn Joyce and Tya Mae Julien, for their achievement: "The work they've put into this season is really starting to pay off. Their dedication and discipline have been outstanding."

The women's novice crew also had a fine showing, winning both the eight and four races. Novice rower Beth Westerman commented, "It was really exciting to see us finally row as well as we knew we could."

The men's team enjoyed equal success in their races. The men's lightweight four put in an impressive performance amidst a large field to take their event by two lengths. Tim O'Connor, the men's captain and 2-seat in that four, remarked, "We went into the race not knowing how we'd stack up against the others and it's very satisfying to see the results."

In addition, the men's novices kept their undefeated season intact by triumphing in each of their races. All the rowers are looking ahead with great anticipation to the season's closing regattas, the Bergen Cup (May 2) and the Dad Vails (May 8-9).

Lifters win national titles

By DOUG SCANCARELLA

Villanova's powerlifting team traveled to Oklahoma University for the National Championships and finished fourth in the nation. In addition, Jerry Kerwin and Mike Lucci won the National Championships in their respective events.

Kerwin, a 220-pound junior, easily won his weight class, keeping all other competitors far behind. Lucci, another junior, cruised through the 181-pound class to his first place finish.

As a team, the Wildcats scored 31 points and were topped only by Virginia Tech (51 points), Louisina (50 points) and Navy (32 points). The host Sooners came in fifth place, totalling 23 points.

Ruggers wind down season

By SHANA LYNCH

In the past three weeks, the Villanova Rugby team has had many ups and downs. Collectively the team won seven games, tied one and lost two.

Its first loss was to a very strong and highly skilled Maryland R.F.C. in the Mid-Atlantic Regional Finals. Ultimately, it was the Maryland Terps who defeated Virginia Tech to go to the Final Four in the country representing the East.

However, a bright spot was the Villanova "B" and "C" teams, who beat the Scranton "A" and "B" teams with identical scores of 16-0. For the Bs, it was Buck Reitmeyer, Chris Hillman and Joe McGrady scoring, with conversions by Bill Sicord.

The following weekend, the team traveled to the Fifth Annual Rutgers Rugby Classic and finished third out of 12 teams. The As advanced with wins over Fairfield and Millersville, with tries contributed by Dennis Graeber and Ken Justice and game winning kicks by Tim Whelan.

However, their luck ran out in what they felt was a poorly officiated match against Shippensburg, in which they lost 4-0 on a controversial call. Chris McStarr noted, "We lost on a bogus call. I have played with the referee and he is a horrible player, too!"

The Bs remained undefeated, though, with wins over Fairfield, Temple and Shippensburg, with tries from Aloia, Mike Turzenes, Cody Gabriel, Mike Buscnkill, Pete Keenan, Brian Coughlin, Dan O'Mara, John Kelly and Charley Regan.

The Villanova R.F.C.'s last match is this Saturday at home versus Temple. It will be the final match for eight, four-year veterans: hooker James Stack, second-rows Dan Griffin and John Kucharczuk, eight man Bill Mendrzycki, wing forward Shana Lynch, fly-half Greg Noone, winger Joe Guido and scrum-half/winger Justice.

Cats bloom at Dogwoods

By DOUG SCANCARELLA

The Villanova men's track team had excellent showings in their last two outings. The 'Cats turned in dazzling performances in the Dogwood and the Rutgers relays. The fine accomplishment of the Cats has raised hopes for the Penn Relays, which take place next weekend.

On April 10 and 11 the Wildcats journeyed to Knoxville, Tn., for the 21st annual Dogwood Relays. The 'Cats were able to win the Distance Medley relay with a time of 9:26.30. It was freshman Mark Jones who turned in the key performances for the 'Cats in this relay. Jones ran a 46.5 in the 400-meter part of the race.

Villanova managed to take second in the 4 x 400-meter relay. The 3:05.23 finish was a tremendous time for the 'Cats; however, they narrowly missed qualifying for the nationals. The winner of the race, highly touted Ohio State, qualified for the nationals with a 3:05.09. The Wildcats took third in the 4 x 800-meter relay, losing only to hard-working Penn State and a well-prepared Indiana club.

The following weekend, the Wildcats ventured north for the Rutgers Relays in Piscataway, NJ. The 400-meter was 'Nova's strongest event. Junior Edwin Maldonado won with a time of 47.1. In addition to Maldonado, all of the other Villanova runners in the 400-meter race won their respective heats. The 1500-meter race was won easily by Villanova's Gerry O'Reilly, with a time of 3:43.1. Sean O'Niell came in second for the 'Cats. The 'Cats did not fare as well in the 800-meter race, although Jan Freidli was able to finish third for V.U.

Next on schedule for Villanova men's track is the Penn Relays, where they hope to qualify the 4 x 400-meter, the 4 x 800-meter, the 4 x 1500-meter and the Distance Medley relay races for the nationals. Right now it looks like the 4 x 400-meter relay will definitely qualify and the others have very good shots.

MIKE SCHICK

This week's Saco East Athlete of the Week is freshman Mike Schick. Schick plays the outfield and pitches for the Villanova baseball team. Over the weekend of April 10, Schick batted .625 to push the Wildcats to victory over Pittsburgh.

Schick had eight RBIs, with one double and two home runs. The Wildcats are producing the best record for Villanova since 1908, and Schick is leading the way.

On the season, Schick has appeared in 17 games and has compiled a .421 overall batting average. As a pitcher, Schick is 5-1 with a 5.49 ERA.

Schick is a political science major in the College of Arts and Sciences.

Cats climb to 23-10

By JOHN G. RICCO

The Villanova baseball team endured another week of April showers and emerged, 23-10. Though the Wildcats had five games rained out, Coach George Bennett's squad was able to win six out of the eight contests they managed to play.

Before Easter break, on April 7, 8 and 9 the Wildcats collected consecutive victories over Swarthmore, 12-10; Princeton, 10-9; and Philadelphia Textile, 5-2. The winning pitchers were Steve Priano (3-0), Mike Schick (5-1) and Barry Blundin (1-3), respectively.

On April 11 and 12, the Pittsburgh Panthers came to Villanvoa for a three game series. The clubs split Saturday's double-header, with the Panthers taking the opener, 15-13, and the 'Cats winning the nightcap, 18-4, behind the pitching of right-hander Sean Grady (4-2).

On Sunday, Villanova was again victorious, 11-5, and raised their Big East record to 4-2. Schick pitched well and earned his sixth victory of 1987.

The Wildcats traveled to the University of Delaware on April 14 to face the Hens for the second time this season. In the first matchup, the 'Cats had escaped with an 8-7 win, but this time they were not as lucky.

Delaware came up with two first-inning runs and one in the second to take a quick lead. In the third, Schick hit a 2-2 pitch into the seats for his fourth homer of the year and Villanova added a single run in the fifth to cut Delaware's lead to one, but the Hens scored three runs in the next two innings and went on to win, 6-3.

The next day Villanova visited rival St. Joseph's for an afternoon game. In the teams' two previous contests in 1987, the 'Cats had beaten the Hawks, 12-7 and 15-4. This contest was also a high scoring affair, as both teams erupted for a combined 15 runs in the first two innings.

In the first, freshman Gary Scott belted a two-run shot over the fence for his 10th homer of the season. The blast moved Scott into a tie for the Villanova record for home runs in one season held by both Bill Duryea and Jerry Holtz.

Schick blasted a grand slam in the fifth to put the 'Cats ahead for good, 13-12. After a single Wildcat run in the seventh, St. Joe's rallied for a run in the ninth but Blundin, who came in in the fourth, was able to hold off the Hawks and pick up his second win of the season.

Schick's grand slam added to another record the 1987 Wildcats own. The team's 43 homers is the most ever by a Villanova squad in one year. With 19 games left in the regular season, the 'Cats could possibly put the record out of reach.

Freshman outfielder/pitcher Mike Schick belts a grandslam in the 'Cats' 13-12 triumph over St. Joe's. The hit marked Schick's fourth homerun of the season.

Wildcats have tough break; record 4 wins and 5 losses

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

The Wildcat softball team did not have a very successful break. Villanova set out to improve an already excellent record. The Wildcats began the week at 6-1 record, one of the best in the past few years.

They began break with a double-header at Lafayette College The Wildcats set out with good intentions, taking the first half of the doubleheader. But the Wildcats soon slipped up and lost the second game, 7-6.

Sophomore Mindy Kahn hit well in the first game, hitting two doubles versus the Lafayette Team.

The Wildcats then ventured to Boston College and the Boston College Invitational. Villanova fell from their pedestal even farther, losing to Seton Hall and St. John's.

The Seton Hall game, which took place on Friday, was lost by a score of 3-0. The bad Wildcat luck continued the following morning, as St. John's took the Wildcats, 4-2.

As the Wildcats continued traveling throughout the East their losing streak continued as well. The Hawks of St. Joseph's were next on the agenda and, for the fourth time in a row, the Wildcats were beaten.

St. Joseph's outplayed Villanova to the tune of 3-2. However, the second half of the doubleheader brought forth new strength from the Wildcats as they took the game, 4-3.

The Wildcats again went off the Villanova campus and traveled toward the city. This time all the way to inner-city Philadelphia to face the University of Pennsylvania Quakers.

The Wildcats thrashed Penn, 6-3. It looked like the Wildcats from the first half of the season were finally resurfacing.

But that was not the case. As soon as the Wildcats crossed the state border their luck changed.

The No. 1 Division III team was waiting on the other side. The Wildcats were close at the end, but still took the loss. In the late innings Villanova threw the game away with a baserunning error.

Later that same day, the Wildcats faced Ursinus College. The Wildcats began to perform again as they picked up the 5-4 win.

Freshman Karyn Lodise was the winning pitcher and evened her season record to 2-2.

The Wildcats must face five more teams in the remainder of the 1987 season: LaSalle, Drexel, Providence, Seton Hall and Princeton. The LaSalle, Drexel and Seton Hall games are all doubleheaders.

The Wildcats record is now at 10-6 and a tough schedule faces them. If the bad luck and disappointment that followed the team in the past disappears, the Wildcats could put together the best record in recent history.

BEHIND the LINES

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

YEAR IN REVIEW

Nineteen eighty-seven was a year when nothing in Villanova sports was mediocre. There was either great success or bitter disappointment. The men's basketball team went from the apex of college athletics to the abyss; from the excitement of the 1985 National Championship and the 1986 NCAA tournament appearance to the lackluster 15-16 record in 1987.

Even Villanova's past was not left alone as Gary McLain tried to mar Villanova's championship march to Lexington by writing an article dealing with his cocaine use on the Villanova campus.

On the brighter side of the roundball picture, there was the women's basketball team. The Wildcats played like champions all season and finally took the Big East crown. Although the Wildcats lost in the second round of the NCAA tournament, they put together a fine season.

Senior forward Shelly Pennefather added to her many accolades by becoming the first Villanova player ever to be named to the Kodak All-American team. Pennefather will also go down in history as the most prolific scorer ever to grace the courts of Villanova. In Pennefather's four-year career, she threw 2,408 points through the Wildcat nets.

The Villanova ice hockey team continued to slip this year. Their overall record fell to 6-18 and they continue to be disappointing.

The Villanova swim teams had another up season, behind the coaching of the "Coach of the Year" Ed Geisz. The Wildcat men finished second behind a strong Pittsburgh team. This is the third straight year that the Wildcats finished second in the Big East behind the Panthers.

The wrestling team became the newest Wildcat varsity sport. There success was marginal this year, but for their first year the season can be termed a success.

The Wildcat indoor track season was the most successful in recent history. The men's track team tore up the track at the Olympic Invitational track meet. Edwin Modebedi took first place in 500-meter race, while Grant Davis, Marc Jones, Modebedi and Tony Valentine missed a record by one-tenth of a second in the 4 x 400-meter relay.

The women, however, did not miss the record. The 3,200-meter relay team of Debbie Grant, Celeste Halliday, Michelle DiMuro and Gina Procaccio, set the world record with a time of 8:24.72. The distance medley team of Grant, Procaccio, Halliday and Huber set the world mark of 11:00.7, beating the old mark by almost four seconds.

The men's tennis season remains successful, and has, to date, posted a 13-5 record. The men's golf team is also on stride this year. They have been burning up the links en route to a 11-2 record behind the leadership of Chet Walsh.

The lax team is the only springtime sport that is showing mediocrity. The lacrosse team is at 5-5 for the season. Before their last effort versus Swarthmore, the Wildcats were at 4-5.

The men's baseball team has been on a rampage this season, posting their best start since 1908. Behind the pitching, fielding and hitting of Mike Schick, the Saco East Athlete of the Week, they will more than likely continue their success in the Big East for the remainder of the spring.

Once miligned females of spring, the Villanova women's softball team has come out of the winter gloom and made a fresh start on Sullivan field. The women have put together a 10-6 record so far this season and have posted the first no-hitter since 1978.

Last fall the Wildcat football team put together another record year. Villanova went 8-1 against questionable talent. Next fall the Wildcats will test their mettle against Division IAA teams. We'll let this season be the test for the program and its success. The football team did gain accolades from CBS, as Ron Kinney and Rich Spagnardi were honored by being selected to the Academic All-American team.

Considering everything, Villanova sports have been an overwhelming success this year and the future seems bright. Once again Wildcats all over the world can hold their heads up high [illegible] Villanova's athletic [illegible]

Student life evaluated

By DANTE J. SCALA

Villanova University has an alcohol and drug problem which should be "vigorously attacked," according to a recent evaluation of the Student Life division.

"Your resident hall staff will tell you case after case of kids they are trying to detoxify. They need help. The health and counseling resources need to be mobilized," said evaluator Dr. Arthur Shriberg of Xavier University in his report.

Shriberg is part of a University-commissioned evaluation team which has been studying the University for the past three years. His 27-page report praised many administrators and programs but criticized others, such as the Counseling Center and Security.

Shriberg said he read 40 pounds of background materials, such as reports on the University and student publications, for the evaluation. He also interviewed students, faculty and administrators. Shriberg visited the school for a four-day period last December, according to a University newsletter on the evaluation program.

"I trust you will consider this report in the context of someone who shows you a snapshot taken from a specific camera at one point in time," said Shriberg. "There may be a factual error or two . . . I am confident, however, that most of these perceptions are accurate."

Alcohol

Shriberg commended the University for "strengthening alcohol enforcement" and praised Student Life for their efforts to deal with the campus' "major alcohol problem." He noted the disciplinary referral program, the appointment of an alcohol educator and the Saferides program.

However, he stated that "All policies must be reviewed for alcohol consistency. For example, you allow tailgate parties and students can drink until 1 p.m. However, they can't drink at 1:15 p.m. They [the students] think this is absurd."

Shriberg recommended that the University "work very hard to demonstrate non-alcoholic options." He said that "Jake's Place," a non-alcoholic pub open on an occasional basis in Connelly Center, should be open more often and given more resources.

Counseling and Career Center

Shriberg praised the Counseling and Career Center's staff as "first class" and seemingly "well-respected on campus." He appeared especially impressed by the placement area of the center.

However, Shriberg found the Counseling Center lacking in several areas. For example, he stated that the assistance of a psychiatrist is needed, and should be available to aid students on medication.

Also, Shriberg criticized the center for its policy of attempting to limit the number of times a

Asbestos found in St. Mary's Hall

By SIOBHAN A. RODER

The Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., assistant to the vice president for Student Life, stated Wednesday that Villaniva University hired outside contractors to test the air in St. Mary's Hall and complete cleanup operations this summer after the installation of a fire alarm system loosened asbestos contained in the corridor ceiling material on the northern end of the third floor.

In answering a question involving whether he would notify past residents of St. Mary's Hall who had lived in an environment containing asbestos, Martin said, "There was no problem in the past. The problem occurred this summer." He added that if he were to speak with past residents he would tell them, "To the best of our knowledge, the building was safe in the past and is safe again now."

According to "Asbestos in Buildings," a document released by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), asbestos is "a mineral composed of small, thin fibers" and "is common in many building materials."

The Encyclopaedia Britannica states, "Asbestos fibre is employed for applications requiring nonflammability and is chiefly of industrial importance, especially in the manufacture of brake linings, building construction materials, electrical equipment thermal insulation materials.

Concern about harmful effects of asbestos has been increasing since the early 1970s. According to the EPA document, the breathing of airborne asbestos fibers has been linked with asbestosis, a grave lung disease; lung cancer; and mesothelioma, a cancer affecting the lung or abdominal cavities.

Martin stated the asbestos was loosened from the ceiling when workers from Pangborne, the contractor installing the new fire alarm system, were drilling holes into the ceiling to put conduit in place. Martin said the ceiling fiber was a cementitious material — what he described as "essentially sprayed-on plaster" — with some chrysotile asbestos in it.

Martin did not have the figures on the exact percentage of asbestos in the St. Mary's Hall ceiling. He did say, though, "Ceilings of this type generally have 1 to 3 percent asbestos. That's my recollection."

Martin stated that the Associated Investors Corp. cleaned up what had come down from the ceiling July 14. He said a company known as Clayton Environmental examined samples of what had been cleaned up and reported to Villanova July 23 that it was asbestos.

Approval of new dorms anticipated

By JOHANNE C. SHARP

Final approval for the construction of two south campus dormitories is anticipated Sept. 14 at the Radnor Township Board of Commissioners meeting, according to the Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., assistant to the vice president for Student Life.

If approved, the ground breaking would begin "in a couple of weeks and would depend in part on our ability to get permits from both state and local departments," Martin said Tuesday.

The University Board of Trustees must also approve the proposal before construction can begin, he said.

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, said, "Township commissioners and the rest of the Radnor Township residents are in support of the proposal because they know we are trying to get people back on campus."

Stack said the building of the residence halls will begin the first phase of the University plan to house an additional 1,000 undergraduates on campus. Currently Villanova accommodates 3,000 students and ultimately hopes to house 4,000. Stack said Villanova is not looking to increase the undergraduate population and in fact may attempt to decrease it.

The two new dorms will house 240 students. Stack said the administration has not yet decided whether females or males will be housed in the proposed residence halls.

In addition, the University is awaiting approval of a parking facility to be located adjacent to the SEPTA Norristown High Speed Line on the south campus area. Stack said the recreational courts next to Stanford Hall would be relocated to construct the parking lot, which would help

Graduate School dean named

By DIANE A. CILIONE

Dr. Daniel J. Ziegler was recently appointed dean of the Graduate School of Liberal Arts and Sciences, replacing Dr. Bernard J. Downey.

Prior to assuming his present position, Ziegler was a faculty member in the department of psychology and served as its chairperson for the last 19 years. He received his bachelor of science degree from Villanova in 1960 and received a master's degree and a doctorate in psychology from Temple University.

During his tenure in the psychology department Ziegler's areas of interest were personality theory, stress and psychopathology, and for many years he taught graduate courses related to these areas. In addition Ziegler is also coauthor of a text in personality theories published by McGraw-Hill in the United States with an international student edition published by McGraw-Hill, Kogakusha, Ltd., Japan, which is currently being sold on five continents.

In addition to his activities at Villanova, Ziegler is also a nationally known speaker in the area of stress management and in that capacity he has addressed business and professional groups throughout the United States and Puerto Rico. As the recipient of an American Psychological Association-approved doctorate, he is also a licensed psychologist for private practice in Pennsylvania.

In his first year at the University, Ziegler helped to initiate, organize and staff what is now the University Counseling Center. During the early 1970s he served

Dorm linen service halted

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

As the result of a survey which determined that less than one-third of all on-campus residents utilized the linen service last year, the Housekeeping department decided that sheets will no longer be provided to students, Carlton Clapper, director of Housekeeping, said this week.

From September 1986 to May 1987, housekeeping staff members counted all of the sheets that were distributed. Only about 800 of 3,000 residents regularly used the service, stated Judy Clay-Miles, supervisor of Housekeeping.

Residence Life was "consulted whether or not we thought it [the linen service] was an essential service," said Christopher M. Janosik, director of Residence Life. Based on the results of the survey, they decided that the service could be halted.

Last year, approximately 40 housekeeping man-hours a week were spent distributing sheets from various locations on campus. It was "not a good business ... custodial services is here to clean," said Clapper.

This elimination of the linen service is "keeping in conjuncture with the campuses across the country" which do not generally provide students with sheets, stated Clapper.

Since the Housekeeping department does not have any laundry facilities on campus, Clapper said that he felt the students are in a better position to keep their bed linen in good shape. "I really feel that it's a better deal for the students to bring their own sneets," he said.

In the 1987-88 Residence Life brochure students were advised that they must supply their own sheets. However, many students complained that they did not see this section of the brochure and, therefore, had to buy sheets after arriving at Villanova.

The scope of the Housekeeping department has altered in the past four years. Through the 1984-85 school year, cleaning services were provided for each individual dormitory room, including vacuuming, dusting and changing the linens. After the discontinuation of this cleaning service, linen service was provided until this year.

Although the number of Housekeeping staff members had declined by attrition in recent years, the department is not reducing and is in the process of hiring, said Clapper.

The Housekeeping department is currently trying to provide weekend service. This will be a very difficult task unless the dormitories cooperate, according to Clapper, because Housekeeping is now restricted by a union contract to 16 staff members on the Sunday shift.

New fire alarm system installed

By NATALIE McKENNA

Villanova Universitv is currently installing a campus-wide fire alarm system that is projected to have a total cost of $4 million to $5 million.

Approximately $1 million was spent last year to commence the installation of the new alarm system in the residence halls, according to Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life. An additional $1 million will be spent this year before the system is fully implemented in all University housing facilities. Installation in the dormitories should be complete by October.

The system, installed by Pangborne and Co., Inc., will be "much more sophisticated and sensitive" than the existing system, according to Neville.

Neville, a member of Villanova's fire and safety committee, stated, "The new system will make it easy to know where the fire is."

The Pangborne system includes boxes, positioned outside of the buildings, which have lights that indicate the floor on which a fire alarm has been activated.

According to Neville, Pangborne was among three firms bidding for Villanova's fire alarm system contract. The firms were given the specifications required for the University to comply with a state ordinance which mandates an upgrading of the existing system by 1989.

Pangborne, explained Neville, offered the University the best bid and was contracted to implement the University-wide system.

After the completion of the project in the residence halls, the system will be installed in the University's academic buildings and dining facilities.

The entire system will be extensively tested for reliability, and the conversion from the existing fire alarm system will follow.

The goal of the fire safety committee, according to Neville, is to "have the entire system tie into a central on-campus location." This will permit the earliest possible detection of fire and will facilitate the execution of evacuation and fire-fighting practices. This goal, however, will not be reached for three to four years, according to Neville.

Dobbin named to Academic Affairs

By SHARON A. WATERS

The Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., was recently named associate vice president for Academic Affairs. The new office was added in order to complement the other associate vice president for Academic Affairs position, which is held by Dr. Charles L. Cherry.

The addition of the new position will allow Dobbin to concentrate on long-range academic plans for Villanova University. According to background information provided by Dobbin, his responsibilities include conducting and overseeing studies concerning short- and long-range academic plans, implementing recommendations resulting from the various academic program evaluations presently being conducted at the University and assisting the vice president for Academic Affairs in faculty matters.

Also, as a member of the department of religious studies, Dobbin will teach theology courses.

In the past, Dobbin taught graduate classes during summer sessions at Villanova from 1973 to 1986. He also currently serves as a member of the Provincial Council of the Augustinian Province of St. Thomas of Villanova, a position he has held for six years.

Dobbin served as a member of the Board of Trustees at Villanova University from 1979 to July 1987, resigning in accordance with Board regulations upon accepting appointments to University faculty and administration positions.

Dobbin said he is "interested in seeing Villanova University from the inside and on a different level" and described his job as placing "a primary emphasis on academic planning for the future."

In other administration news, the Rev. William A. McGuire, O.S.A., will move from his position as assistant to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences to assistant director for Athletics for Buildings and Facilities starting Monday, according to the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

AAUP chapter honored in L.A.

The American Association of University Professors (AAUP) chapters at Villanova University and Adelphi University were joint recipients of the 1987 Beatrice G. Konheim Award for providing leadership in advancing AAUP principles in academic governance.

The awards were presented June 19 at the 73rd Annual Meeting of the American Association of University Professors in Los Angeles. Prof. Edwin Goff, president of the AAUP Villanova chapter, accepted the award on behalf of the chapter.

The Beatrice G. Konheim Award is given to a chapter for outstanding achievement in furthering the association's objectives in academic freedom, student rights and freedoms, the status of academic women, the elimination of discrimination against minorities or the establishment of equal opportunity for all faculty members.

Forum to discuss Judge Bork

By LYNN PERDEK

Villanova will present a forum on Wednesday to discuss the issues surrounding President Reagan's nomination of the Hon. Robert Bork to succeed Justice Lewis Powell on the U.S. Supreme Court. The panel discussion sponsored by Villanova's sociology and honors departments, will focus upon the importance of the political philosophies of this conservative nominee.

According to Dr. Peter Knapp, sociology professor at Villanova, the Bork nomination is important as a fundamental shift in the Supreme Court, which quite possibly could establish issues for at least 30 years. Knapp added that the nomination of a person with Bork's political philosophies is a radical departure in a conservative direction from any positions established in the law.

Knapp stated that one of the most controversial aspects of Bork's political philosophies is that of "original intent." Bork believes that the U.S. Constitution should be looked upon from the standpoint of the Founding Fathers of this nation rather than interpreted as modern-day interpretations of the basic principles of the Constitution. This affects the debate over the issue of the rights covered in the First Amendment of the Constitution. Original intent provides that the freedom of speech protected in the First Amendment only adheres to political viewpoints and does not apply to criticism of political figures or to protecting a journalist's sources.

Bork's political views do not fall within the scope of views held by either the conservatives or the liberals, according to Ronald Dworkin in an article in The New York Review. Dworkin states that Bork is a constitutional radical and that the nomination is the climax of the President's ambition to freeze the institution of the Supreme Court, for as long as possible, into "an orthodoxy of the president's own design."

The panel will focus upon three issues which promote great political concern when discussing Bork's nomination. The most controversial issue is that of original intent. Another important issue to be raised is that of judicial restraint, where the question is raised as to what degree judges should take an active role in establishing jurisdiction. Bork believes that courts should be extremely reluctant in shaping the law and assuming too much power into their hands, as he stated in his well-publicized 1971 article in the Indiana Law Journal.

The third issue to be debated is the question as to whether Bork's nomination should be reviewed on the basis of his professional competency or on the basis of his political philosophies.

Bork is the third appointment to the Supreme Court during the Reagan administration, and is expected to change what for many years had been considered a liberal institution. According to Dworkin, Bork will upset the balance in the court that Powell had provided, and make the Supreme Court a seat of right-wing power long after Reagan's administration has ended.

The forum will be held at 2:30 p.m. Wednesday in Connelly Center. The panel will consist of Peter Sevareid, a professor at Temple Law School, the Hon. Frank Hazel, former prosecutor and Arthur Donato Esq., of the Delaware County Association of Defense Lawyers.

Charlotte Watson, secretary, dies at 53

By SHARON M. NEUBAUER

Charlotte A. Watson, who worked as a secretary at Villanova University for 36 years, died of a heart attack in her home Aug. 24. She was 53 years old.

Watson, who started working for the University after high school, served as the secretary to the president for 27 of her 36 years at the University. During that time she worked with five different University presidents, including the current University President, the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A. Co-workers described Watson as "very loyal, both to the University and to friends."

Watson never married. She is survived by five sisters and a brother.

Funeral services were held Aug. 27, at St. Matthew's Roman Catholic Church in Conshohocken, Pa. The burial was at St. Matthew's Cemetery, Conshohocken.

Villanova Student Life program evaluated

student is counseled to four sessions. This situation is worsened because "Students lack transportation and, without insurance, the funds for a private therapist," he said. "Much work is needed in developing a better referral system," he concluded.

Shriberg also questioned the lack of a 24-hour counseling service, citing that Residence Life needed help with emergencies at night and on weekends. "Many campuses have counselors in residence or at least on call. You have neither," he said.

Shriberg commended the plan to hire a full-time drug educator, stating that "An expanded drug education program is badly needed." Also, the infirmary should aid in this effort, he said.

"The Counseling Center needs to be a stronger resource for drug education, stress management, interpersonal issues . . . they need to expand their preventive and educational activities," he concluded.

Infirmary

"The infirmary is not well-respected by the students. I was told this many times," said Shriberg.

Also, Shriberg questioned the need for a special athletic infirmary. "The athletic department has its own health service, with a full range of physicians available only to athletics . . . I am told this occurred because athletes weren't receiving the help they needed from the infirmary."

He recommended the expansion of the infirmary's services "to educate and promote wellness." Much could be done in the area of "preventive health activity," he said.

"As you consider building a new [infirmary] facility, I strongly urge you to consider putting health and counseling together" to "focus on campus health issues," stated Shriberg.

Praise for administrators

Shriberg praised several administrators in his report. For instance, he described the Rev. John P. Stack, dean of students, as a "well-respected person on campus . . . I think you are very fortunate having a dean of students with such skill and concern."

Also, he said that Vice President for Student Life Dr. Richard A. Neville is "very well-respected on campus" and "knows the University well, relates well to students."

Shriberg also commended the presence of the Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., an attorney, in the position of assistant to the vice president for Student Life. "An in-house lawyer is an unusual and very special service. Some very interesting research has been done" by Martin, he said.

Residence Life

Shriberg recommended co-ed residence halls and suggested St. Mary's Hall as a good dormitory in which to experiment.

"Many Catholic colleges have co-ed facilities. They usually are safer, quieter, treated better and have less inappropriate sexual activity," said Shriberg.

He also advised that more residence halls were needed and hoped that the University could eventually house 80 percent of its students on campus. "You offer an excellent resident program for freshmen and some sophomores and then you force them to live in communities that don't want them. I recommend you use your new property and build different kinds of residence options," he said.

While Shriberg praised the Residence Life staff, and described the halls as "well-run," he described the dorm conditions as "filthy" and "a disgrace." He also stated, "Things don't get fixed."

He suggested that the Maintenance staff should report to Residence Life, commenting, "Clearly, they are not communicating now."

Shriberg also was concerned that male housekeepers and security guards can sometimes be found in women's dormitories late at night or in the early morning, in violation of the dorm visitation rules. "I share the concern of your women residents and feel this situation is 'fraught with danger,'" he said.

In addition, he said that more adults, such as young faculty, are needed in the halls. "If you want to work with students, you need to be accessible and available at all hours. A homogenous community of 18- to 21-year-olds with no one else in residence is not educationally effective. I commend the adults who now live in the halls." Currently, "The faculty don't feel welcome in the halls," he said.

Shriberg also suggested offering more activities at night in the halls.

Food Services

Shriberg said that the students' desire for multiple meal plans "appears to be a reasonable request." Furthermore, he said that most campuses offer multiple meal plans, and a similar program could be developed at Villanova without any additional costs.

He also advised that "food should be linked to the residence program in a more meaningful way."

Many Catholic colleges have co-ed facilities. They usually are safer, quieter, treated better and have less inappropriate sexual activity."

- Evaluator Dr. Arthur Shriberg

Security

"Security is a most distressing situation. People have very little faith in the security system and consider it arbitrary and capricious," said Shriberg. He cited, "Students and staff told me rulings and interpretations come and go . . . I heard too many stories demonstrating Security's lack of common sense."

Shriberg also criticized Security's publication, "Parking by Permit Only," which he described as a "poor public relations piece."

However, Shriberg did say that Security officers "can be educated to become part of the campus" with the aid of Student Life and "campus linkages of all sorts." He also advised that Security report to Neville. "Security people are trained to accept orders and need the kind of orders they will get from Student Life, stressing linkages, listening skills and communication," he said.

In addition, Shriberg recommended the hiring of students for Security jobs "to start building bridges" between students and Security. Currently, "Students believe the Security officers are out to 'get' them," he said.

The "Villanova Way"

After speaking with students, Shriberg said, "There seems to be two aspects to the 'Villanova Way' [as students call it]: Students are treated like children and nothing ever gets changed."

Shriberg said students think that if they try to solve problems on their own, "they were ignored," but if their parents intervened, "the problem would be solved."

He continued, "I also heard several stories about inflexible administrators and staff members who would not bend a rule even when common sense dictated otherwise. The students stated they are usually treated as 'bad' children."

Shriberg suggested creating an ombudsman who would aid students with their problems and serve as a link between students and the administration.

In a related issue, Shriberg stated that "Many members of the Student Government feel ignored." He advised the University to deal with major issues raised by Student Government and to "respect and support the elected student leaders.

"I am told this year [1986-87] you have a stronger Student Government than in recent years. I think this is to be applauded and is something you should want to build and support," said Shriberg.

Diversity of Students

Shriberg recommended several steps to create a more diverse student body and criticized several areas which dealt with this subject.

For example, Shriberg said, "If Villanova University wants to increase the number of black students on campus, and I salute you for trying, you must build support systems to retain them . . . or you will continue to have substantial attrition."

He also said that the University had "brought in quite a few more black students" for the 1986-87 school year.

In addition, Shriberg stated "Students of other religious traditions do not feel particularly well-supported on campus . . . I think you need to do more if Villanova University is serious about bringing in people from other traditions."

Also, Shriberg held "real concerns" about the International Student Advisement Program. "You don't have a host family program, an orientation program, airport pick-ups, and the International Association is weak. If there is a guiding philosophy or a set of goals for International Student Advisement, it is not evident.

"You are not providing adequate services to these students," he concluded.

Shriberg also questioned why foreign students were brought in "primarily from China or India" and enrolled in "one of two specific academic programs.

"These international students are also tremendous resources for the rest of the Villanova community, but are not being included in campus life," said Shriberg. He recommended creating a "task force" to "review the goals" of the program.

He also advised that a day-care service and more social activities should be available for "adult learners." Shriberg said that more ways should be found to "integrate the adults" with college-age students. "This would help the quality of life on campus, in general, since Villanova University is so homogenous," he stated.

Student Activities

Shriberg described the Student Activities staff as "impressive." He praised the yearbook, radio station WKVU, the Association of Commuting Students and the Villanovan, and said, "Many of your clubs appear to function well." He also stated that Student Activities offers an "extensive menu" of clubs and organizations.

However, "Many of the clubs and organizations do not have any space and several are crowded into substandard space," he stated. Shriberg said this problem could be solved if Connelly Center were expanded.

Shriberg was also concerned about "the quality of curricular life" on campus. "Intellectual, cultural and even social activities need expansion and a different planning model . . . This area needs to be restructured, and you need to develop a richer menu of co-curricular activities with more seminars, more theme days . . . "

He also stated, "When I reviewed your student activities menu, I didn't know I was on a Catholic campus!" More programs dealing with issues such as peace and justice should be created in order to "reflect the basic Catholicity of Villanova.

"The students shouldn't be expected to handle this effort on their own," said Shriberg. He recommended the creation of a "University Task Force for Co-Curricular Programming" to handle this issue.

Security is a most distressing situation. People have very little faith in the security system and consider it arbitrary and capricious.

- Evaluator Dr. Arthur Shriberg

Off-Campus Students

Shriberg praised the Off-Campus Residence Office, stating, "The personal concern and service there is wonderful." However, he said more could be done to "find listings and help to mediate problems."

Also, services need to be increased for off-campus residents, many of whom are "lonely, uninvolved and uninformed," said Shriberg. "Many new efforts will be required to bring the off-campus residents to campus for participation in co-curricular programming," he stated.

Fraternities

Shriberg recommended that the University "accept fraternities as a reality and work with them." He stated that there are some good fraternities which should be "rewarded and encouraged," while others "need to be firmly dealt with."

Shriberg opposed the "freshman rush" early in the first semester, which existed when he visited but was abolished in the spring. "The message given to a student the first week of school is to join a fraternity. What many students feel you are really saying is to get off campus, because that is what fraternities mean at Villanova University," he said.

In addition, non-sanctioned fraternity houses should also be "dealt with," said Shriberg.

Orientation

Shriberg praised the freshman orientation program as an enjoyable experience which seems to prepare students for campus life. However, he said the orientation process should continue until "sometime after" the first semester.

Faculty Concerns

"The faculty I met with complained about the quality of programming on campus, and I feel they need to be part of a new mechanism that has responsibility for co-curricular programming. They need to be involved with most aspects of Student Life," said Shriberg. He also stated that there was a "communication problem" between faculty and Student Life staff.

Another issue of faculty concern was the difference in raises and benefits between faculty and administrators, according to Shriberg. "I recommend you give faculty and administrators the same benefit package. It is divisive for a few dollars to create a different class of citizens on the . . . campus," he said.

Judicial Affairs

"You have too many cases and, probably, too many rules. Clearly, the rules should be simplified and then consistently enforced," said Shriberg in his assessment of Judicial Affairs.

Shriberg also questioned the allowance of "mercy appeals," stating that on most campuses, "factual discrepancies or some charge of bias" are the only grounds for appeal.

"I heard several times from students that they believe a call from a parent with a special plea for 'mercy' will get them off the hook. There is a feeling that the system can be bypassed. This should stop," he stated.

Connelly Center

Shriberg described Connelly Center as a "show place" for the University. "It is very well run, is creatively designed, the food service is stellar, the listening rooms, the new travel bureau and the game rooms are all state of the art. It is a first class facility," he stated.

Also, Shriberg implied that the student center should be open more hours. He said that the center "is run as a business" and is only open "at the most cost-efficient times . . . If it is truly a University resource, then [it] needs to expand its hours," he concluded.

Other Issues

Shriberg praised the music department, calling it "an excellent program with a strong administrative director." He was also "impressed" by the Pep Band's "spirit and sense of community, as well as their music." In all, he described the program as a model for all co-curricular activities.

The peace and justice program also received high praise from Shriberg, who commended it as "superb." He stated, "You are starting to deal with the crucial issues of our time. The numbers of students involved are small and it's an uphill battle, but you appear to be heading in the right direction."

on the original Faculty Research Program Committee that initiated, organized and established policy for what is now the Faculty Summer Research Program.

Later in the 1970s Ziegler co-chaired the Task Force on Graduate Programs for the presidentially-appointed Commission on University Structure and Programs, a commission then charged with the responsibility of examining every department or program on campus.

"After 19 years of administration at the departmental level, I welcome my new responsibilities," said Ziegler. The Graduate School of Liberal Arts and Sciences currently consists of 24 different degree programs and enrolls over 1,600 students.

"In terms of the future of the Graduate School, I intend to do everything possible to promote academic excellence in existing graduate programs," said Ziegler.

"As I see it, research and scholarship are an integral part of achieving and maintaining such excellence.

"As academic space and resources permit in the future, I believe that there should be room in the Graduate School of Liberal Arts and Sciences for several small, top-quality doctorate programs in those academic departments," said Ziegler.

Ziegler said that one of the great strengths of the Graduate School is the diversity of its department and program offerings. "The University needs to continue and support that diversity in the future," said Ziegler. "As the new dean, I welcome the opportunity to help [illegible]

Brach discusses Student Government

By NOEL E. FALCO

In a Sept. 3 interview Phil Brach, Student Government president, reported his plans for the year.

"I took two courses during the summer session in order to have a lighter load now to work on Student Government affairs. I did a lot of administrative work this summer, organizing the different departments and files," Brach said.

Brach stated that one project he worked on extensively this summer was "the creation of a political journal for national political issues" that would be a quarterly publication operated at the college level with funds supplied by the Center for National Policy, located in Washington, D.C.

"I lobbied a lot in Washington along with Student Senator John Lewis for the money to start this project," added Brach.

According to Brach, the directory was also a big project and that currently the project is "way ahead of schedule since information was sent to upperclassmen during the summer."

Brach said that he also attended the National Student Government workshop with Terese Fusco, vice president, and 200 student government body presidents from across the country. The workshop was a half-week project that took place in Georgetown and allowed student governments to compare projects and work styles.

Speaking of issues that Student Government is concerned with this year, Brach said that there is "not one No. 1 issue for the whole Student Government, but one for every department."

In the academic affairs department, the biggest concern is to review academic advisement. Secondary issues involve following up projects from last year, such as the implementation of the new grading system, academic scholarships and academic financial aid.

Brach said that the top priority in the internal affairs department is the implementation of the "damp campus" policy and the sponsoring of "responsible alcoholic social events and on-campus social life.

"We worked on this toward the end of last year. It was a big thing I ran on in the campaign. It is a mandated issue the students are asking for, so I will do everything possible for that," added Brach.

Secondary issues in this department will be co-educational dormitories, visitation policy and a used book exchange. Also, there will be plans to investigate campus Security and continue work on vandalism and environmental issues.

A new issue for Brach is the residential life rule codes: "Residential life is too overly legalistic. We will work toward a simplification of rules . . . Right now they are creating more problems for themselves then they're solving."

In the external affairs office, the main concern is to continue to work through the "town and gown" committee in order to lessen the housing problem, to improve voter registration, to research traffic problems at Lancaster and Ithan avenues, to speed up the installation of traffic signals and to improve overall traffic safety on campus.

Phil Brach, Student Government president, discussed his organization's agenda for the coming year in an interview this week.

Brach said another new issue he is working on is to convince local bars to have certain nights when 18- to 20-year-olds are allowed in without drinking. He added that in researching the legality of the idea, if it is illegal, it will be "a tough fight. If not, it will just be a matter of convincing the bars . . . It will be a rotation system in which each bar only volunteers once a month."

One final comment from Brach was that the budgetary affairs committee is working with the Senate to keep the tuition increase much lower in percentage. "There will be an increase but it is a question of how much. You won't see a double digit percentage in increase," Brach predicted.

Tailgating policy questioned

By NOEL E. FALCO

"There is no change in the tailgating policy, and the Student Life organization is the same as last year," said Bill McDonough, director of marketing and promotions, in an interview Sept. 8 to answer confusion concerning the need for football tickets to tailgate.

McDonough sent out letters over the summer encouraging students to purchase season tickets that stated, "This year, in order to enjoy the tailgating before each home game, it will be necessary for you to have a ticket to the football game . . . These football tickets will allow you to all of the tailgating privileges before each game."

In order to clear up confusion, McDonough stated, "I wanted to impress the students to purchase tickets . . . not stated in the letter, because form letters only have so much room, but implied was that tailgating comes along with the football game. If there wasn't a football game, there wouldn't be tailgating."

He said, in a previous interview, that, "The hope was the kids would go to the game after tailgating . . . We want the kids to go to the game."

McDonough said the only requirement is that students buy season tickets if they want tickets for Parents' Weekend and Homecoming, but that sometime before the first game, those without season tickets might be able to buy tickets for these games if they are not sold out.

"We really felt that students who bought season tickets should get first crack at the games," he said.

McDonough added that as of Sept. 8, with three weeks left to go before the first game, more student season tickets have been sold than for [illegible] year. The goal for student season tickets sales is 2,500, and [illegible] close to 2,000.

"We are going to sell more tickets than any other year," said McDonough. "It means the students are behind us . . . I don't think it has anything to do with the letter . . . we are a 1AA team playing some good teams this year."

As to the mix-up over tailgating, McDonough said that Gary Bonas, assistant director for Student Activities, and Student Activities were not involved.

Bonas said that the idea had never been explained to him, and that he would encourage such a practice, except that he is not certain how to implement control over such an accessible area. He added that the policy will be the same as last year.

Students questioned on the confusion all seemed to be under the impression that tickets were needed to tailgate, but most bought their tickets to support the football team, regardless of tailgating.

One student, Mike Kearney, said, "You have to have a football ticket to tailgate — that's what the letter says . . . I bought a ticket to support the football team. Some of my friends have bought tickets just so they can enjoy tailgating on Saturday morning. They [students] should want to definitely go out and support the football team."

Sophomore Laurence Briody stated, "I bought them because the indication I got from the letter was that you couldn't get into the tailgates without them. I do plan on going to the games, but I did it to assure that I would get into the tailgates . . . another reason was because my parents might go to Parents' Weekend . . . I feel that I was misled. I don't particularly feel real upset about it, because I would have gone to the games anyway."

Other students added that they, too, had bought tickets in support of the football team.

However, Sophomore Rich Mejzak said, "I believe it to be out-and-out deception. It's a concept that's leading to profit . . . They should try to stir pride in the football team. They're using alcohol as a lure. The same thing that they prohibit, they're using for their own benefit."

Ned Thompson, also a sophomore, added, "It should not be the policy of a Catholic school to mislead its students and parents."

National News Notes

Rev. Curran to teach at Cornell

The Rev. Charles E. Curran, the theologian who was suspended from the Catholic University of America last year, is now teaching Catholic studies at Cornell University.

Curran has created controversy with conservative Catholics with his progressive views about abortion, contraception and divorce, arguing that under some circumstances they may not be absolutely wrong.

The church could revoke Curran's teaching mandate, making it impossible for him to teach at Catholic University again. Curran, however, refuses "to change the substance" of his views.

Curran is striving for accessibility and humanity in the church. "There are problems that need talking about," he said. "Questions pertaining to life, death and human sexuality are central to our lives as human beings and Christians."

Student named to board of trustees

A 21-year-old senior at Montclair State College of New Jersey recently became the first student in the school's history to have full voting rights as a member of the board of trustees, according to a Newark Star-Ledger report.

Michael Rodak of Hackensack, NJ., had been involved with the issues of student representation since his freshman year and was sworn in during the Montclair board's first meeting of the new fiscal year.

The law which gives Rodak the right to vote with the eight other members of the board was signed by Gov. Thomas Kean last fall and makes New Jersey one of three states, including Pennsylvania and Massachusetts, to have this type of student legislation.

Letter says Libya funded liberals

A recent fundraising letter signed by the College Republican National Committee (CRNC) claimed that Libya's leader Moammar Khadafy has given leftist U.S. campus groups $300,000 to "turn innocent young students away from their parents" and to "turn America back into the seething cauldron of disrespect and violence of the late '60s."

The antidote to the problem, the signer of the letter said, was to give money to the College Republicans.

The letter is signed by David Miner, the College Republican's former national chairperson, now the political director of the North Carolina Jack Kemp for President campaign. Miner admits writing the letter, but otherwise refused to comment.

The groups that supposedly received the money, as well as the U.S. State Department, deny Libya has funneled money to any American college groups.

New grading system decision still pending

By SHARON A. WATERS

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, is currently considering two University Senate resolutions regarding a grading system incorporating minuses into the present "plus" system and the distribution of a written explanation of grades at the beginning of each semester, according to Carolyn C. Lea, recording secretary for the University Senate.

The Senate passed both proposals March 20 and forwarded the two resolutions to Driscoll April 4. According to Lea, a letter was distributed stating that a decision is expected in the near future.

According to Lea, if Driscoll approves the two resolutions, he will also decide when the new policies would go into effect.

Arguments supporting the new grading system included more accurate grading and stopping grade inflation. Dr. Bernard J. Downey, former dean of the Graduate School, objected to the resolution in March because he thought the distinction between grades with both pluses and minuses would not be significant enough to allow for a margin of error in grading.

Dr. Angelo Armenti Jr., dean of University College, agreed in March, yet said he considered any grading errors to be minimal because there would be more degrees of grading.

Arguments for a written definition of grades included enabling students to understand more clearly how their teachers defined grades and developing a common agreement about grading between students and teachers.

University upgrades residence halls

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

The installation of new washing machines and dryers was among the numerous improvements to the resident halls completed this summer. Not only were old machines replaced, but there are also plans for several new facilities in Sullivan and Stanford halls, according to Christopher M. Janosik, director of Residence Life.

After a seven-year contract with Solon Automated Services expired June 30, Villanova contracted with Caleco Laundries, a local company based in West Chester, Pa., following a competitive bidding process. Caleco Laundries then installed the new machines during the month of July.

Solon Automated Services made several promises in their bid to continue services, but they were rejected. Janosik stated, "Solon Automated Services had not been very prompt with response to requests for repair and had not responded to requests to replace machinery that was habitually breaking down."

The new washing machines and dryers cost 75 cents a load, an increase of 25 cents from the previous machines. However, Janosik stressed that the drying cycle is for a full hour, one-half hour longer than the previous service. "Students will be getting a complete service," stated Janosik.

Many students said that tidy facilities that effectively clean clothing are worth the extra cost.

Design work for new laundry facilities in Sullivan and Stanford halls has been completed, said Janosik. Washing machines will be located in the old photography laboratory area of Sullivan Hall and a remaining portion of the old cafeteria in Stanford Hall. No actual construction on these facilities has begun, but the work primarily involves "just running some water lines" into the rooms. Janosik stated that he hopes the facilities will be completed by Fall Break.

Additional improvements to the dormitories include the recent installation of vertical blinds in Stanford, Sullivan and Sheehan halls. Residence Life also recarpeted Fedigan, O'Dwyer and Good Counsel halls, 90 rooms in Stanford Hall and the ground floor of Sullivan Hall.

Asbestos found

"It is my understanding that the third floor was off limits after June 12 while the cleanup and testing were done," said Martin.

"At around the same time we received the report from Clayton ... persons we don't know the identity of made reports to OSHA [Occupational Safety and Health Agency] ... reports that there were possibly unsafe conditions because of the asbestos in the building. That prompted us to take further steps" to ensure saftey, stated Martin.

Martin said it was his understanding that the air quality in St. Mary's Hall was within safe levels, though, after the first cleanup.

ABK Environmental, a test company, was brought in around Aug. 1 and did more air testing. According to Martin, ABK Environmental recommended that Villanova replace shower curtains and mattresses, which the University did, and that the University have the third floor corridor ceiling encapsulated.

The asbestos was not removed (the EPA only requires grammar schools and high schools to remove asbestos, Martin said) but, instead, a heavy latex paint was used to encapsulate the ceiling to ensure that no asbestos could come down, according to Martin.

Between Aug. 19 and 28, Martin said, a company known as DAS did further cleanup work.

Immediately before the building opened, ABK Environmental administered two tests of the air quality in St. Mary's Hall. The less sophisticated of the two tests, called the PCM test, indicated that the amount of asbestos fiber in the air was within "permissible limits," said Martin. A more sophisticated and expensive test called TEM was also used. Martin said that the results "came out extremely well ... at times zero [asbestos fibers per cubic centimeter]."

Martin's unofficial guessumate" of the cost of the entire operation was between $100,000 and $150,000.

Asked if the asbestos could be loosened by students throwing balls against the ceiling, Martin said, "My understanding is that the R.A.s have counselled the students to leave the ceilings alone ... and we will continue to monitor that."

Martin thought, though, that it would require drilling into the ceiling to cause a problem.

The Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., assistant to the vice president for Student Life.

Martin also stated that a 1984 survey done by Clayton Environmental indicated that other buildings on campus do contain asbestos.

A March 1986 Villanovan article quoted Thomas N. Trucks, director of Maintenance, as saying with regard to asbestos in buildings on campus, "Asbestos is only dangerous when it is airborne and breathable or could become airborne. It is not a health hazard as long as it is contained."

Martin was unaware of what, if any, further plans the University has with regard to asbestos on campus.

Alumni Hall roof repaired

By CAROLYN R. MIRABILE

The roof of Alumni Hall is currently being replaced at a cost of $60,000 because, "there were severe problems dealing with leaks in the roof," Thomas N. Trucks, director of Maintenance, said this week.

Trucks stated, "The company started working on the repairs at the end of July and they are expected to finish sometime this week."

At the end of last semester, Trucks requested money in the budget so that the roof of Alumni Hall could be totally replaced. Once the budget was approved, John Muller Roofing, Inc. was contracted to begin working on Alumni.

Trucks stated, "We will also be doing some work on some of the other buildings that are having problems." According to Trucks, Maintenance tries to correct all problems that they become aware of as soon as possible.

Third-floor residents of Alumni Hall have complained of noise problems in the early morning from the construction.

Bell continues intersection work

By DANTE J. SCALA

A construction project in the intersection of Lancaster and Ithan avenues is designed to alleviate area demands by the end of October, according to Charles E. Mahan, assistant manager of the conduit department of Bell of Pennsylvania.

Currently, workers are restoring the road according to Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT) regulations, said Mahan. They recently completed the rebuilding of an approximately 40-year-old manhole as part of the project.

The road restoration should be done by the end of next week, weather permitting, stated Mahan. After that is completed, workers will begin installing the new cables, he said.

The installation process will not require as much space on the road as the restoration has, said Mahan.

The project began in late August, according to Mahan.

New dormitories

Villanova meet a township variance that requires the University to provide one parking space for every three students living on campus.

After many setbacks, including an appeal from surrounding residents of Radnor Township, Villanova has agreed not to build any additional residence halls on south campus after the construction of the proposed dormitories. The University has also consented to reduce the number of floors in each dorm from four to three.

After Villanova received preliminary approval from the Radnor Township Board of Commissioners for the construction plans, a group of Radnor Township residents, who live adjacent to south campus, appealed the decision to the Radnor Township Zoning Board on the grounds that Villanova was violating a township variance.

According to township law, Villanova must provide 2,000 square feet for each living space available. Stack said the University quoted the entire University property to determine the footage. The township residents, however, appealed that Villanova could only include the south campus property. The zoning board upheld the Board of Commissioners decision and indirectly (because the University was not named in the court case) ruled in favor of Villanova.

Phil Brach, Student Government president, said, "It's a shame. The University was sincerely trying to build these dorms as quickly as they could in order to take students out of the neighborhoods. The neighbors hurt themselves the most by delaying for over a year."

Brach also mentioned that the University incurred added expenses in order to build the residence halls faster. Villanova elected to forego the bidding process and hired a construction manager, a more expensive option, according to Brach.

Pay attention to evaluator

The recent evaluation of student life at Villanova University by Dr. Arthur Shriberg of Xavier University produced a 27-page report described by its author as "a snapshot taken from a specific camera at one point in time." In light of this, University administrators and the larger evaluation committee would do well to recall the old saying, a picture is worth a thousand words.

Shriberg spoke highly of administrators and many programs. However, he also had several worthwhile recommendations. The suggestion perhaps most worthy of immediate action is that Villanova "vigorously attack" the campus' "major alcohol problem." Although strides have been made with the hiring of a full-time drug educator and the development of the Saferides program, more professional resources should be dedicated to V.U. students who need help. And the University desperately needs to formulate a responsible, workable policy about alcohol that is carried through in the student life program and the educational process.

Not surprisingly, Shriberg also advised that the University provide more on-campus housing, along with coed facilities from which Villanova could reap many benefits. Additionally, as Shriberg recognized in just a short visit here, substandard maintenance and living conditions in the dorms demand long overdue upgrading.

Finally, in terms of the Villanova community, more measures need to be taken to attract and keep a more diverse student body and to make the faculty a more integral part of student life.

Villanova administrators and evaluation committee: Take heed of Shriberg's astute observations and recommendations. Perform the necessary steps to improve our snapshot; do not just file it away in the photo album.

Why celebrate?

Somewhere on Route 13 in Delaware stands a billboard which reads, "In case of nuclear war, school prayer will resume." Some may think that sign is funny; others may disagree. But no matter the reaction, each time people freely read and interpret that message their rights under the Constitution are upheld. And while around the world, people are fighting for those same rights everyday, Americans take them for granted. Americans should stop, examine what they have and celebrate those rights.

Believe it or not, the United States makes a mark as one of the few countries to presume innocence until proven guilty. In Mexico, the Soviet Union, Iran, Iraq and many other nations there are no questions asked; the verdict is automatically guilty. Even Great Britain presumes guilt until the accused is proven innocent.

In the United States, Americans have the right to voice their opinions, to lobby for changes in the law and to demonstrate to get their message across. However, those same actions would result in arrests, the use of teargas and possibly even death in countries such as South Korea, the Soviet Union and South Africa.

Furthermore, while the people of the Soviet Union read the nation's government-censored newspaper, Pravda, Americans can count on their newspapers to act as watchdogs of the government. Certainly, both Watergate and Irangate are prime examples of freedom of the press in the United States.

And the Constitution provides numerous other rights which Americans enjoy daily, without even thinking about them: the right to vote, the right to freedom of religion, the right to representation. The list goes on.

The 200th Anniversary of the Constitution is Sept. 17. Celebrate it.

Amnesty International
Working to free prisoners

To the Editor:

The 1986 Amnesty International "Conspiracy of Hope" concert tour made Amnesty International more of a household name in the United States than ever before. Yet now, for a vast majority of people, the concerts are the only thing that can be related to the human rights organization. A great number of people say they loved the shows but still are unaware of what Amnesty International is and does.

Amnesty International is a worldwide Human Rights Organization which works for:

1) the release of prisoners of conscience; men, women and children detained anywhere in the world for their beliefs, ethnic origins or sex, provided they have neither used nor advocated violence.

2) fair and prompt trials for all political prisoners.

3) an end to torture and executions.

Villanova University has a chapter of Amnesty International on campus. As a college group, its main activity is to write letters, via the Urgent Action Letter Network, asking for the release of prisoners of conscience.

The Villanova chapter will also have guest speakers, various media presentations and other human rights related activities. The chapter will meet Mondays at 4:30 p.m. in the Center for Peace and Justice located in the basement of Sullivan Hall starting on Sept. 14.

Now that you are basically familiar with Amnesty International's basic purpose, please join us in working the most basic of human rights, freedom.

American Catholics need to be heard

By SUSAN TOLVE

In 10 years, Pope John Paul II has traveled approximately 320,000 miles, more than any other Pope. His beliefs on Catholic teachings have for the most part, however, stood still.

During the Pope's visit to the United States from Sept. 10-19, "He will remind Catholics in the United States that they cannot individually choose which teachings to obey and which to ignore," according to the Sept. 6, 1987, issue of the New York Times.

People need to be reminded of things that they forget. But many Americans who have strayed from strict Catholicism did not simply forget that they should follow all of the teachings of the Church. Instead, they have intentionally rejected what their consciences cannot accept.

In ten years, Pope John Paul II has traveled 320,000 miles, more than any other pope.

For instance, polls indicate that over 80 percent of America's 53 million Catholics do not follow the Church's teachings on birth control. Other areas of controversy within the Church include limits on theologians' academic freedom, remarriage, women clergy, optional celibacy for clergy and homosexuality.

The media loves to stress this controversy; it is after all what makes the news interesting. "The Pope's coming to America and he's facing controversy from within the Church as well as without," ABC said to promote its series last week on the evening news.

On the other hand, Vatican officials downplay the controversy. "The idea that there is tension between Rome and the Church in the United States was promoted by a tiny group of American Catholics," said the president of the Vatican Diplomatic School, Archbishop Rigali, according to the Sept. 8, 1987, issue of the New York Times.

Vatican officials are aware of the positive qualities manifested in the American Catholic Church. Attendance at Mass is higher in the United States than in any country in Western Europe. Top advisor to the Pope, Archbishop Jan P. Schotte said, "The unanimous perception [of the Church in the U.S.] is of a very dynamic, very devout and generous church."

And American Catholics, even most of those who dissent from teachings, respect and admire the pope. Catholics will come out in large numbers to hear his message and many unable to see him in person, will stay glued to the television set. Respect and admiration for the Pope, nevertheless, should not be confused with conformity to his teachings.

Pope John Paul's agenda during his ten-day visit to the United States includes the deliverance of many speeches, a prayerful meeting in South Carolina (in which Protestants will predominate), numerous closed-door meetings with American clergy and the much publicized exchange between the pope and 200 Jewish leaders scheduled for today.

Problems erupted in June between Jewish organizations and the Vatican concerning the Pope's visit with Kurt Waldheim, an alleged Nazi war criminal. When Jewish leaders warned that today's meeting would be canceled unless they could meet with Pope John Paul beforehand, a meeting was quickly arranged at Castel Gandolfo, the Pope's summer residence. Why can't the Pope be as eager for dialogue with those in his own church?

In March, 18 American bishops, four of them cardinals, took part in a four-day meeting with Vatican officials and the pope. Another shorter meeting was held this summer involving less prelates.

At both meetings, the bishops discussed American Catholicism, including the dissent and dissatisfaction within the Church. But, can a bishop accurately express the beliefs of feminists or people approving of second marriages?

No one expects the Pope to come to the United States condoning homosexuality or lifting the Church's ban on artificial birth control. What is needed is dialogue — dialogue between the leader and his followers.

The Pope listens to his clergy, he listens to Jewish leaders, he even listened to Waldheim and Yasir Arafat, the leader of the terrorist Palestinian Liberation Organization. But this week and next, the pope will not listen to the common people of America.

Not only is the pope's trip extremely time consuming, it is also very costly—about $20 million to be exact.

American Catholics respect and admire the Pope. Why can't the pope respect and admire American Catholics enough to spend one day of his visit simply sitting and talking with feminists, ex-priests, theologians seeking more freedom or couples struggling to understand the Pope's stand on birth control?

Americans will have ample opportunity to hear what the Pope has to say because he is giving 49 speeches during his visit. Those speeches as well as the entire trip required extensive planning by the pope and the Vatican. The New York Times reported on Sept. 8, 1987, that John Paul II began writing down ideas for speeches to be delivered in the United States about one year ago, even though he had 12 other countries to visit before he came here.

Not only is the Pope's trip extremely time consuming, it is also very costly — about $20 million to be exact.

But what American Catholics have to say is so valuable that the Pope should just stop and listen to his own followers.

Telethon relies on pity

By JIM FASULO

When comedian Jerry Lewis made the transition from strictly the off-beat goofy sidekick of Dean Martin to a more straight character relying on the funny backdrop, many saw Lewis' effectiveness in the comedy picture business decline. The unpredictable gags and gestures were gone, and with them the level of humor in Lewis' films.

Similarly, Lewis' straight man routine on his Labor Day Telethon for Muscular Dystrophy Association [MDA] was also unimpressive. Why? Because the mixture of this own awkward humor in delicate situations, and then subsequent teary-eyed moments with muscular dystrophy (MD) children is not a good combination. The synthetic aspect of the telethon lies in the quick change of mood of Lewis (and others) from the showman who commands the stars to a somber spokesperson fighting off the tearful moments.

Lewis' personal conviction to the MD cause and the children are not to be questioned, rather it is his method of reaching the audience that should be criticized. Over and over, the viewing audience is shown film clips of sad stories involving MD victims, unfortunately with not so pleasant endings. Yes, many of the participants in the segments are overcome with emotion and breakdown. Given their disheartening situation, the tears are an expected expression of their pain.

It is at this point that the telethon directors and the host use these sympathetic moments to their advantage. After the segment, Lewis goes to the studio audience and finds the subject of his touching clip, presenting him to the national audience as well. Now it is Lewis who is nearly brought to tears from the uphill battle of the MD victim and it is moments such as these where the home viewers are most vulnerable (as far as making a substantial donation).

To come across a situation close to the one described, is not difficult for the viewer — Lewis is careful to repeat every one-half hour the uneasy picture of MD, Pity of the suffering MD victims is the focus of the telethon, and with this approach they are unrelenting.

The short segment involving the young boy (MDA's poster child) is repeated later in the telethon and the same emotion is solicited from Lewis and most likely from his viewing audience as well.

A few moments later, on a film segment, a celebrity reads a letter sent to Lewis involving the sad plight of a MD patient. As the celebrity was moved to tears, the writer and quite possibly the viewing audience were left with a sinking feeling — so severe that pausing in response to the telethon's request would not seem right.

After the feeling of pity, an additional blow to your conscience is a far more troubling one; guilt. If we had hesitated before the pledge, the opportunity to relieve our guilt if we call now is in most cases too hard to turn down.

The local aspect of the telethon was more straightforward and less glamorous, yet all part of the big package. It is disputable whether the telethon is a show (filled with big-time entertainment) first, and a fundraiser second. Twenty-two hours is far too long to discuss the problems and scienctific dilemnas of MD. More than often, though, the featured star will perform with little mention of his association with the cause, or why he is there.

Finally, there are two aspects of the telethon most deserving of criticism. Telethon workers are constantly stating, "Time is running out, so call your pledge in now." Contributions to the MD charity would certainly not be refused after the show expired, and this frame of reference confuses the viewer.

Telethon workers are constantly stating, "Time is running out so call your pledge in now." Contributions to the muscular dystrophy charity would certainly not be refused after the show expired and this frame of reference confuses the viewer.

Overwhelming pity and empathy for the victims of a disease or a social condition is often the target of fundraising efforts, and Jerry Lewis style is entirely in these bounds.

Concentrating on the public's appeal to an emotional and heart-breaking story, Lewis is successful in a financial aspect each year by his standards. He will not relent until there is a cure for his cause and he is happy if he can raise one more dollar than the last year. The show goes on.

Football tickets not needed to tailgate

To the Editor:

I would like to make a service announcement to the Villanova student population. I am referring to the letters sent out over the summer by the department of athletics' office of marketing and promotion. These letters signed by Bill McDonough, director of the department, state that " . . . in order to enjoy tailgating this year before each home game, it will be necessary for you to have a ticket to the football game."

Let me begin by saying this is not true. I am sorry for those of you who bought tickets under such a false premise.

The reason I am writing this letter is that I am a vice-chairperson of the Tailgate Management Team. Along with the Student Life division, the Tailgate Management Team provides the leadership for Saturday morning tailgaters. (Sorry, there will be no tailgates before the Thursday evening game.) Our job is to organize the registration of tailgates, to assign tables, to maintain control throughout the three-hour tailgating and then to close down all kegs and clear off the field in a timely fashion.

While we are aware that the legal drinking age in Pennsylvania is 21, it would be unrealistic and impossible for us to ensure every individual on the field consuming alcohol is of age. For this reason, I find it particularly amusing trying to imagine how the athletic department would proof each tailgating student, parent and alumnus for a football ticket.

. . . I find it particularly amusing trying to imagine how the athletic department would proof each tailgating student, parent and alumnus for a football ticket.

I understand that the athletic department needs to increase ticket sales and attendance because, after all, the purpose of gathering each Saturday afternoon is to go to the football game, not to see how drunk one can get by 1:30 p.m. However, it seems to me that a man in McDonough's position could have devised a ticket sales promotion that did not involve deliberately deceiving the student body.

European travel aids more than studies

By THERESA JONES

Imagine Christmas and New Year's in Frankfurt, West Germany; the month of February in Munich, the home of Oktoberfest; Easter in Jerusalem; a birthday in Salzburg, Austria; and 15 rolls of film covering six and one-half months and about a dozen countries.

That very briefly summarizes my semester in Europe. There is no such thing as a typical semester in Europe, because for every person in whichever city or country he or she chooses, the spectrum of opportunities is different.

For myself, choosing to study in Salzburg provided me a great starting point for further travel — not that that had any influence on my choice. No, of course not. But I certainly don't regret the trips to Italy, Hungary, Greece, Israel, Egypt, Liechtenstein, Berlin, Denmark.

It would be impossible to relate all of my experiences, and to say it was "great" or "fabulous" simply does not do it justice. It's like trying to capture the Alps in a picture as you stand in Liechtenstein, smack in between Australia and Switzerland. It just doen't cut it.

What I can do is encourage freshmen and sophomores to seriously consider a junior year abroad, and experience it for yourselves. For upperclassmen, perhaps a summer program or a few weeks backpacking is more reasonable. At any rate, "Let's Go, Europe" as the book says.

I went to study in German-speaking countries, Germany and Austria, but the amount of knowledge I gained above and beyond the language and culture is immeasurable.

I talked politics with Israelis, while the banks of the Jordan lay some 20 miles across the Dead Sea, plainly visible. You can believe their perspective is not the same as that of the Philadelphia Inquirer.

I experienced the feeling of East and West Berlin, which is a completely different thing than to understand that there is a wall which divides the city.

I visited museums, but even better I saw the actual buildings, paintings, sites and places which up until then had only been pictures in a textbook or slides on the wall. A walk through the Coliseum or a camel ride around the Egyptian Pyramids at Giza make textbooks obsolete.

I learned a lot about myself as well. While I was in a program with plenty of other American students, I was still very much on my own in a completely new culture.

One has to learn to be open to some things never considered before, like going to the home of your taxi driver for "Egyptian hospitality," in this case a dinner of buffalo meat (which actually wasn't that bad, and that comes from a near-vegetarian!) I loved my independence, traveling with just a backpack, and the interaction with as many foreign people, places, events (and foods!) as I could find.

Though I was learning everywhere I went, I was having an awful lot of fun doing it. Part of the German cultural experience has to include the beer halls, the beer gardens and the bakeries for which the land is famous.

The Austrians love to have Fests anytime, and believe me, it is not difficult to entertain yourself if you have a sense of adventure.

Friends ask me, "How was it in Europe?" and the reason I cannot say much is that there is just too much to say. I have been spending hours assembling my scrapbook, and for every picture from those 15 rolls of film, there is a story to go with it — stories

O.C. chronicles program

By SUSAN E. CORCORAN

As I nervously opened the letter I had waited so long to hold, a million questions raced through my mind. Did I make it? If I did, will I be good enough? Will they like me? Will I make friends?

Insecurity surrounded me as I read the letter that stated I was selected to be an orientation counselor for Orientation '87.

The excitement of being chosen lasted throughout my summer. I could not believe I had been chosen to be an O.C. I had wanted to be a part of the New Student Orientation program ever since I went through it freshman year, just one short year ago.

I was anxious, nervous and thrilled to be a part of such a special and unique program. Remembering freshman year so vividly, I recalled how my O.C. helped me. Now I had the chance to help other new students.

When I arrived at school about a week before the arrival of the new students, I found myself feeling like a freshman myself; moving into a new room with an unknown roommate, probably a senior who knew the ropes a little better than myself.

I felt lost and scared as I stepped into our first meeting. I held the same apprehension I felt on the first day of classes at a new school. Only a few faces were familiar, the rest a sea of smiles and laughter. A smile broke onto my face as well when I realized that I had no need to worry.

Everyone was genuinely friendly, not plastic smiles or quick nods of recognition, but truly nice people who were interested in meeting you.

Wandering around the meeting, I felt a tap on my shoulder, and I turned to face a smiling red-haired girl who was to be my roomie for orientation. She was a senior, and she did know more about life at VU than I did, but that turned out to be a major bonus for me. She immediately made me feel comfortable and accepted. A smile from her put me at ease at once.

When all the O.C.'s divided into their Steering Committee groups, I wandered away from my roommate, and sat with seven new strangers who would turn out to be my source of strength, support and laughter throughout orientation.

We were a group of unique, different people who, without orientation, would probably never have met. Three seniors, two juniors, and one sophomore (myself), all with totally separate interests and groups of friends, could not have gotten along any better if they tried.

Never before have I been introduced to a mixed assortment of people and become so close with them in such a short period of time. We did everything together from the early hours of the morning until very late at night.

The amount of information we learned throughout the week was never paled by the laughter we shared or the special times when we talked about each other's problems, secrets and dreams. I got to know each member of my steering group by not only watching them, but by talking with each person, one on one, learning what made them tick and what truly special people they are.

We became a family, involved with each other's lives in a small way, sharing each other's joy. They are friends I know I can count on forever.

As time continued, the steering groups began to branch out, and the entire orientation staff began to spend more time together. New friendships were made, old ones intensified.

I found myself enjoying the company of people I had only been acquainted with before, learning things about them that I had never known in the past. Making close friends with whom I could laugh and talk was a very special part of orientation. My family of seven grew to 120 people that I could seek out and talk to whenever I needed a friend.

As my week of training continued, my knowledge of what to do for the new students increased, and my anxiety of being unprepared began to fade as a new worry arose. Will I be able to give my new students all the information I have learned and make them feel accepted by the school and more importantly the people here?

I wanted to be a friend to them all and let them know that they could count on me for anything from advice on school concerns to personal problems. By Friday of orientation training, I was ready for the 21 new students whom I was to "orient."

Meeting the new students on the first day of orientation was probably one of the most tension filled days of my life. I was so nervous that they would not like

Computer fair exhibits wares

By JOE McGOWAN

On Sept. 16, UCIS (University Computing and Information Services) will once again sponsor its Computer Fair at the Villanova Room of Connelly Center. The fair, at which 10 computer manufacturers and vendors will be in attendance, will be held from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The purpose of the fair is, according to Dan McGee, manager of the Academic Services department of UCIS, to show off the latest in computers to all members of the Villanova community. The fair is directed especially toward the students, who will be able to talk with UCIS people about the computer hardware and software on display and discounts available on the equipment.

With this purpose in mind, UCIS will publish its Computer Buyer's Guide, which will be distributed at the fair to aid those in the market for computer equipment.

Among the major computer manufacturers with representatives at the fair will be IBM, Apple, Zenith and Radio Shack, and among the vendors will be Software City, Software Galleria, Pennsylvania Computers, Computers Plus and University Business Machines.

All of the participating vendors will offer student discounts that will be effective for at least 30 days after the fair.

Among the tables featuring the offerings of the manufacturers and vendors will be one manned by UCIS staffers, who will be there to answer questions on the displays and demonstrations and to assist faculty and students in selecting the computer best suited to their individual needs.

The UCIS computer fiar will be held Sept. 16, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Villanova Room.

UCIS: The network that is behind the terminal

By JOE MCGOWAN

BYTE LINE

University Computing and Information Services

Vol. 4 No. 2 — Villanova University — April, 1987

Published six times a year, the Byte Line is UCIS's newsletter detailing new computer developments and services offered by UCIS, as well as practical advice on computer and software purchases.

While in the late 1960s Villanova University's computer capabilities were divided into two centers, one for administrative services and the other for those academic, with the rise of computer usage and the computerization of more and more processes and systems, the need arose for a single center to collect and optimize the school's resources.

Thus was born UCIS, the University Computing and Information Services, an organization that is really more a network that handles nearly all of the university's computer needs.

UCIS has since grown into an intricate network with three public computer centers in Mendel, Bartley and Tolentine Halls, maintaining over 100 terminals and 60 personal computers. Demand has become so great for terminals and PCs that one of the three public sites is kept open 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

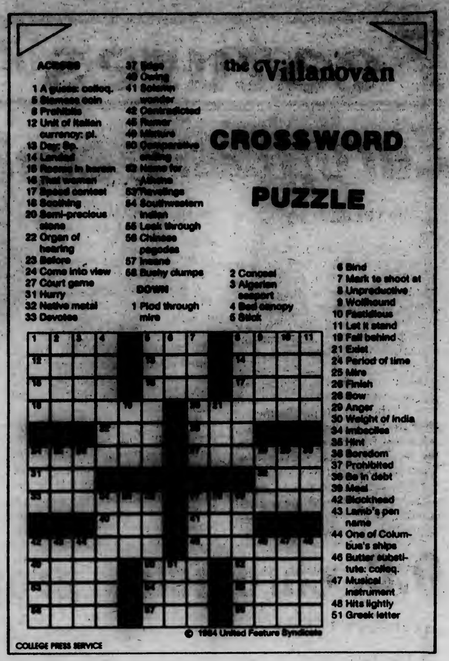
The core of the UCIS network consists of four mainframe computers, three VAX systems and one IBM. The three VAX computers are used largely for academic services and the IBM for administrative processing (such as student records, grades and course schedules) and large faculty statistical research projects.

All of these resources are linked together in a single network accessible to anyone with a valid account. Accounts are opened with UCIS and consist, in the case of student users, of the student number with an additional password, though the usage of the system does not entail any cost. Access to the system and the maintenance of accounts is the responsibility of the technical services department of UCIS.

In addition to technical services, there are five other departments which together comprise UCIS. The department of operations handles, not surprisingly, the operation of the mainframe computers while that of telecommunications runs the university phone system, including the transmission of both voice and data through the phone lines.

The department of administrative services maintains student record information, which the information center assists in UCIS's computer seminars and offers consultation and training to administration users.

The department of academic services has a whole host of responsibilities including: consultation for students, faculty and staff on the computer resources available at Villanova; the maintenance of the Mendel, Tolentine and Bartley computer sites (which includes the employment of over 80 student consultants); the preparation and offering of various computer seminars and workshops, and the publication of the Byte Line, the UCIS newsletter.



Over the summer UCIS increased the number of terminals at the public sites to meet the demand for use, but the demand may be such that a fourth VAX mainframe computer will be necessary.

In Room 55 of Mendel Hall, UCIS maintains its Resource Center. Here the training from the seminars and workshops takes place on a variety of computers. Samples of computer software available through UCIS are kept here so that those interested can try out the program on a machine at hand, and it is from this center that six times a year the Byte Line emerges.

With six subordinate departments, three public computing sites and responsibility for computerized student records and the campus telecommunications network, UCIS may seem a virtual empire, though not many people at Villanova seem to realize that all of it comes together under UCIS — a network that has grown with the use of the computer.

However, when I walked into my classroom and said hello, a little laugh swept over the group which caused a wave of relief to wash over me. It would be okay.

Four days later I found myself with 21 new people I could call friends. As the days passed we became a little family within my even bigger one. Each activity we did together made each member of the group feel that they were accepted, that they had indeed found a new home at Villanova.

I took the time to spend a few moments with each member of my group, to talk to them about any problems they were experiencing, or any concerns that they had. Many opened up to me and spoke of their fears, their home-sickness and their excitement. This was the best part of being an O.C.

When you talk to someone and help them feel better, they say "thank you" with a hug or warm smile. That was my reward for being an O.C. — and no material amount could top that feeling.

Orientation '87 was probably the best experience of my life for one main reason: the friends I made. Learning more about my school and where I have chosen to finish my education were all bonuses from the program, but nothing can compare with the friendships that I obtained within the staff and with the new students.

I used to think O.C.'s were just a bunch of happy-go-lucky people, wearing the same shirt, and "psyched" about everything around them, but they are much more than that. I learned that they are a very caring, special group of people who have learned to give of themselves in the highest degree without receiving anything more than a thank you in return. I have learned through orientation the gift of giving of oneself.

Deciding to become an orientation counselor was the best decision I ever made. Every person I spoke to and got to know touched my heart in a special way, and made the start of my sophomore year one of the most treasured times of my life.

REV. RAY JACKSON, O.S.A.

Two particular events this coming week will signal some important concerns for our Christian community at Villanova. The first, a 6 p.m. mass on Sept. 13 to be held at the duPont Pavilion, will inaugurate the beginning of the school year in a formal way by asking God's blessing upon our efforts to grow in wisdom and in faith.

Because we believe that higher education offers us an opportunity to search for truth in its many forms, and because we believe that part of that truth has been revealed in the person of Jesus Christ, it is fitting that we begin the first semester with a renewal of our commitment to the pursuit of knowledge and the affirmation of faith. We hope that all students, staff and faculty who share these common goals will join in this celebration of God's Word and Meal.

In addition to this inaugural Mass at the Pavilion, there will be an initial meeting of the Villanova Peace Community at 8 p.m., Sept. 14 in the Center for Peace and Justice Education, Sullivan Hall.

The Peace community is a local chapter of the international Pax Christi movement, whose members are dedicated to seeking nonviolent answers to the many conflicts of life. All are welcome to join.

We often get mad at ourselves; we frequently find fault with others; and within the nations of the world we see power politics and the domination of the weak and oppressed by the strong and rich.

Jesus, however, invites us to work for justice in peaceful ways. The Villanova Peace community is committed to gathering regularly for prayer, reflection and action for peace. Nonviolence is not a passive response to conflict, but a moral stance requiring patience, courage and the ability to make the voice of God present in the affairs of the world.

As the new school year begins, let those of us who profess our faith in Jesus the Lord, gather in prayer for God's blessing, and renew our efforts to make the peace of Christ come alive in our hearts.

Goodbye Summer – Hello V.U.

By R. MICHAEL BULLOTTA

It is September 1987 and summer has once again changed into fall. Yes, it is back to school and time to return to the good life. Dirty clothes will lie around for weeks, and the decorator of choice will be Anheuser-Busch.

Before we move ahead into fall and a new school year, let us first take a brief moment to reflect on the elusive concept of summer.

Sadly enough, summer has slipped through our fingers again. Where did all those hot, tropical afternoons and balmy summer nights go anyway? Perhaps, we should ask our bosses. I am, of course, referring to those same wonderful people who had the nerve to deprive us of ever reaching our full tanning potential.

They make us do meaningless tasks for hours on end so that we may be able to afford that compact disk player after only two more summers and a handsome 25¢ raise. But do not get me wrong. I am not denying that the onion ring cook at Burger King is a vital part of our overall political process. I am merely suggesting that summer days are better spent at the beach sporting some Jams and one's favorite pair of cheap sunglasses while sucking down a few cold ones with the buds. I sincerely hope everyone had the opportunity to do some of that over the past few months.

Now it is back to school, but do not despair. Because this may be the real vacation. Where else can you sleep until 11:30 a.m. every day and be finished by 2 p.m. only to dash off to the nearest pub for a pre-happy hour party? Of course you will have a few homework assignments thrown in there somewhere, depending upon the teachers you take. The key to your success is to find a balance.

Before I finish I want to leave you with this thought: Do not take life too seriously and have fun, because these are the best years of your life.

New RSA position opened

By SIOBHAN A. RODER

This year the Resident Student Association (RSA) includes the new position of social awareness officer (SAO) on its executive board and on the individual house councils. Paul Clementi, a senior economics major, is the social awareness officer for the RSA Executive Board.

One of the responsibilities of the social awareness officers on the house councils, according to Clementi, will include serving as a "reference point" to enable students to know where to go to get involved in issues.

In addition, Clementi said, the SAOs are responsible for finding out "what is of concern to students ... and programming different events" to enable members of their residence halls to be involved in social issues.

Information provided by Clementi stated that SAOs of the individual residence halls will run programs addressing issues of concern "with the assistance of the executive board SAO [Clementi], the Center for Peace and Justice, Campus Ministry and the office of social actions."

Each residence hall must complete at least one service project per year which the SAO is responsible for organizing.

In addition, the SAOs will participate in planning social awareness events for the entire campus.

"The ultimate goal [of the new positions] ... is to create a greater awareness of the campus community, of what goes on beyond the world of Villanova," said Clementi. "It's very easy to get caught up in classes and the social aspects of being a college student."

According to Clementi, the new position has been under discussion for several years. Clementi said that the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students; Daniel Remley, assistant director of Residence Life for housing services; and Naomi Karem, last year's RSA president; were instrumental in developing the new position.

Clementi said "tentative" plans are under way for a Lenten service project involving volunteer work in Philadelphia. In addition, three lectures have been planned for this semester, including an October lecture on Nicaragua, a November lecture on nuclear disarmament and a December lecture on a topic yet to be decided.

Clementi stressed that the social awareness aspect of RSA is only one of three aspects. He said RSA is also involved in planning social events and responding to the environmental concerns of the campus.

The individual house councils are composed of seven people — a president, a vice president, a secretary/treasurer, a communications officer, an environmental officer, a programming officer and a social awareness officer — plus representatives of each wing of the hall.

According to information provided by Clementi, "Members of each house council assist the residents by running hall events of not only social, but also cultural and educational natures, by keeping alert and informed as to environmental needs, and by acting as a liaison between the residents and the Residence Life staff."

Members of each house council work in conjunction with the members of the RSA executive board. This year's executive board members are Corrine Kohl, president; Elia DiTaddeo, vice president; Jill Mortimer, treasurer; Lynn Callahan, secretary; Mary Jo Yannacone, programming officer; John Horan, environmental officer; Catherine Healy, communications officers, and Clementi.

Elections to the individual house councils will take place Sept. 17 from 4:30-7 p.m. outside the dining halls, said Clementi. Nomination cards can be obtained from resident assistants and are due Sept. 14.

Information on positions in the house councils can be obtained at the RSA office in Room 215 Dougherty Hall or by calling 645-7210.

Picnic features reggae sun splash

By VICKI DiSTEFANO AND KRISTIN A. SWITALA

Welcome Back Weekend concluded with a reggae bash Monday afternoon in the Alumni Grotto. The Interfraternity Council/Panhellenic Council/Villanova Student Union-sponsored party drew a Villanova crowd that danced to the jamming sounds of Sons of Ace, and feasted upon barbecued chicken and potato salad, provided by the Connelly Center and Villanova Food Services.

According to Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities and advisor for the event, the reggae theme was a natural. "We thought it was a fun idea. It [reggae] fits the end-of-the-summer mood."

Thanks to Bonas and the other organizers — Nick Worthington (IFC), Ann Ryan (Panhel) and Karen Laughlin (Union) — the reggae picnic was an exciting success. Hundreds of Villanova students and fans of the reggae band, Sons of Ace, came to listen, dance, sing and picnic.

Providing the smooth, Jamaican atmosphere, Sons of Ace performed both original tunes and cover versions, including UB40's "Red Red Wine" and "I Got You Babe."

A multi-talented family, Sons of Ace literally means "the sons of [Richard] Ace." Reggae veteran Richard Ace arranged Bob Marley hits, "Hurts to be Alone," "Catch a Fire," "Simmer Down," and toured as Jimmy Cliff's musical arranger and director.

Now he leads his four sons — Richard, Jr., Ricardo, Franz and Craig — in the band and has released two singles, "Every Dreadlock A No Rasta" and "Mash It," on his own recording label, Jah's Music.

Since arriving from Jamaica in 1982, Sons of Ace has toured the East Coast, playing mostly in Atlantic City and Philadelphia. Favorite college gigs include Bryn Mawr College, St. Joseph's University, Temple University and Princeton University. Twice annually Sons of Ace rocks Haverford College.

The impending success of Sons of Ace is no surprise to Richard Ace. "We're in America and we love it. We have found it easier to change and learn in America." According to Richard Ace, next to Jamaica, America provides the best environment for reggae music because of the ethnic diversity of the nation.

"Reggae is a Jamaican product which embodies many styles: rhythm and blues, classical music, African roots and what is known as Rastafarian Vibrations."

The Rastas, though not the sole originators, said Richard Ace, are largely responsible for the promotion of reggae. "All we did was slow down the blues," declared Richard Ace.

Gaining popularity in Philadelphia, the band was a success at Phillyfest and will appear at Penn's Landing on Sept. 18.

Traveling through the old country

I will remember as part of the most exciting six and one-half months of my life so far (at least until I go back and do it again!)

One final plug: Villanova now has a study-abroad director, and information can always be obtained from the foreign language department. If you have never thought about a year or semester abroad, at least consider it, and if you are considering it now, do something about it. I would be willing to be a 'Salzburger Nockerl' you will not regret it.

Hot concerts heated summer nights

The summer is one of the best times to see concerts. One usually does not have to worry about coming home late and can find a show just about any night of the week. This past summer saw the tours of virtually every major artist on the charts pass through the Philadelphia/Villanova area and the country. Here are some short reviews of those concerts to give you that last reminder and taste of the summer of 1987.

DEEP PURPLE/BAD COMPANY

By RUSS CECCOLA

Deep Purple brought their simple stage set and excellent musicianship and heritage to the Spectrum early in the summer. Opening act, Bad Company, failed to capture any attention from the audience, even though the band played older numbers from the days of Paul Rodgers along with the new tunes. Purple was anxiously awaited and jumped into a two-hour show with "Highway Star."

Having recently started their tour for The House of Blue Light, Deep Purple proved why their 1984 reunion was inevitable — their music and songs will never die, nor their talent grow old. The band played all of their classics like "Child in Time" and "Space Truckin' " as well as newer material such as "Bad Attitude" and "The Unwritten Law."

Purple's stage was a simple one, with only lasers and giant balloons thrown into the audience as props. The quintet need not rely on flashy stage gimmicks for crowd applause like Motley Crue does but instead provides a spectacle with their raw musical talent.

The encore was stupendous, including "Black Knight," "Hush," "Woman From Tokyo" and "Smoke on the Water." Ritchie Blackmore effortlessly wailed on his guitar as did Jon Lord on keyboards to provide the backbone to a band that still rocks hard after 20 years in the business.

GENESIS

By ROBERT DUGGAN

Genesis continued its long love affair with Philadelphia with two sold-out shows at Veteran's Stadium on May 28 and 29. Phil Collins, Mike Rutherford, Tony Banks, Chester Thompson and Daryl Stuermer heated things up quickly by opening with their classic standbys, "Mama" and "Abacab." Collins' voice soon hit full gear as he tore into "Domino" and "Home By The Sea," two of his finest vocal performances of the night.

New hits such as "Invisible Touch" and "Land of Confusion" were interspersed with oldies such as "That's All" and the "In The Cage Medley" throughout the entire show.

The highlight of the show was definitely the beer-selling crowd pleaser, "Tonight, Tonight, Tonight." As the 60,000 plus sung along with Collins, the Vet filled with an intimate energy rarely felt at outdoor concerts.

Their light show was exactly what one has always come to expect of Genesis: dramatic, imaginative, innovative and thoroughly entertaining. The trademark "Turn It On Again" medley closed the show, and Rutherford and Stuermer's guitar work, especially during the "Pinball Wizard" segment, was fantastic. The "Invisible Touch" tour proved that Genesis will be turning it on again and again and again for many years to come.

MEGADETH/OVER KILL

By RUSS CECCOLA

Megadeth and Over Kill toured together this summer and provided one of the two best metal shows of the summer. Over Kill opened their show with "Deny the Cross" and "Wrecking Crew," the first two songs from their recent album, Taking Over.

The thrash band played for a little over an hour and kept the crowd happy with such numbers as "Powersurge," "Use Your Head," "In Union We Stand," "Electro-Violence" and "Rotten to the Core." Over Kill is easily one of the best thrash bands in the country and one to look for in the future.

Megadeth opened their set with the MTV hit "Wake Up Dead" from their monumental album Peace Sells ... But Who's Buying? which was released in 1986. Billed as the "finest speed metal band in the world," Megadeth proved this title with their hour-long set of songs from both of their albums.

"Peace Sells," "These Boots," "My Last Words," "The Conjuring" and "Mechanix" put the crowd in a frenzy that spawned many stage divers and bodies hurtling through the air. Megadeth should be releasing a new album soon, and the success that the band has now can only get better.

PETER GABRIEL/ YOUSSOU

By KATHRYN QUIGLEY

Peter Gabriel put on two electrifying concerts at the Spectrum on July 20 and 21. He is an intense performer, occasionally bordering on mad genius, but he is never boring. The concert, one of the best I have ever been to, was equally divided between Gabriel's older albums and his new release of So, his first titled album.

He began the concert with "San Jacinto," moved into "Red Rain" and then "Shock the Monkey," which is about jealousy. (Hey, I never knew that.) The lighting was really creative. Gabriel ducked descending green lights during "No Self Control," and was curled in the fetal position, bathed in a red glow during "Mercy Street."

Gabriel did his trademark fall-into-the-crowd bit during "Lay Your Hands On Me." (No, not the Thompson Twins song.) The crowd responded by ripping off his shirt.

Whitney Houston recently appeared at the Spectrum to promote her successful second album simply titled Whitney.

Silver Screen sizzles with off-beat releases

By RUSS CECCOLA

The summer is the most profitable season for movie theaters across the country. Many people, in their search for things to do, resort to opening to the movie section of their local newspaper. The movies that come out are so varied in genre in the summer that it is hard to say which is the best film. It turns out that no matter how bad or good they are, horror, science fiction and generally strange or weird movies always have a steady following. What follows are the most popular and best of this past summer's crop of films in these realms.

THE WITCHES OF EASTWICK

This movie turned out to be one of the sleeper hits of the summer. Starring Susan Sarandon, Michelle Pfeiffer and Cher as the title characters, the film pits these three lonely New Englanders from a small town against a strange newcomer to the area. This newcomer is none other than the devil himself, played appropriately by Jack Nicholson, and the three women use their newly discovered powers to retaliate against Nicholson.

The strong points of "The Witches of Eastwick" are the comedy and special effects. The jokes are often of an adult nature, but the situational comedy used in the film works very well, especially when Nicholson's tricks are turned upon himself. "The Witches of Eastwick" also boasts the best vomiting scenes since "The Exorcist" and the excellent transformation of Nicholson into his other worldly personage. The blend of comedy and horror work well in this hit.

PREDATOR

Although Arnold Schwarzenegger still has yet to prove any acting ability, his latest release proved to be the most intense and fast-paced film of the summer. The premise for "Predator" is great: an alien from another world hunting human beings in the jungles of Central America unbeknownst to and invisible to the party sent on a mock mission and headed by Schwarzenegger. However, "Predator" really wins in the special effects and suspense departments.

Not until later in the film does the audience get to see the ugly alien and the sight is worth waiting for if you love monsters. The climactic battle between Schwarzenegger and the alien is especially good because mumble-mouth Arnold gets knocked around and almost killed for a change. The special effects were unique as well, and included Carl ("Rocky") Weather's loss of an arm and the hole in Jesse ("The Body") Ventura's chest.

SPACEBALLS

Although reviews were mixed on this one, it is simultaneously true that the film was not Mel Brooks' best and that it was one of the summer's hottest. Offered as a spoof of "Star Wars," "Spaceballs" sported the best movie preview from the summer as well as the assemblage of some of comedy's finest collected for one film.

Starring Mel Brooks as Skroob and Yogurt, John Candy as Barf and Rick Moranis as Dark Helmet, "Spaceballs" toned down Brooks' regular humor so that a PG rating would be possible.

Sometimes the comedy in "Spaceballs" was a bit too campy and childish, but for the most part, Brooks did an excellent job on the big budget satire. Memorable scenes include John Hurt's reprise of his chestbursting scene from "Alien" and the scenes lifted intact and turned into Brooks material from "The Wizard of Oz" and "Planet of the Apes." "Spaceballs" gave what was expected — wacky humor from the irreverent king of comedy, Brooks.

THE LOST BOYS

This tale of modern day vampires drew a large box office audience and offered a new version of the classic vampire character. Instead of wearing long, flowing robes and flying through the night, the title characters don denim and leather and ride motorcycles.

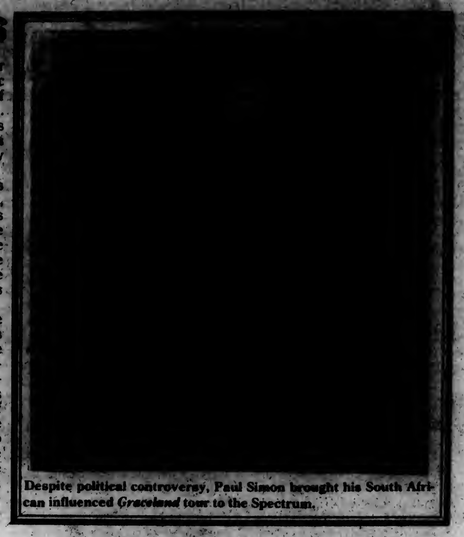
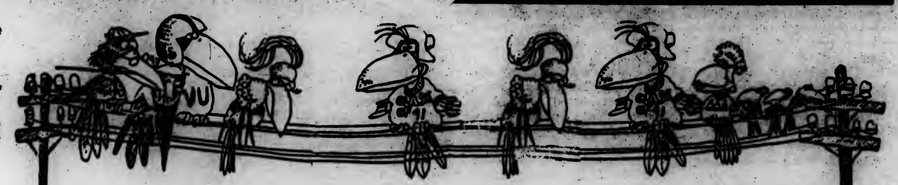
Starring Jami Gertz and Corey Haim as two new members of town, the title vampires menace the brothers and try to convince Gertz to become one of them. Haim runs to Corey Feldman and Jamison Newlander to help him save his brother and the three discover the vampires' secret.



"The Lost Boys" is not billed as a comedy, but there are some lighthearted moments to offset the terror. The acting is realistic in the film and never do you feel like you are watching the characters do something out of context. The effects that are common in any vampire movie are "modernized" and unique, adding to the overall effect of "The Lost Boys."

ROBOCOP



The most recent of the above films, "Robocop" can still be, and should be, caught in the theaters if you have not seen this effective sci-fi shoot-em-up. Peter Weller stars as a police officer who is brutally murdered by a gang of criminals and whose body is later transformed into a super robotic cop capable of doing the work of a number of normal officers. Nancy Allen also stars as Weller's former partner who recognizes Weller's personality and memory intact inside the robot.

Needless to say, Robocop goes on to take care of a few criminals, blow away Weller's murderers and prove itself as a viable member of the police force. The effects are great in this film, the story is well-thought out, and the overall influence of "Robocop" is a desire to see the movie again.

Although these movies were the best this summer, other notables include "The Believers," "The Gate," "The Stepfather," "Gothic" and "Rawhead Rex." Ironically, the only sequels offered this summer were the worst films of the season, if not all time. The bozo award must be given to "Creepshow 2," "House II: The Second Story" and "Jaws: The Revenge" as the most boring, stupid, idiotic, worthless, I-want-my-money-back movies.

Despite political controversy, Paul Simon brought his South African influenced Graceland tour to the Spectrum.

STATIONFALL  INFOCOM C64/128, AP, AT, AMIGA, MAC, IBM, ST

This sequel to 1983's Planetfall instantly captures your interest as you are given orders to go to Space Station Gamma Delta Gamma 777-G 59/59 Sector Alpha-Mu-79 to pick up a shipload of ridiculous forms. You thought that being promoted from Ensign Seventh Class (in Planetfall) to Lieutenant First Class was going to offer you new opportunities to have an exciting career in the Stellar Patrol. Boy, were you wrong!

The action really starts in Stationfall when you enter the space station and begin exploring its corridors and rooms. You find that no one is occupying the station except for an ostrich, a robot called Plato and an Arcturian balloon creature. Your goal changes in Stationfall from obtaining the forms to finding out what happened on the station.

As an all-text adventure, Stationfall moves along as fast as you type in commands. The game is a strong challenge and surpasses every other work of interactive fiction that Steve Meretzky has written. Joining you in your adventure is your robot friend Floyd from Planetfall, who is capable of turning any dull situation into fun and games.

The puzzles awaiting you in Stationfall are varied in difficulty and include a rather unique one that involves a set of dots on the wall of an alien ship found in a docking bay. This game is a must for any sci-fi fan or infocom fan and easily ranks as one of the year's best games. When you ultimately do finish the game, you may be in for a surprise ending.

THE LURKING HORROR ½ INFOCOM C64/128, AP, AT, AMIGA, MAC, IBM, ST

As a student of G.U.E. Tech, you are working late at night on a term paper that is due tomorrow. When you try to edit your file, you find that it has been replaced by a lot of gibberish and suddenly you find yourself in the midst of some kind of ritual. Upon awakening from your nightmare, you are holding a strange rock that you had in your dream. Was it really a dream? You decide to explore the campus and what you find is enough to keep any college coed up at night.

The Lurking Horror is a recent release from Infocom and the latest work of interactive fiction pioneer Dave Lebling. It is also the first horror game from Infocom and so far has done quite well on the market. There are many strange beings to meet in Horror, including a slime creature, an evil professor, a stereotypical hacker and a bothersome mantenance man. The descriptions in the game are especially useful in this all-text adventure game.

Written deliberately in the style of H.P. Lovecraft and set in a Stephen King world, Horror lives up to its influences excellently. There are some times when you wish you could just fall asleep and wake up no longer in this interactive nightmare, but alas you must conquer the demons on the campus before they conquer you. G.U.E. Tech is modeled on M.I.T. and includes the famous dome of that school in an interesting encounter.

The Lurking Horror comes packed with a plastic bug and a guide to G.U.E. Tech that includes clues to the solution of the game, but you must mainly rely on your intuition and puzzle-solving ability to survive the night and get to the bottom of the mysterious happenings at the school. This is one game where you have to look in the basement.

CONFLICT IN VIETNAM  MICROPROSE C64/128, AP, IBM

This war game from MicroProse is easily the most accurate simulation of the Vietnam War available on a disk. MicroProse specializes in simulations, and Conflict in Vietnam is a worthy holder of the MicroProse name. Pitting you against either your computer or another player, the game will challenge every bit of strategy that you possess to meet your objective.

There are five historical scenarios possible to play in Conflict in Vietnam: Dien Bien Phu, Ia Drang, Khe Sanh, Cambodia and Quang Tri. Within each scenario are the different variants that you can play the game under, which include playing against a Communist computer or a Communist friend. Ultimately, the scenario you pick will be your home for a while and you can expect to grow used to the geography of the area.

Along with the excellence on the disk, Conflict in Vietnam comes packaged with a very helpful, historically accurate and information-packed manual. Every scenario and variant are described in their factual context and the history of the Vietnam War is described as well. Many strategical hints are picked up from reading the manual and following carefully what your real-life counterparts did in the same situations.

The graphics used in Conflict in Vietnam are very clear and you can forget about memorizing all of the commands — most can be selected from menus. The ease with which one can pick up the game and play it in a short while only confirms my belief that Conflict in Vietnam is an excellent simulation.

AUTODUEL ½ ORIGIN SYSTEMS/ELECTRONIC ARTS C64/128, AP, AT, IBM

Probably inspired by "Death Race 2000," a futuristic movie in which race car drivers roamed the countryside in search of a kill, Autoduel takes its place alongside outher future race car games, notably Roadwar 2000. The game is unique and does not bore as would be expected. It combines elements of role-playing games, with adventure, and action to take the gamer into the future.

The first thing you must do in Autoduel is design your car. You can equip the vehicle with many attachments and weapons to enhance your driving ability and success on the road. This initial design is very important and gives your game a distinct flavor. A special section was devoted to car design in the manual for this reason. The importance of a well-stocked and fast car can only come out in playing the game.

As a member of the American Autoduel Association (AADA), you have many options at your discretion. You can fight it out with other cars in the arena, take part in cargo shipping from one place to another (all the time protecting the cargo from burglars) and act as a vigilante on the roads, disposing of the worthless criminals as necessary.

Along with this straight action, you must learn how to control your car, know who is important on either side of the law to make you a hero and set goals for your adventure. Along with the elaborate manual and included tiny tool kit, Autoduel wins with its outstanding graphics and smooth game play.

ULTIMA I  ORIGIN SYSTEMS/ELECTRONIC ARTS C64/128

The original version of this game was released many years back, but the newest computer adaptation is for the Commodore 64, a long time in waiting. Ultima I was the first large-scale role-playing adventure game and promises an immense landscape and difficult goal, both of which I can attest to be true.

Ultima I takes place in the mythical world of Britannia and revolves around your quest to find and defeat the evil wizard Mondain. He has enslaved the land for many years and it is up to you to prepare to battle him in this game guaranteed to keep you occupied for many a week.

You build up character traits and acquire spells and weapons to give you the strength, intelligence and tools to defeat Mondain. The quest is not easy, but is well worth the time it takes to finish. The graphics scroll well in this new version and the land of Britannia unfolds before your eyes.

The Ultima games are unique in their method of play, with every letter of the alphabet standing for a command that starts with that letter. The joystick can be used for actual movement on the terrain. A player reference card that details all of the commands comes with the game, along with a beautifully illustrated manual, maps of Britannia and coins of the realm.

DAN DARE  AMAZING SOFTWARE/ELECTRONIC ARTS C64/128

This recent release places you in the role of Dan Dare, popular hero of British comic books, in a mission to save the Earth from an asteroid controlled by your arch enemy Mekon. You must find entrances to Mekon's underground complex on the asteroid, free your friends, destroy the computers controlling the course of the asteroid and defeat Mekon — all in 25 actual minutes.

It this sounds like a lot, do not be disappointed. The game keeps both your arcade and adventure game skills alive in fighting Treen guards and solving some puzzles. The graphics tend to remind you of a comic book as you play the game and the soundtrack for Dan Dare is worthy of a listen. All in all, as a member of Electronic Arts' new low-priced software line, Dan Dare gives you what you paid for and a whole lot more: a real-time challenge, unique characters, graphics and playability that do not grow old after finally defeating Mekon.

The energy of the concert held through to the encores, which were fantastic. I would have paid money just to hear the last two songs. Gabriel did a definitely different version of "In Your Eyes." He ended with "Biko," his song about South African activist Stephen Biko.

An African band from Senegal called Youssou opened for Gabriel. Members of the band backed him throughout much of the concert.

Youssou had a good sound, but in the words of this average college student, I had no idea what they were singing about.

BOSTON/FARRENHEIT

By RUSS CECCOLA

Boston ended their hiatus from music last year with Third Stage and supported the album this summer on tour with Farrenheit, a band not worth mentioning.

Boston tore into "Rock and Roll Band" from their first album and proceeded to play about two hours to a crowd that had not heard the band live for many years. The band went right through their biggest hits, like "Piece of Mind," "Don't Look Back," and "More Than a Feeling" before heading into newer material.

Here Boston made the biggest mistake a band could ever make. They ruined any further surprise and anticipation by playing all of the songs from Third Stage in the exact order of the album. Although three encores followed, Boston cheated the audience with their unoriginal show. One could have just as easily pulled out the tape and listened to Third Stage.

The encores included "Foreplay/Long Time" and a trio of songs from Don't Look Back. Despite their mistake with Third Stage, Boston was still great live and was welcomed back into the music world by an eager audience.

DAVID BOWIE/SQUEEZE

By RUSS CECCOLA

David Bowie brought his Glass Spider tour to Philadelphia's Veteran's Stadium this summer along with Squeeze as his opening act. Although Squeeze managed to arouse the crowd with their hits, nothing could prepare the people for the most incredible and most successful show of the summer.

Bowie's stage was so immense that it could not fit in any indoor halls. Bowie used a stage that resembled a giant spider, a variety of very talented dancers, two large video screens and his creativeness to put on a two-and-a-half hour show that proved what theatrical rock is all about.

As well as playing such hits as "Let's Dance," "Jean Genie," "Fame," "Fashion," "Absolute Beginners" and "Blue Jean," Bowie included a lot of newer songs and the title track from his latest record, Never Let Me Down. The fans biggest gripes were that Bowie played obscure songs that they did not know, that he did not play some of his hits, and that the concert was more like a play than a concert.

Those obscure songs, like ones from The Man Who Fell to Earth and other albums made Bowie unique; his early shows were always theatrical in nature. Bowie designed the tour as his last chance to perform under those circumstances and to express himself visually. He deserves more than complaints from those who cannot appreciate Bowie's unique style.

music with his new material, Waters told the story of Billy, a handicapped boy who can only speak over radio waves. When Billy decides to scare some sense into the world, he tunes into defense computers to simulate nuclear war, and Waters conveys the intense drama in the song "Four Minutes."

Visual stimulation was provided by a 30-foot circular screen above the dual level stage, presenting footage of war scenes, pigs on the wing, old Floyd videos and missiles descending toward their targets.

The quadrophonic sound system provided excellent acoustics, and enhanced the realistic sound effects of 18-wheelers cruising by and helicopters hovering overhead. Warheads at ground zero had the audience diving under their seats.

Waters assembled a top band that included ex-Squeeze singer Paul Carrack on keyboards and also on lead vocals on "Have a Cigar" and "Money." Also, Mel Collins appeared on saxophone fresh from the David Bowie tour.

The chronicle of Billy's fears ended on an optimistic note with "The Tide Is Turning (After Live Aid)," and along with the encore "Brain Damage/Eclipse."

BRYAN ADAMS/ TOMMY CONWELL

By KATHRYN QUIGLEY

Bryan Adams brought his basic brand of rock and roll to the Spectrum on June 23.

He opened with "Only The Strong Survive" and ran through a 15-song set. Most of his songs were from his No. 1 album Reckless, but he played several from Into the Fire, his latest release.

Instead of spectacular lighting or choreography, Adams taps his foot, plays his guitar and gets the crowd rocking. The whole Spectrum shook as the crowd shouted along with "Kids Wanna Rock," while it was a sea of flickering lighters during "Straight From the Heart."

Other highlights included "Heaven" and "Run To You" in which every girl in the audience was thinking, "Yeah! Please run to me!"

Tommy Conwell and the Young Rumblers opened for Adams and matched his laid-back style.

The Rumblers are the latest "favorite band in Philadelphia." Basically, they replace the Hooters, despite the bands' very different styles. The Hooters were opening for Adams for the other dates on his tour, and Rob Hyman was in the press box at the concert watching both acts.

The Rumblers did a 45-minute set of songs from their Walkin' On The Water album. They performed "Love's On Fire," "I'm Not Your Man" and some of their other songs that have gotten radio airplay. Everything they say is true, Tommy Conwell and the Young Rumblers are a great live band.

PAUL SIMON

Despite a surprisingly small turnout, political opposition and the impersonal confines of the Philadelphia Spectrum, Paul Simon treated an eager audience to a truly memorable performance when his Graceland tour hit Philly this summer.

Backed by a band made up of South African musicians, Simon artfully put forth a classic set that contained some new songs, some cultural African music and a precious few selections that reached back to his days with Art Garfunkel. The concert simply proved to be enjoyable, educational and an unforgettable event that should not have been missed.

Simon took the stage simply dressed in a T-shirt and jeans, contrasted by the colorful costumes that adorned his band, Lady Blacksmith Mambazo, and brought the audience to life with an inspired rendition of "Boy in the Bubble" from his album Graceland, which won a Grammy Award for best album in 1987. This album provided a wealth of material which Simon tactfully interspersed throughout the night, including songs such as the cajun-influenced "That was Your Mother," the melodic and beautiful "Under African Skies" and the popular hit "You Can Call Me Al."

Although there were many empty seats, the small audience provided a more intimate setting for Simon. The new material was well accepted by the crowd, but the true highlight of the evening came when he launched into a brief set of his old classics including "The Boxer," "Late In the Evening" and a beautiful solo rendition of "The Sounds of Silence."

TOM PETTY

No one has ever accused Tom Petty of being over-theatrical. He has always proven to be simple and down-to-earth, but his music has never been anything less than outstanding rock and roll. Petty brought his straightforward and gritty rock sound to the Spectrum this summer during his "Rock and Roll Caravan Tour" with the equally pure rock sound of the Del Fuegos and the Georgia Satellites.

Petty reached back in time with "Breakdown" to open his set that lasted for nearly two hours, and included equally old material such as "American Girl," as well as new songs such as "Runaway Train" and a powerful rendition of "Jamming Me." The 1979 release, Damn the Torpedoes, provided songs that were the highlight of the evening, as Petty brought the crowd to their feet with "Refugee" and "Here Comes My Girl," and then treated the audience to a driving performance of "Even the Losers."

The evening proved to be Petty at his peak, showcasing the rocker in the environment that suits him best, a simple stage with simple lighting that lets his music do the talking. Fans in attendance will surely attest that Petty is one of the best pure rockers in the business.

WHITNEY HOUSTON

By KATHRYN QUIGLEY

Whitney Houston is a very talented singer. However, she takes herself much too seriously. That was the impression I was left with after her concert at the Spectrum on Aug. 14.

She opened with "Let The Feeling Flow" from her new album Whitney. (Ooh! Creative title!) She also did a number of songs from her first album, Whitney Houston. (No comment.)

She sounded fabulous, especially on her latest single, "Didn't We Almost Have It All." However, Houston faltered when she did a medley of other performer's songs. She did "Control," "Sweet Love" and "I Love You (Stop)." I sat there thinking "Why is she singing other people's stuff?"

She has great stage presence and works the crowd well singing to all parts of the audience but is just too cool and reserved. I mean, does she ever sweat?

Her last song, "Greatest Love Of All," written by Philadelphian Linda Creed, was a show stopper. Houston dedicated the song to Creed, who recently died of cancer.

Kenny G., the pop sax player was the opening act. He walked through the crowd with his sax, playing songs from his new album, Duotones. In addition, he played "Songbird" and the notes seemed to go on forever.

NEIL YOUNG AND CRAZY HORSE

By TIM DANIELS

Neil Young and Crazy Horse turned back the clock Aug. 23 with a tremendous show at the Mann Music Center. Neil opened the show with "My, My, Hey, Hey (Out Of the Black)" to kick off a solo acoustic guitar set. Also playing piano and harmonica, he drew upon his catalog of classic songs, including a rare performance of "For The Turnstiles."

Within the Mann's intimate surroundings, Young pursued dialogue with the audience that was not present in his concert last September in the Spectrum. He called on the audience to vote for a song for him to play, with "Sugar Mountain" getting the nod.

Crazy Horse joined Young on stage and launched the electric set, of three blues tunes, complete with the use of a saxophone player. Songs from Young's new album Real Life, including "Long Walk Home," were blended in with the old standbys, such as, "Powderfinger," "Tonight's the Night," "Cinnamon Girl" and some of his typical remote selections. Young rocked through these like an energetic youngster, characteristically bobbing up and

BLOUIE

On the Scene . . . Entertainment tidbits

By MARYJO YANNACONE

Welcome back to the fun-filled world of movies, music and Hollywood mayhem. Quite a lot has happened in the past three months and this is just the place to find out about it all, assuming you have not picked up a magazine or a newspaper throughout the summer.

Concert-goers faced many a dilemma, having to choose from a veritable array of shows, from Genesis at the end of May to U2 this month.

This flood caused some entertainers nearly as much pain as it did the teens whose piggy banks could not shoulder all of their favorite sounds. The Madonna concert, in particular, saw a clear cut in sales, and industry producers acknowledged an across-the-board decrease in individual concert figures.

A definite hit came our way just last month on the big screen in the form of a Mexican crooner gyrating to "La Bamba." The song was a smash in the '60s, when young Ritchie Valens, then just 17-years-old, came onto the scene, before tragically losing his life in the same plane crash that took both Buddy Holly and the Big Bopper away. The song has soared to No. 1 on the charts, and sales of the single are phenomenal.

In the works is a sure-fire hit entitled Big Business, slated to star two of Hollywood's funniest women, Lily Tomlin and Bette Midler. Set in New York, the comedy revolves around two mismatched sets of twins who wind up in polar social circles that place them worlds apart from their true siblings.

Several actresses have seen fit to put themselves in print recently, among them Patty Duke and Carrie Fisher. Following in the footsteps of those such as Christina Crawford, these now-famous children of once-famous parents seem to need the opportunity to speak their piece in the printed word.

Duke's chronicle, Call Me Anna, speaks of her childhood, her loves and her career, while Fisher's book, Postcards From the Edge, concentrates more on the drug and alcohol infested side of the entertainment business.

Fisher's book also differs from Duke's in that it is semi-autobiographical, with the lead character being portrayed in the form of Suzanne Vale, a 28-year-old actress, rather than Carrie Fisher, a 30-year-old actress and member of the new chic club in Hollywood of the recently clean and sober.

On a different note, the eternally clean and sober Clark Kent, better-known as Superman, celebrates his 50th year this winter, and much is being done to make this anniversary a special one. To help the festivities along, Octavia Press will be releasing Superman at Fifty a book set to chronicle the Man of Steel from his debut in 1938 up to the present time, with special emphasis on the hero's impact on teens and adults alike throughout the years.

A final note to all you Trekkies out there; keep on the lookout for the premiere of a newly syndicated series, "Star Trek: The Next Generation," scheduled to air at 8 p.m., Sept. 29 on WTAF-TV (channel 29). The Executive producer is Gene Roddenberry, creator of the original series, and the show boasts a brand new cast, from a British Shakespearean actor to "Roots" star Levar Burton.

Stay tuned next week for all the latest dirt on your favorite stars and shows. Before you know it, we will be welcoming in a new line up of fall series, so be prepared.

Pulsations night club has something for everyone

By RUSS CECCOLA

If you are ever looking for something to do or a club to go to, there just may be the place for you in nearby Glen Mills. Pulsations Entertainment Complex is easily one of the largest clubs around; it boasts an incredible multi-level inner construction that features a 28-foot starship with an animated robot named Pulsar.

Pulsations sponsors many different events. Something is going on at Pulsations just about every night of the week — and it is easy to get to: Just take 320 south to U.S. 1 south and follow U.S. 1 a couple of miles past the Granite Run Mall.

The easiest way to describe Pulsations without totally confusing everybody would be to describe a typical week. I will talk about upcoming special events later. Sunday is Pulsations' Teen Dance Party, especially designed for those under 21 years of age. Starting at 7 p.m. and running until 10:30 p.m., the Teen Dance Party features all of the Pulsations light and sound shows for those under 21. There is a $5 cover charge, proper dress is required and non-alcoholic beverages are available. This weekly event is ideal for those anxious to meet people and have a good time without worrying about having an ID.

Mondays are specialty event nights at Pulsations. In particular, what started in the summer, was very successful for Pulsations and will be repeated periodically throughout the year are "Metal Mondays." Beginning with Anthrax and Metal Church on June 8, Pulsations now showcases the best metal acts possible on select Monday nights. Doors open at 6 p.m., the show starts at 7 p.m., non-alcoholic beverages are served. The best aspect: proper dress is not required.

The first "Metal Mondays" ironically proved to be the best area metal show of the summer. Metal Church opened up with "Ton of Bricks," the first song on The Dark, their latest release. The song adequately describes what the fans had dropped on them by this band. The band's other hits included "The Dark," "Psycho," "Beyond the Black," "Gods of Wrath" and the popular MTV video "Watch the Children Pray." Metal Church is a band that will jump into the big time real soon and proved the best opening act for what was to follow.

Anthrax is currently touring in support of their monumental success, Among the Living. The band hails from the New York area and is responsible for making thrash as popular with metal fans as it is today. The quintet played all of the Glen Mills crowd's favorites, including "Armed and Dangerous," "Caught in a Mosh," "Madhouse," "I Am the Law" and the MTV video hit, "Indians." For an encoure, Anthrax performed "A.I.R.," "I'm the Man" and "God Save the Queen." The band is easily at the top of their class and have achieved worldwide status in a short amount of time.

Do not think that all of the other "Metal Mondays" were not great — because they were. The other shows were T.T. Quick, Britny Fox, Deadly Blessing, Cro-Mags, Gang Green, Metalwolf, King Diamond, Trouble, Overkill, Testament, Hallow's Eve and Great White, EZO. All of the bands are great and "Metal Mondays" is the ideal place to go to for metalheads.

Tuesdays are "Rated R" nights at Pulsations, the most popular young adult club atmosphere in the Delaware Valley. Designed for those older than 17, "Rated R" night has become renowned in the area. It runs from 8:30 p.m. to 1:00 a.m., with $5 cover charge and proper dress required.

To keep with the atmosphere, non-alcoholic beer, wine and cocktails are available. Because of the popularity that "Rated R" night has met, Pulsations has been listed as one of the hottest area clubs to attend for those between 17 and 24 in local press. Check out the action one night and see what everyone is talking about.

Thursdays through Saturdays feature the Pulsations Dance Company on stage performing stage presentations throughout the evening. Proof of 21 is required and the Dance Company performs from 9:30 p.m. on. Again, proper

Metal band touches down on another Waysted day

By RUSS CECCOLA

Waysted is a hard rock band that has existed in name for five years and is now vying for success with the release of their newest album, Save Your Prayers. The band consists of bassist and namesake for the band Pete Way, guitarist and ex-UFO member Paul Chapman, drummer John DiTeodoro and vocalist Danny Vaughn.

Waysted has toured with the likes of Iron Maiden and Status Quo and older versions of the band played with Ozzy Osbourne. I recently had the chance to speak with founder and only original member, Pete Way. His career began with English favorites UFO and he has worked hard through many personnel changes and four albums to ensure a place for Waysted in the music world.

Russ Ceccola: You've developed a lot through the years as a band. How much of what you're doing now is influenced by UFO?

Pete Way: The influence is always going to be there because it was the first band I was in from the time I left school and I wrote a few of UFO's songs, but it's not a conscious effort. When I left UFO, I wanted to do something a lot harder because the band was getting softer at that time.

Ceccola: I read recently that you're trying now to emphasize the music behind Waysted rather than the personalities in the band. What can you tell me about this?

Way: That's true. Sometimes, at the end of the day, I get worried that people will stop looking at Waysted as a band and start looking more at the things we do off of the stage. So, we're relying heavily on our music to speak for us.

Ceccola: What's different between the Waysted of today and the Waysted from a few years ago when the band was just starting?

Way: The four of us all get along really well — we're like a team. As a band, I couldn't wish for a better group of guys to play with. We're very professional these days. That may be the wrong word to use to describe a band, but it says it best.

The trouble with the Waysted of before is that it was turning into "Pete Way and friends" in that it felt like people were coming and playing on the album instead of joining a band — it lacked that unity that is essential to a band's success.

Ceccola: Moving on to the album now, explain the album cover and why you called it Save Your Prayers.

Way: Actually, there are two album covers. The one in England is a bit different. It has a picture of me on it because at the time, we didn't have a good group shot of the band. For the American cover, we were looking for some kind of concept and didn't have any solid ideas, so we left it up to the artist.

We called the album Save Your Prayers for a couple of reasons. First, it's a message for all of the people who put us down over the years. Second, it's meant to give a kick to all those Bible people and preachers that try to tell everybody what they should be doing. Some of them are quite irritating — trying to ram religion down your throat.

Religion is fine in itself; we're all religious in some way. But what I don't like is people trying to force you into seeing things their way.

Ceccola: How did you manage to find your vocalist Danny Vaughn (from Brooklyn) and drummer John DiTeodoro (from Philadelphia)?

Way: John was a friend of ours from Philadelphia. We didn't really have a permanent drummer. We hired drummers for studio work and other things, but wanted a drummer who was playing with us because he was dedicated to the band, rather than because I had guaranteed him a certain amount of money.

Danny had done some demos a long time ago with our guitarist Paul Chapman in Florida. Paul had come back to England and joined up with me in Waysted. We had a few shows in Israel to do and our singer Fin didn't want to go. So we tried out Danny, it worked well and we had a new singer.

Ceccola: Do you think that the current lineup is the Waysted that will continue onward?

Way: I hope so. Most of the ingredients that are needed in a band to make it do well are there, as well as the fact that we all get along great. We're all into the same type of music and 200 percent into the band.

Kubrick and DePalma return to the spotlight

By JOE MC GOWAN

"Full Metal Jacket"
directed by Stanley Kubrick
Warner Brothers
*½

"The Untouchables"
directed by Brian De Palma Paramount

Two major film directors' long-awaited releases debuted this summer — Brian De Palma's "The Untouchables" and Stanley Kubrick's "Full Metal Jacket." De Palma has been out of the cinema limelight, and out of controversy, since the release of "Body Double."

De Palma had promised his critics that "Body Double" would contain more of the same elements that so many of them had found so disturbing in "Dressed To Kill," and even more violence than in his remake of "Scarface."

The pre-release publicity blitz for "Body Double" did little to save the picture from its own failings. The film suffered a commercial death and was more sleazy than intriguing.

The film to compare De Palma's 1987 "Untouchables" with is "Scarface." Indeed, "Scarface" seemed a contemporary rehearsal for the gangster saga of Depression-era Chicago. "Scarface," De Palma's semi-fictional account of the rise and fall of the Miami cocaine overlord Tony Montana (played by Al Pacino), explored the more lurid aspects of the big business drug industry and the problems with the reception and integration of Cuban immigrants into the United States. De Palma's chronicle of a Cuban cocaine mob prepared for a more difficult task — a film from the classic gangster picture mold.

While reviews of "The Untouchables" have been generally favorable, with some dissenting critical voices pointing out that De Palma was either too ambitious or too limited with his treatment of the Capone story, the attention directed toward the film has concentrated upon the "Untouchables" themselves, particularly newcomer Kevin Costner's straightforward portrayal of Elliot Ness.

Much praise has come Costner's way for his version of Ness, and even greater praise is currently circulating for his newest role in "No Way Out." While Costner's performance in "The Untouchables" is admirable, it is so flat that it allows Sean Connery (as another of the "Untouchables," the Irish veteran Chicago cop Jimmy Malone) and Robert De Niro (as the unofficial "mayor" of Chicago, Al Capone) to steal the show.

Though De Palma constructed "The Untouchables" on an epic scale, with plenty of gunfights, the "smaller" scenes, such as the discussion in Chicago's cathedral between Ness and Malone on how to "get Capone" and the reaction of Capone, who, while in attendance at an opera, shifts from tears to laughter upon receiving news of Jimmy Malone's murder carry the film.

Costner's Ness is too weak to prevent Connery's Malone and, especially, De Niro's Capone from stealing the show. In this treatment of Capone, the mob boss is shrewd but animalistic — a point bluntly expressed when Capone, at a lavish dinner given for his mob associates, brutally disciplines one of them before the others with a Louisville Slugger.

"The Untouchables" should revive esteem for director De Palma and give other entries for 1987 Oscars some strong competition.

"Full Metal Jacket" is the third of what could be described as a series of Stanley Kubrick films that expose the idiocy of the military mind. What "Paths of Glory" was for WWI, "Dr. Strangelove" for the Cold War, "Full Metal Jacket" is for the Vietnam War.

Inevitably, Kubrick's Vietnam War film has been contrasted, both favorably and disfavorably, with Oliver Stone's "Platoon." While it is difficult to judge the better of the two without belittling the merits of each, Kubrick's version of that war is, in its own strange way, the more realistic, though a less sympathetic treatment of the men involved in that conflict.

With "Full Metal Jacket" there is not a single touch of melodrama — no beautiful Barber sonata for strings resounds as body bags are loaded upon cargo transport planes. Instead, with the Kubrick version of Vietnam, silly pop hits from the '50s and '60s complete the score and emphasize that the war was not a tragedy, as "Platoon" would eloquently strive to have it, but a farce — an attempt to shoot and bomb a problem out of existence.

To an even greater extent than either "Paths of Glory" or "Dr. Strangelove," "Full Metal Jacket" probes the military mentality. The lengthy boot camp scene at Parris Island mixes the military satire from "Strangelove" with the caustic sarcasm of "A Clockwork Orange" to produce a dark essay on how killers are made. The Marine drill sergeant in "Full Metal Jacket" (played by Lee Ermey) devastates the new recruits with rapid-fire obscenities and, far more carefully, reduces their humanity, to the point at which they will kill at an officer's order.

The stars of "Full Metal Jacket," Pvt. "Joker" (Matthew Modine), wanders through the horrors of both boot camp and the war with very little compassion and a large dose of cynicism. Modine's "Joker" (as he is dubbed by his drill sergeant) casts such a cool eye on the hypocrisy of the military and the atrocities of war that he is reminiscent of Malcolm McDowell's portrayal of the pro-

Thursdays feature the "$10 Festival" at Pulsations. Throughout the club are face painting, air brush art, special entertainment, a dinner buffet, pizza, ice cream sodas, beer, wine and cocktails. For $10, you get just about everything you could want at a club, except an easy pickup line.

Fridays are "Friday Night Live" at Pulsations, sponsored by and featuring DJs from 98 WCAU-FM. This weekly dance party is broadcast live from 10 p.m. to 2 a.m. Free admission is offered to the first 298 people. Along with the DJs, Pulsations offers the best dance concert acts as part of "Friday Night Live." A cover charge of $5, proper dress and proof of 21 are all required. A $7 cover charge is needed on Saturdays, and gets you all of the normal Pulsations features.

Now it is time for the latest news. Sept. 21 features Grim Reaper, Armored Saint and Helloween at Pulsations for "Metal Mondays." Also, a number of "Friday Night Live" special events are coming up, including Will to Power tonight and Stacey Q with two shows at 6 p.m. (all ages) and 9:30 p.m. on Sept. 18. Val Young, whose current band was formed by Rick James and past accomplishments include singing for James' band and the Gap Band, will perform on Sept. 25.

Two special events are planned as well. Oct. 2 marks The Fixx's appearance at Pulsations, with tickets $12.50 in advance. Proof of 21 is required and doors open at 7:30 p.m.

Also, the Third Annual Philadelphia Metro Record Pool Party will take place from 9 p.m. to 2 a.m. on Sept. 28. All of the following dance artists will perform on stage: Pretty Poison, Val Young, Joyce Sims, TKA, Information Society, Will to Power, Noel, Alisha, Nayobe and The Cover Girls.

As a special promotion for the above two events, Pulsations will provide free admission for the first two people over 21 to contact me in person about going to the events. Pulsations wanted to offer tickets to the events to those interested enough about the club to read about them in the Villanovan. So if you want to go, direct your requests to me in care of the Villanovan (201 Dougherty Hall) soon!

Flashdance dances dirty to the box office

By MARYJO YANNACONE

"Dirty Dancing" produced by Linda Gottlieb
Vestron

This summer saw the release of few full-scale hits, and amidst the lull several quietly tender and genuine films have been neglected by both critics and theater-goers alike. "Dirty Dancing" is one such summer sleeper, capturing only mediocre attention at the box office. Despite this, the film definitely has something to offer, although thematically the film grows tiresome.

Set in the summer of 1963, the film tells the story of an upper-middle class family's two-week vacation in the Catskill Mountains. The Housemans are an ideal film family; father is a doctor, mother a housewife and loving guardian to two sweet, if not attractive, college girls.

The family arrives at Kellerman's Mountain House for 14 days of sun, fun and most of all, dancing. There women and young girls learn to fox trot and mambo, while their husbands and fathers mix it up with the boys.

Produced by Linda Gottlieb, the film centers around the sexual awakening of young Frances Houseman, affectionately called "Baby" by family and friends. A socially aware girl, Baby refuses to acknowledge the accepted class distinctions and finds herself attracted to the "wrong kind of boy," according to her socially conservative father.

The unacceptable boy, in this case, is young Johnny Castle, a dance instructor at the club who simply oozes sex. Portrayed respectively by Jennifer Grey and Patrick Swayze, Baby and Castle compliment each other beautifully, both in conversation and on the dance floor.

Castle is more aware of the problems created by the class differences, and does everything in his power to discourage Baby from coming around until his partner, Penny Johnson, announces her pregnancy, thereby necessitating a temporary partner for Castle until Johnson can "take care of the problem." Baby is eager and willing to learn; and lacking a better solution, Castle consents to teach her.

Amidst all this are several complicated social and ethical issues. The obvious class struggle, the turn from the conservative '50s to the sexual revolution of the '60s, the question of abortion, and the growth from "Daddy's little girl" to independent young woman in 18-year-old Baby.

If all this seems like too much for one film to handle, your reactions are well-founded. There are definitely too many levels of development in "Dirty Dancing." Yet, the somewhat far-fetched story presents a touching account of love and life in the early '60s.

The dancing alone is reason enough to see "Dirty Dancing." Baby and Castle's lesson scenes, along with those of the lower class staff gyrating to the tune of "Do You Love Me?" are enough to arouse even the coldest person. This new style of touch-dancing suggests erotic pleasures that Baby has never known, but soon discovers through a steamy relationship with Castle. In beginning a romance with the dancer, Baby loses her position as No. 1 daughter in daddy's eyes; a role, by the way, played wonderfully by Jerry Orbach.

The once close twosome now find they have nothing to say to each other, no common ground on which to meet. Houseman prefers the young men who work as waiters at the club for his daughters; boys that spend their school days at Harvard or Yale. A street kid from South Philly, Castle certainly does not fit in such a category, yet Baby finds him worthy and welcome to her love.

Though "Dirty Dancing" presents an artificial happy ending, it still retains many respectable characteristics, and is worth a look from those who enjoy a quiet romance that dares to expose the hazards of the legendary struggle of the classes, as well as a child's right to be free.

tagonist Alex in Kubrick's rendition of Anthony Burgess' A Clockwork Orange. While "Platoon" showed how men with basically good intentions could go astray when placed in an extremely tense situation such as the Vietnam War, Kubrick's aim seems to question whether the very nature of the military is, after all, purely evil. Kubrick does not try to romanticize the Vietnam conflict, and there are no heroes in "Full Metal Jacket" nor, so it seems by the film's end, is there any distinction between good and evil.

Many critics have been dissatisfied with one or more points of "Full Metal Jacket," such as the seemingly predictable outcome of the sniper episode late in the picture or the lengthiness of the Parris Island sequence. Kubrick's films, however, have generally received mixed reviews initially, only being relegated to the "film classics" category with the passage of years. And "Full Metal Jacket" should not disappoint fans of the great director — though it may seem uneven, it once more displays Kubrick's artistry and is certain to stir controversy.

Before you choose a long distance service, take a close look.

You may be thinking about choosing one of the newer carriers over AT&T in order to save money.

Think again.

Since January 1987, AT&T's rates have dropped more than 15% for direct-dialed out-of-state calls. So they're lower than you probably realize. For information on specific rates, you can call us at 1 800 222-0300.

And AT&T offers clear long distance connections, operator assistance, 24-hour customer service, and immediate credit for wrong numbers. Plus, you can use AT&T to call from anywhere to anywhere, all over the United States and to over 250 countries.

You might be surprised at how good a value AT&T really is. So before you choose a long distance company, pick up the phone.

Waysted's Pete Way interviewed

Ceccola: On Save Your Prayers you've got some strong rockers as well as some slower pieces. How did you manage to diversify so well?

Way: It's not really a conscious effort. The way I write influences other people's writing when recording. It just turns out that we make these kinds of songs. I always start out with the idea that the album will be entirely hard, with no slower songs, but for some reason we come up with songs that are a bit softer, but still fit in with the harder songs.

Ceccola: Tell me about the song "Heroes Die Young."

Way: It's about all the friends we've had over the years who've been here and then gone — people like Randy Rhoads and Bon Scott. Without going overboard and being overly morbid, it's nice to reflect them in the writing of the song.

Ceccola: "So Long" is the slowest song on the album and its placement at the end is kind of an aftermath to the harder tunes, leaving a taste of the record in your mouth. Was it planned like that or did it just fall out that way?

Way: It just sounded and felt right, and those conditions determine a lot of what we do. The track listing is very important for a record, and we experimented with that to find the best order. We listened through the album a few times and were very happy with the current track order.

Ceccola: When you're done touring for Save Your Prayers, do you plan to take some time off or go right back into the studio?

Way: We'll probably go right into making our next record. Right now, we're putting together some ideas between touring. And when we're off the road, we'll need to go back into the studio again.

I can't actually write anything on the road because when I pick up a guitar, it's to practice for the next show. Still, experiences from the tour and ideas we've come up with will be reflected in songs.

Ceccola: What goals do you and the band have for Waysted in the next year or two?

Way: To be as successful as possible and to have a big-selling album. We'd like to get on the stage again with big bands like Maiden. It's all a matter of working hard and sticking with it.

Ceccola: You've been in music ever since you got out of school. What has kept you going all these years?

Way: I just find it fun. It amazes me to see so many people who find it hard to tour and travel all over. If you want to play music, you have to do that. It wouldn't be good in the first place if you didn't enjoy it.

MOTLEY CRUE/ WHITESNAKE

By BOB STERCA

Motley Crue are known for their brash, arrogant style — a style that alienates some people and pleases others. Many fans in the heavy metal area are wary of the band because of their commercial success, which has led some to assert that the Crue plays "false metal."

Judgements on just how heavy the Crue's metal really is aside, the band has drawn the attention of all rock fans with their two most recent and most successful records. With songs like "Home Sweet Home," "Looks That Kill," "Too Young to Fall in Love," the new single "Girls, Girls, Girls" and "Wild Side," Motley Crue does not have to worry about complaints.

Motley Crue put on quite a show in Philadelphia, but they made one crucial mistake — they chose the wrong group to open their show.

With years of experience, large doses of talent, dynamic performances, and their finest album to date, Whitesnake simply blew the Crue off the stage. Whitesnake was the title of vocalist David Coverdale's solo blues album, around which he formed the group of that name in August 1976.

The 1987 release Whitesnake defies everyone's predictions for the band. Their best album to date, Whitesnake is also their heaviest. The album has been perched at the Billboard No. 2 spot throughout the summer and singles "Still of the Night" and "Here I Go Again" have dominated MTV playlists.

Their set contained only six songs: "Bad Boys," "Slide It In," "Here I Go Again," "Love Ain't No Stranger," "Crying in the Rain" and the incredible "Still of the Night." And much valuable time was spent on solos by group's members that could have been used for a "Gambler" or a "Slow 'n' Easy."

THE GRATEFUL DEAD/ BOB DYLAN

By TIM DANIELS

The Grateful Dead teamed up with Bob Dylan for a summer tour of sold-out east coast stadium shows. The tour coincided with the release of the Dead's first studio album in seven years, with its material a prominent part of the shows. The No. One song, "Touch of Grey" was used as an opener or an encore, and every other song appeared at one show or another.

In reaching the pinnacle of their popularity, the band has possibly obtained the height of its musicianship. They played with the energy that has garnered their trademark for great crowd-raising tunes, like "Not Fade Away," "Throwing Stones" and "Box of Rain." Philadelphia fans were treated especially well as the JFK set was judged to be the best of the tour.

Bob Dylan joined the Dead onstage for his set to close out the show. Bob was, frankly, disappointing. The performers just could not mesh styles the way that Dylan did with Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers last year.

However, there were high points. In "All Along the Watch Tower," Jerry Garcia played a Jimi Hendrix-like guitar solo, and Bob sang "Knocking on Heaven's Door" with emotional force.

The Dead's sets were all excellent and these shows could be a prelude to an electrifying fall tour in the smaller arenas.

Summer heat melts recruiting efforts

By JOHN RICCO

Though the leaves are still green, the temperature is hovering around the 80-degree mark, and the rest of the sportsworld is concentrating on pennant races and pre-season football, we are at Villanova and that means one thing, it is time to talk basketball.

Head Basketball Coach Rollie Massimino and company experienced a rough summer, losing both their sole recruit and an assistant coach since June.

Highly touted point guard Delino DeShields, the Wildcat's only 1987 recruit, was taken by the Montreal Expos as the 12th pick overall in June's major league baseball draft. An All-Delaware player in both basketball and baseball, the 6-foot-1-inch, 170-pound DeShields was considered by many as the best athlete coming out of high school this year.

As late as mid-summer, DeShields was set to attend Villanova and play basketball, then join the Expos in May and play in the minor leagues until September. Evidently something or someone prompted him to change his mind because, in late July, Villanova was notified that he would forego a college education to concentrate entirely on baseball. "We were contacted by his high school coach," explained assistant coach Steve Lappas, "who told us that he was going with baseball full-time."

Though the move was probably a good one from DeShields' standpoint (there are more openings for a 6-foot-1-inch second baseman in the major leagues than a 6-foot-inch point guard in the NBA), it hurts the Wildcats to lose such a top prospect, especially in such a slow recruiting year.

Villanova's other loss during the hot summer months will be felt more off the court than on. Former assistant coach Marty Marbach departed after eight years with the Wildcats to assume the position of head coach at Canisius College.

Replacing Marbach will be Lappas, who is beginning his fourth year as a member of Coach Massimino's staff.

In other coaching moves, both Jay Wright and former Wildcat Steve Pinone were added to the staff. Wright was named as a part-time assistant coach, while Pinone will serve as a graduate assistant coach.

The dismal results of this year's recruiting efforts have raised many questions as to why Villanova, the 1985 National Champions, cannot attract any of the top high school players just two years later. When asked what things about Villanova might be perceived by a player as drawbacks, Lappas answered, "I don't think we have any drawbacks. I think other schools have other things that work in their favor, but I don't think we have a drawback. We have a great school, a great campus, a great facility and we have one of the best coaches in the country."

But the fact remains that, while schools around the nation added the best talent in America to their squads, Villanova came up virtually empty in 1987.

An answer other coaches, such as Lou Carnesecca of St. John's and Bob Knight of Indiana, have found to recruiting difficulties is the pursuit of junior college transfers. Lappas commenting about this option said, "Coach Massimino has never taken a junior college transfer and I don't believe he is going to take a junior college transfer unless it is a unique situation. That doesn't, however, rule it out forever."

Despite the bad news, this summer had a few bright spots worth mentioning. Most important of these items is the condition in which sophomores Tom Greis, Barry Bekkedam and Rodney Taylor reported to school. All three participated in off-season conditioning programs, and look much better than last year.

"Rodney's and Tom's weights are distributed much better. It's not so much that they've lost weight as much as they have distributed it better through the weight lifting. As for Barry, he has gained about 10 pounds," commented Coach Lappas.

Senior Mark Plansky will be the driving force that leads the Wildcats this season. The 6-foot-7-inch forward must have another solid year if Villanova is to better its 15-16 1986-87 record.

Another plus the team gained this summer was the acquisition of freshman Paul Vrind from Holland. Though the 7-footer is inexperienced, the combination of his size and speed and the fine coaching he will receive at Villanova, could result in some needed frontcourt help in the future.

All in all, Villanova should have a fairly successful season this year, and easily improve upon last year's 15-16 record. The recruiting problems of 1987, though costly, should not affect this season and probably will not be evident until a few years down the road.

'Cats trounce Yale, 42-14

By JAY TALBOTT

The Villanova Football Team started the 1987 season on a positive note by trouncing the Yale Elies 42-14 in a scrimmage at the New Haven Yale Bowl last Saturday. The Wildcats caught the fourth-ranked Ivy Leaguers on a day in which the Bulldogs turned over the ball five more times than the Cats.

The improved Villanova defense intercepted the highly regarded Yale quarterback Kelly Ryan four times and recovered two fumbles to effectively shut down the Yale offense.

Twice the Elies were held for no points when they had moved within 10 yards of the goal line. The first time the Yale's kicker missed a 20-yard field goal. The second time defensive cornerback Derek McEwen intercepted a Ryan pass in the end zone to halt another Yale drive.

The defense displayed some aggressive hitting, and the pass rush seemed to disrupt the Yale offense from getting time to operate. Coach Andy Talley was impressed with the physical hitting, but still feels the pass rush must improve. The defense also was able to score when captain Joe Allen returned an interception 30 yards for a touchdown.

The ability of the defense to give the football to Villanova's offense gave them the needed opportunities to score. Behind the offensive line, quarterback Kirk Schulz was able to pick apart the inexperienced Elies' secondary. The offensive line which is coached by Greg Olejack, did an effective job against the Yale defensive line, allowing the offense to capitalize on the Yale miscues. Kirk was able to pass for 17 completions in 23 attempts, four of which were touchdowns.

The strong tight end Jim Cashman was able to muscle his way into the end zone twice on goal line passes.

Freshman Scott Thompson caught his first collegiate touchdown on a crossing pattern. The sure-handed Bobby Brady was able to pull in many catches, one of which was a 50-yard bomb for a touchdown.

Pete Lombardi also added six points on a nicely run sweep from 20 yards out.

Leading 35-0 going into halftime, the main concern of the players was that any mental relaxation would allow Yale back into the game, much the same way that Mercyhurst came back last season from a 28-0 halftime deficit. In the second half, both teams came back fired up, but Villanova was able to continue its success to finish with the score 42-14.

The scrimmage was able to show the need for improvement in the special teams area. Talley felt that, "The special teams did a lousy job, and if improvement does not come, the team could lose some games because of them." Yale was able to return several kickoffs to midfield as a result of poor coverage and an inconsistent punting game.

The one positive note was freshman Tom Withka, who successfully kicked all six point after attempts. Withka will be competing against returning lettermen Paul Colonna and Todd Schaefer for the kicking position this fall.

The overall attitude among the players was definitely positive, but the team realizes that the Yale squad was hurt by last year's graduation of 11 starters, eight alone from their defense. Yale also does not have any spring football practices.

Scott leads 'Cats to record season

By: DOUG SCANCARELLA

The Villanova Wildcats baseball team enjoyed a tremendous season in 1987. It was a season that included many honors. Honors such as a second place finish in the Big East, the best record in Villanova history, All-American honors for third baseman Gary Scott and All-Tournament honors for three other Wildcats.

All year the squad was led by second-year coach George Bennett, who took the 'Cats to their first post season appearance since 1981. Bennett, the ex-St. Joseph's coach, coached the team to an impressive record of 35-18, a record which surpassed the 'Cats old record of 32 victories, set in 1908.

After a 5-6 Florida road trip that kicked off the year, the Wildcats dominated the Philadelphia area and Big East Competition. They defeated teams such as Temple, Delaware and Rider, and held their own against teams like Georgetown and Pittsburgh.

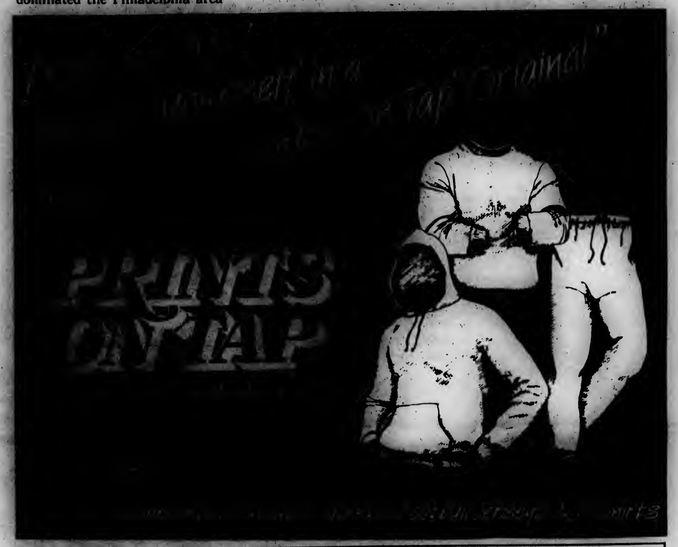
The 'Cats record allowed them to enter the Big East Tournament for the first time. In the tournament, the Wildcats downed St. John's twice, but fell to the eventual champion Seton Hall, twice. In the second game, V.U. took the Pirates to the top of the ninth before losing by the score of 10-9. Villanova's fine showing in the tournament earned them a second place finish in the Big East, an honor never previously achieved by the 'Cats.

In a season where the team received many honors, many personal honors were won as well.

Freshman third baseman Gary Scott was named to the 1987 Freshmen All-American team. Scott starred in baseball, basketball and football at Pelham Memorial High School in New York where he was named to the All-West Chester County baseball team. He is a hard-nosed player who had a near flawless season, batting .396. In addition, Scott completed the 1987 campaign with a great deal of Villanova season records which included most hits (72), most home runs (17), most games played, most runs scored, most runs batted in and most total bases.

Scott credits his coach with a lot of the team's success, "Coach Bennett set the stage, he told us what he expected of us and we just went out and did it."

Other individual honors went to MikeSchick,Rafael Novoa and Bob McCreary, who were named to the All-Tournament team.



Schick,a freshman, hit two doubles, one home run and five RBI's while batting .400 for the tournament. Novoa, a sophomore, managed to strike out 15 batters in Villanova's 9-3 victory over the Redmen of St. John's, while McCreary, also a sophomore, batted .375 in the tournament and had seven putouts and eight assists from shortstop.

The outlook for the 1988 season looks good. Scott believes he and the team will have the same type of year as 1987. "Personally, I have to be consistent and I can't think of last year. It's a new year and I have to concentrate on what I didn't do last year. As for the team I think we can do as well because we only lost two guys and we have all matured a year. We really have high expectations."

Drug policy unveiled

By DOUG SCANCARELLA

Villanova University has recently initiated a drug examination and education policy effective this fall. The main purpose of the program is to prevent the athletes from alcohol and drug abuse.

The committee, who created the policy was appointed by the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University President. Committee chairman Dr. Richard A. Neville and members, the Rev. Robert J. Martin, the Rev. John P. Stack and Dr. Theodore A. Aceto began devising a policy in September 1986, well before Gary McLain's article in last March's Sports Illustrated detailing his drug abuse during Villanova's championship drive in 1985.

The committee held two meetings to which they invited faculty, student athletes, coaches, legal opinion, medical doctors of the teams, athletic administrators and others. Research about other colleges including Stanford, which has no drug testing policy, Boston University, which has strong testing policies, was examined. Several policies were debated, and after 11 months, the present policy was formed.

Dr. Richard Neville (pictured above) was the chairperson that introduced the drug and alcohol program for student athletes at V.U

The present policy features a three-prong program. The first part of this policy states that all varsity athletes and club sports athletes will be tested. The athletes will be screened for drugs at their mandatory physical, prior to their season.

The second part involves an educational session, in which the athletes will meet with a drug and alcohol specialist. The goal of this part of the policy is to have Villanova athletes meet with athletes that have had either drug or alcohol problems so that they can recognize the dangers. Coaches will be required to attend at least two meetings.

The third part of the policy involves reasonable suspicion. This means that if, after that athlete goes through the first two phases, there is still a suspicion of drug abuse, he or she can be retested.

If an athlete refuses to take the drug test, then he or she will not be permitted to participate in his or her sport.

Neville believes that the policy is fair and will help the player. "If a player is on drugs and involved in strenuous athletic activity, he or she could get hurt."

According to Neville, an athlete will not be able to cheat with the urine samples. "The company doing the testing is responsible for the integrity of the urine sample."

Wildcat football previewed

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

Villanova's head football coach, Andy Talley, is entering the 1987 season with two major goals, winning and being competitive.

"We want to have a winning season and be competitive with everybody," Talley said. "We want to show people we can play at this higher level."

The two forces which will decide whether these goals will be realized or not are injuries and the performance of the high-powered, big-play offense.

"The big concern we [the Villanova coaching staff] have is depth," Talley commented. "Because we're playing in a more physical arena, chances are we are going to be bumped and bruised at certain times during the season."

Talley added, "Our No. 1's are solid. If we get injured, we are going to press a guy with no experience in. Against the competition we're going up against, that would be really difficult."

The team has already encountered some early season injuries which could have far-reaching ramifications later in the season.

"We've had a lot of early season injuries that have hurt our progress. We've had injuries in our offensive line, and we lost Jeremy Worrell."

Worrell was red-shirted last year and will miss this season because of a knee injury.

Offensively speaking, Talley seems secure as long as quarterback Kirk Schulz remains healthy.

"Kirk Schulz is an outstanding player. That's one player we can not afford to lose. In Kirk, you have a major-league player."

Talley added, "Our strength lies in our quarterback and our receivers. With Greg Downes (sophomore flankerback) and Bob Brady, (junior split end), we have two football players who are as good as anyone in the east."

Talley is confident in his line as well, stating, "We have a nice nucleus of guys back. They've all started for three years. We look strong there."

Defensively, Villanova is not as strong.

The defensive line and the secondary seem strong, but a lack of experience at the end position may come into play this season.

Talley summed up the team's makeup, saying, "I think we have a very good football team and a defensive football team that is really starting to come on."

Villanova's schedule this year starts off with Division IAA Liberty University.

Liberty already won their season opener versus Edinboro State College. Liberty will have played three games when they play Villanova and this fact worries Talley.

"We are at a disadvantage in that it is our first game and it's their third. But if we [illegible] any first [illegible], I think we will [illegible] our own," Talley said.

"The next key game is Boston University," says Talley. "That's the first big-time school that we're playing and of course they're Yankee Conference."

Villanova will end its final season before entering the Yankee Conference with five tough games: Northeastern, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Richmond and Holy Cross.

Talley is confident about this part of the season saying, "It (the tough part of our schedule) comes at a time when we will, hopefully, be battle-tested and confident. The team should be gelling and we'll be on the right track."

Ron Toney will be a integral part of [illegible] attack.

BA[illegible]

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

As the school year begins and the calendar turns wearily from August to September, college students turn their thoughts to fall and college football.

Villanova is no different.

Villanova has come full circle in the past five years, from no football program to a Division IAA team that should be competitive in the years to come.

The Villanovan sports staff spent many hours compiling information on the upcoming Wildcat football season. The final predictions are out: Villanova will go 4-6 this season.

The Wildcats should start off strong versus Liberty University and Mercyhurst.

However, after two strong games, Villanova will run into Boston University, which should put out the Wildcats' early season fire.

The Wildcats should rebound from the loss to overtake Central Connecticut, whom Villanova shelled last year, 28-0.

Villanova will then ride the crest and drown Catholic University. After all, Villanova has not lost to Catholic since 1925.

The Catholic game should mark the end of the Wildcats' success, however, as they end the season with Northeastern, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Richmond and Holy Cross.

Northeastern is the Wildcats' best hope for a late season upset. The huskies went 4-6 last year, but they were within a touchdown of Maine, Connecticut and Massachusetts, all of whom are perennial Yankee Conference contenders.

After Villanova faces Northeastern, they face the four toughest teams in their schedule. Connecticut and Massachusetts both finished 8-3 last year, tied for first in the conference.

The University of Richmond had an inconsistent season last year, finishing 4-7. However, the Spiders have close to Connecticut and Massachusetts. The Spiders also thrashed Boston University 50-15 last year, which looks like Villanova [illegible] will be tough for the Wildcats to beat [illegible] season.

[illegible] Holy Cross will be a game of [illegible] Holy Cross Football [illegible] will be [illegible] Worcester.

Radnor allows dorms

By NOEL E. FALCO

The construction of two new dormitories on south campus was approved at the Sept. 14 Radnor Township municipal meeting, said Patricia Marzulli, Student Government secretary of external affairs.

According to Marzulli, after a brief discussion in which Nicholas J. Caniglia, a lawyer representing the University, informed the township that "Villanova had made certain concessions to have this approved" and that the University was not "willing to make any further concessions," the ordinance was presented again.

Marzulli stated that the University already had agreed to reduce the proposed height of the dormitories from four floors to three and to install windows which do not open in order to confine the noise level. There is also a deed restriction in the ordinance which ends University construction on the part of south campus which is already developed. Further, the resolution asks for the construction of a sidewalk on the west side of Ithan Avenue up to and under the railroad bridge.

The resolution also states as a condition that "two escrow funds be placed with the township, the interest from which shall be the sole property of the township for the installation of screening as approved on the final plan and maintenance thereof."

Marzulli said the construction will be on the plot of land across from Donahue Hall in the corner between Katharine and Good Counsel halls, and that a parking lot will be constructed where the basketball and tennis courts now stand.

Four members of the board were in favor of construction, two were against it, and one abstained.

"Graham Andrews, president of the board, in recording his vote, said that he felt that the deed restriction should include the triangular plot of land on the other side of Ithan Avenue," said Phil Brach Student Government president.

The Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., assistant to the vice president for Student Life, said that it has not yet been decided whether the dormitories will be male or female, or one of each, but "there has never been any discussion about those buildings being co-ed buildings."

Martin commented, "We have final approval from Radnor Township, which is the last of the legal hurdles we have to make in Radnor Township."

He further stated that the next step is "to apply to the state of Pennsylvania for a license and inspection permit, what they call a LIP.

"We also need to apply for ground-breaking and building permits from Radnor Township," he added. "We need the Board of Trustees to approve the finances for the project... when all of that is finished we will make a ground-breaking date."

According to Martin, ground-breaking should occur sometime in the late fall, if nothing goes wrong.

Use of fake I.D.s attacked

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

The Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT) recently inaugurated a campaign, "Fake I.D. Users Get Caught," against the use of phony licenses by underage drinkers. Although not all area tavern owners questioned were familiar with the campaign, most reported that they have been making efforts to restrict the use of fake I.D.s in their establishments.

The purpose of PennDOT's campaign is to increase the Awareness of fake I.D. users to the possible dangers and penalties involved. "Fake I.D. users become the victims of their own action," said Secretary of Transportation Howard Yerusalim, "either through penalties, physical injury or death caused by drunk driving. Most young adults under 21 must be made aware of the consequences of using a phony license or I.D."

According to the Pennsylvania Motor Vehicle Code, a person holding an altered driver's license, lending a driver's license or using someone else's driver's license is guilty of a summary offense. If convicted, that person is subject to a $100 fine, assessment of three points on their driving record and losing their driver's license.

The main focus of the campaign has been in the distribution of posters to driver license photo centers, liquor stores, taverns and college campuses across the state.

According to Dan McFadden, assistant press secretary for PennDOT, the effort has primarily centered on state schools. Next year, however, PennDOT will concentrate more heavily on private universities and, he said, "We will be able to go in with more knowledge."

McFadden hoped to gain the assistance of the Tavern Association and Restaurant Association by next year.

Thus far in the campaign, reported McFadden, "We have received an excellent response."

Large numbers of Villanova students reported that they use false licenses. Many area bars are careful in checking identification and have recently implemented methods to reduce their liability in cases where fake I.D. users are able to enter their establishment.

Villanova suspends DKE fraternity

By JENNIFER REIDY

The recent suspension of the Delta Kappa Epsilon (DKE) fraternity charter by the Villanova administration has sparked a controversy between the Greek community and University officials.

According to the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, the DKE charter has been suspended for three years, pending reinstatement as a recognized organization in the year 1990, if approved by the Villanova administration.

Jim Hempstead, secretary of Delta Kappa Epsilon, cited the official charges brought against the fraternity by the University as follows:

1) In November 1986, several pledges were apprehended by local police as they attempted to steal an American flag belonging to an area corporation.

Though theft of an American flag is a federal offense, the corporation dropped all charges upon the confessions and compensation for damages by those involved. Moreover, the theft of the flag was the decision of a few individuals and was not a pledge task nor was it encouraged by the DKE fraternity in any way, according to Hempstead.

2) In December 1986, a Villanova security guard reported seeing a DKE fraternity brother bound and gagged behind Kennedy Hall. According to Hempstead, this person was the DKE pledgemaster who had been "kidnapped" by the pledges, a common ritual among fraternities and sororities.

3) In late April 1987, several security guards and resident assistants witnessed 20 to 30 male students, allegedly members of DKE, storm Sheehan Hall late at night, shouting and disturbing the residents in their rooms.

Hempstead stated that only seven or eight of that group were DKE brothers, the rest being residents of ground-floor Sullivan Hall, as well as members of other fraternities.

All of the above charges were confirmed as accurate by Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life.

University officials had originally intended to suspend the DKE charter indefinitely, according to Neville. However, Hempstead and Bill Herman, president of DKE, appealed the decision to Neville, who subsequently reduced the suspension to three years.

Hempstead expressed disappointment at the University's decision to suspend the fraternity's charter in view of possible alternative, "educational" reprimands. He offered, for example,

Lecture Series — Work and Family: Changing Balance

Half the women in our society who had a child within the past year are back at work; over 60 percent of women with children under 18 are in the labor force, and most of them work full-time; over 60 percent of all husband-wife families are dual-earner families; women now constitute 44 percent of the workforce.

These statistics reflect a startling increase in the employment of women, especially young mothers, and result in dramatic changes in the work place and family with immediate implications for changes in employment policies and parental roles within and outside the family circle.

The sociology department and University College are sponsoring a series of lectures on these pressing social issues with a focus on exploring adaptations by government, business and the American people which would result in benefits, not harm, to the family and the economy.

The first lecture titled "Incomparable Work: The Cost of Women's Work," discusses wage issues and their family impact.

It will be presented by Dr. Alice Cook, professor emerita of industrial relations at the New York State School of Industrial Relations at Cornell University on Wednesday, Sept. 23 at 3:30-4:45 p.m. in Connelly Center Cinema.

Fine added to alcohol restriction

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

Students found in hallways or other public areas with open containers of alcohol this year will be fined $25 under a new Student Life policy aimed at "curtailing or eliminating public consumption of alcohol," Christopher M. Janosik, director of Residence Life, said in a recent interview.

The policy, included in the Villanova University 1987-88 Student Handbook, states, "The consumption of alcoholic beverages in public places, including hallways and lounges, or buildings on University grounds without authorization is subject to disciplinary probation, plus a $25 fine."

The policy, except for the $25 fine, is exactly the same as the University's stand of previous years against the consumption of alcohol in public, explained the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students. However, the University decided that the $25 fine was necessary because in the past, Stack said, "There was no reason for students to abide by it."

Stack stated, "It [the fine] was established because there was a lack of cooperation with that rule. Students, particularly in larger men's halls, weren't cooperating.

"There wouldn't be a fine if people had been cooperative in the past," he added.

Stack said that he believed the fines would be helpful to the resident assistants in the dormitories in carrying out their duties.

Stephen McWilliams, judicial affairs officer, estimated last week that approximately 80 students had been fined under the open container policy.

The Rev. John P. Stack, dean of students, explained the new addition to the University's alcohol open container policy.

All fines collected for the public consumption of alcohol will be placed in a fund for alcohol and drug education, to which all disciplinary fines are allocated, according to Stack.

Budget amendments rejected

By DANTE J. SCALA

Plans to transfer surplus funds to a student loan program and to give faculty members a 9 percent salary raise were rejected by the Board of Trustees last April, said Vice President for Financial Affairs Gary B. Fenner at the April 24 Senate meeting.

The rejected plans were contained in two amendments added to the University's operating budget during the Senate's April 3 meeting. The measures were designed to shift excess utility funds to provide money for student loans and to give faculty two 4.4 percent increases, one in the fall and one in the spring. The two 4.4 percent increases would compound to a base increase of 9 percent.

Since the Senate passed the budget with the amendments, the Board's veto meant that the Senate, in effect, unanimously rejected the budget, said Senate Chairperson Philip A. Maurone, physics professor, at the April 24 meeting.

The Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs and administration senator, said the board vetoed the student loan amendment because it did not want to get involved with student loans and decided to look at other ways to increase student loan funds, according to the minutes of the April 25 meeting. Last April the surplus was estimated by Fenner to be at least $200,000.

The 9 percent faculty raise was denied because it would add a cost of $500,000 to $600,000 to the 1988-89 budget, said Gallen at the April 24 meeting. An average raise for faculty of 6.2 percent, which was in the original budget, was approved.

Also, the board decided to investigate athletic expenditures during its April meeting, said Gallen on April 24. Gallen stated Tuesday that a board committee has been activated to do so.

In addition, an outside evaluator has completed a study of the athletic program as part of the ongoing University evaluation, Gallen said Tuesday.

On April 24 the Senate passed a motion to create a committee to investigate college cost alternatives. This committee is still in the process of being formed, according to Student Government President Phil Brach.

On May 1, Maurone was unanimously re-elected Senate chairperson. Student Senator Chris Kriesen was unanimously approved to be executive secretary.

Also, M. Louise Fitzpatrick, dean of the College of Nursing, and Robert D. Lynch, dean of the College of Engineering, were elected unanimously to be administrative members of the executive committee.

Dr. John A. Doody, chairperson of philosophy, and Dr. Theresa M. Valiga, nursing professor, were chosen as faculty members to the executive committee. Brach and student Senator Naomi T. Karam was selected to be student representatives. All were elected unanimously.

Retirement dinner held for Cannan

By CAROLYN R. MIRABILE

A retirement dinner will be held for Ed Cannan, professor of history, today at 6 p.m. in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

Cannan worked for Villanova University for 23 years. He was one of the original teachers of the interdisciplinary humanities courses of the honors program. He taught many honors courses and specialized in ancient Greek history. He was also very active in many University activities, according to Bob Pigeon, a history professor who is organizing the dinner.

"Dr. Cannan will be remembered by many students and faculty because of the major impact that he has made on so many people," said Pigeon. "This dinner will be a unique experience because we contacted many of his former students."

Cannan stated, "I had a very pleasant experience at Villanova, and I met many agreeable colleagues and students."

Cannan decided to retire at the end of the summer session last year. He is originally from Texas, and he graduated from the University of Texas. He completed his graduate work at Columbia University.

Pigeon added, "He is a true Villanova legend."

Academic schedule approved

A policy guaranteeing a 65-class day academic semester with at least one reading day was recently approved by the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, according to a memorandum from Edward V. Murray, assistant to the president.

The policy was created by the University Senate last February through two separate measures.

Also, the Board of Trustees has accepted a Senate resolution which "extends the term of office for faculty members of the academic policy committee from two years to three."

The approval of these resolutions will be announced at today's Senate meeting in Dougherty Hall, according to Senate Recording Secretary Carolyn C. Lea. D.J.S.

"Setzuan" cast announced

Villanova Theatre will begin its "Good Life" season with Bertolt Brecht's "The Good Woman of Setzuan." The play, running from Oct. 14 to 17 and Oct. 27 to Nov. 1, will be directed by Helena White. The play features Dr. Joanna Rotte, Cynthia Angst, Liz Walsh, Erin B. Hughes, Jill Morley, Abbie Wysor, Diane Carman, Ro Geiger, David Fiebert, Matthew Higgins and Christian Ready.

Also in the play are Tim Tully, Jeff Voice, Ed Wolpert, Michael Mannix, Grant Hamilton, Jerry Behe, Richard Geller, Randy Wise, Christopher Ebbetts and Ned Alton.

"The Good Woman of Setzuan," one of Brecht's "Parables for the Theatre," is set in the exotic Orient of long ago and tells the story of Shen Te. Shen Te is a woman who, when rewarded by the gods for her kindness, is thrown into a struggle between survival and good intentions.

The play is an examination of human nature exerting itself against the confines of society.

Tickets for "The Good Woman of Setzuan" and for the entire "Good Life" season are available at the Villanova Theatre box office, 645-7474. E.H.M.

Legal association hosts lecture

The International Law Society will host a lecture by Bart Van Poelgeest on "The Influence of the U.S. Constitution on Judicial Review in The Netherlands," Sept. 21 at 8 p.m. in Room 102, Garey Hall.

The lecture will include a question-and-comment session during which Van Poelgeest will answer any questions from the audience on the subject of his lecture on the Dutch constitution and on the Dutch legal system in general. A wine and cheese reception will follow.

Van Poegeest holds both law and history degrees from the University of Leyden

Both the lecture and the wine and cheese reception are free and open to the public. J.F.M.

Bork nomination discussed

By SHARON A. WATERS

A forum sponsored by Villanova's sociology and honors departments took place Wednesday in the Connelly Center Cinema concerning President Ronald Reagan's nomination of Judge Robert Bork to the U.S. Supreme Court after the resignation of former Supreme Court Associate Justice Lewis Powell.

Dr. Peter Knapp, sociology professor at Villanova, introduced the panel, which included Arthur Donato of the Delaware County Association of Defense Lawyers, Peter Sevareid, a professor at Temple Law School, and Judge Frank Hazel, a former prosecutor.

Each member of the panel then outlined the various controversies surrounding Bork's judicial and political philosophies and presented his views concerning the nomination.

Sevareid began by explaining the concept of original intent as it pertains to the Constitution. Original intent interprets the Constitution from the viewpoint of the original drafters.

Referring to an article in the "New York Review of Books," Sevareid depicted three levels of original intent, ranging from a strict and specific interpretation to a broad and general one.

Sevareid believed that Bork lies somewhere in the middle, most likely because politics would prevent him from a stricter interpretation.

Expressing doubts about the nominee, Sevareid claimed that Bork is often inconsistent with his viewpoints. Sevareid asserted that Bork has changed his views to coincide with the conservative opinions of the moment.

Hazel discussed the issue of judicial restraint and how active a role a justice should play in establishing jurisdiction. He stressed throughout that the issue should not be whether Bork practices judicial restraint or judicial activism but rather if Bork is first and foremost judicial. The most important aspect in deciding a case, according to Hazel, is that a judge exercise reasonable and sound judgment.

In response to Sevareid's claim of Bork's inconsistency with his viewpoints, Hazel said that he hoped that any justice would always be developing his legal concepts and theories. He also stated that a change in viewpoint is not harmful so long as it is a reasonable change.

Donato considered it necessary for the Senate Judiciary Committee to evaluate both Bork's professional qualifications and his political philosophy, for it is important to see how he feels about the Constitution and the country in general.

Donato implied that the Reagan Administration was somewhat hypocritical in claiming that Bork's philosophy should not matter, when, in his opinion, Reagan nominated Bork in part because of his philosophy. Donato also stressed that a justice should be well educated and "above all, have an open mind."

The Hon. Frank Hazel discussed the Bork nomination to the U.S. Supreme Court during a forum Wednesday in the Connelly Center Cinema.

Unanimously.

Faculty Senators Dr. Robert P. Garbarino, Law School professor; William J. McNichol, civil engineering professor; Dr. Burke Ward, business law professor; and Dr. Rodger Van Allen, religious studies professor and faculty council chairperson all retired from the Senate.

Doody will replace Van Allen as faculty council chairperson.

The first Senate meeting of the academic year will be held today at 4 p.m. in Dougherty Hall.

University suspends DKE fraternity for violations probation, accompanied by close University observation and acts of public service as "fair" alternatives that would instruct the members to respect University policy, as well as satisfy school officials.

Members of the DKE fraternity have speculated that the fraternity has been used as an example to warn other fraternities and sororities to adhere to strict University policy on pledging, hazing, off-campus functions and alcohol liability risks.

However, according to Stack, "We are not out to get any certain fraternity or sorority. Our only purpose is to protect the rights and dignity of the individual within a Greek organization."

Gary H. Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities, added, "The DKE fraternity is in no way being made an example for the other fraternities. I feel that the University has compelling reason to punish the fraternity; however, I fully urge and support any efforts to further appeal this matter to the administration."

Hempstead reported an overwhelming response of support from the other Villanova fraternities and sororities for the DKE case, as well as from 300 DKE alumni, the National Organization of Delta Kappa Epsilon, the Inter Fraternity Council (IFC) and the Panhellenic Council.

Maureen Dannemiller, president of the Panhellenic Council, and Lee Loesiale, president of the IFC, submitted a statement to the Villanovan which read: "The IFC and Panhellenic Council do not condone DKE's past actions. However, we do support their desire to reduce their penalty. We have encouraged the fraternities and sororities to participate in a letter-writing campaign."

Hempstead further stressed the activity of DKE members as orientation counselors, members of Blue Key Society, varsity athletes, meal checkers and members of the ROTC program. He stated that these are exemplary individuals who contribute their time and talent to the Villanova community.

The National Order of Omega

Villanova's Greek of the Week

"Extremely busy." These are two words that very accurately describe the lifestyle of Elke Jones, the Order of Omega's Greek of the Week. Elke is a senior nursing major from Vincetown, N.J. She currently serves as the Order of Omega's vice president, Nursing Senate treasurer and as the president of her sorority, Alpha Omicron Pi, which presented her with the Outstanding Sister Award last year.

Elke has also served as an orientation counselor for the past two years and as Pan Hellenic Festival's chair. She is a member of the Villanova Leadership Society and a founding member of Villanova's Saferides program.

In addition to all that, when she is not putting in 20-30 hours per week at one of her three jobs, Elke still finds time for skiing and dancing, two of her favorite pastimes. For all of her contributions to Villanova, the Order of Omega is proud to honor Elke Jones of AOPi as Greek of the Week.

Logue hosts U.N. symposium

By TRACEY WHARTENBY

The International Bicentennial Symposium on Strengthening the United Nations convened at Independence Hall and the University of Pennsylvania Aug. 6-8. The event was sponsored by the Common Heritage Institute, an organization directed by Dr. John J. Logue, professor of political science at Villanova.

Logue and his Common Heritage Institute aides worked for one year to organize the event for the 450 participants from such places as India, Japan, Western Europe, Canada and the United States.

According to Logue, the purpose of the symposium was to focus scholarly and public attention on the central idea that the United Nations (U.N.) should be restructured and restrengthened so that it has the power, authority and funding it needs to secure and maintain peace and to promote social and economic advancement and respect for human rights.

The goals of the symposium are similar to those outlined in the charter of the United Nations. The goals include maintaining international peace and security, developing friendly relations among nations based on respect for human rights, achieving a system of international justice and acting as a center for harmonizing the actions of nations in order to achieve these ends.

The participants at the symposium adopted their own "charter," the "Declaration of Philadelphia," according to Logue. This charter urges national leaders to demand action leading to the restructuring and strengthening of the United Nations "with the boldness and imagination that the American Founding Fathers showed in Philadelphia 200 years ago," according to Logue.

The Declaration of Philadelphia was presented for public signature at a rock music rally on Independence Mall. The first of the signers of the Declaration of Philadelphia included the Right Rev. Allen Lyman Bartlett, Episcopal bishop of Pennsylvania; Fredrick Heldring, past chairperson of the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia; and Peter Kostmayer, U.S. congressman.

Other signers consisted of World Federalist Association leaders from 12 countries, each of whom spoke in his native language, translated his remarks and signed the document, according to Logue.

The participants heard speakers from 20 countries. Speakers included Soviet academician Timor Timoreev; Mexican Ambassador Miguel Maria-Bosch and Harold Stassen, former governor of Minnesota and the sole survivor of the U.S. delegation to the U.N.'s founding conference, according to Logue.

Logue said the symposium consisted of people of diverse nations, needs and cultures, but all agreed that the advancement and strengthening of the United Nations would be beneficial to world politics.

Pope visits four U.S. colleges

During Pope John Paul II's tour of the United States Sept. 10-19, he visited four southern college campuses. The University of South Carolina at Columbia, the University of New Orleans, Xavier University of Illinois, and Arizona State University were all stops during the papal visit.

For students at the four campuses, the visit meant canceled classes, changes in parking arrangements, new construction and, in one case, temporary eviction from their dorm rooms.

To administrators, the visit meant more meetings and extra expenses. For instance, landscaping, cleanup of campus and sand blasting of buildings were planned to prepare for the public attention attracted by the papal visit.

Racism resurges on U.S. campuses

Students from 17 different schools met at the University of Michigan in August to explore ways to fight a seeming resurgence of racial tensions on the nation's college campuses.

During the 1986-87 school year, racial incidents took place at such schools at The Citadel, Southern California, the University of Maryland — Baltimore County, Columbia, Tulane, Texas — San Antonio and Cleveland State.

These outbreaks followed two years in which racial conflicts among students increased.

The United Coalition Against Racism was formed at Michigan because of the recent escalation in racial incidents there. The coalition resolved to publish anti-racism statements similar to ones distributed by the University of Massachusetts at Amherst earlier this month.

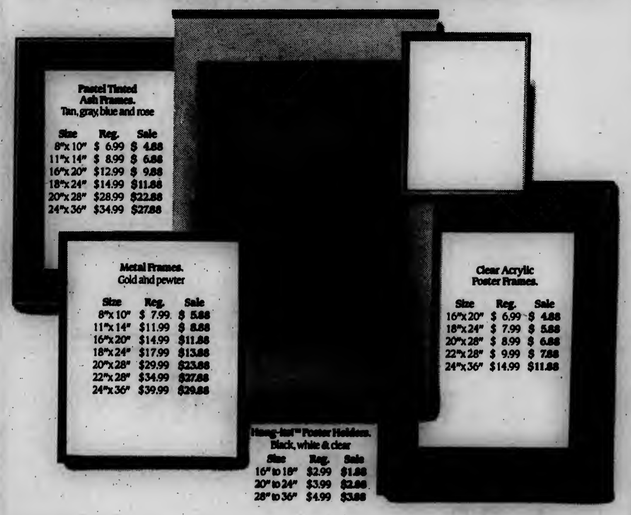
Student loan defaults increase

The federal government will have to pay off $1.5 billion in defaulted guaranteed student loans during the 1988 fiscal year, estimated the Office of Management and Budget.



This amount, a 25 percent increase over the 1986 fiscal year, will occur despite stronger efforts by the government to track down people who have failed to repay their student loans.

U.S. Department of Education officials indicated that the $1.5 billion they must pay off in bad loans consumes more than half of its $2.8 billion loan program budget.

Economic hardships, poor student financial counseling and rigid loan procedure are cited as reasons for defaulting on loans. An income-contingent program which reorganizes loan payments based on the borrower's income is in a pilot stage, and borrowers with low-paying careers may qualify to have their loans "forgiven."

PennDOT and local bars fight use of fake I.D.s

Barleycorn's Pub, stated, "We have always campaigned vigorously against the use of fake I.D.s ... We always have someone at the door and we try an educational process with our doormen [in detecting phony licenses]."

When the doormen at John Barleycorn's suspect that the identification that was presented is phony, the license is confiscated. Stated Conboy, "I have over 25 fake I.D.s in my drawer at home that were confiscated."

At Friendly's Saloon in Ardmore, a photocopier was recently purchased. If the doormen question the validity of a customer's identification, they will photocopy the license and require the person to fill out a form relieving the establishment of all liability, according to owner Joseph Tahir.

Tahir estimated that on busy nights about a dozen people are turned away by the doormen who question their licenses.

Joe Spaniak, manager of McSorley's Pub in Ardmore, stated, "We videotape everyone coming in the door. If we have to go to court, we have proof that they showed us identification."

The six doormen at McSorley's Pub turn away about 30 people each weekend night, estimated Spaniak. However, he admitted, "There's not much you can do if they [fake I.D.s] are good."

Smokey Joe's Restaurant and Bar also videotapes everyone that enters the establishment, according to manager Paul Ryan. In addition, he said, "We carry affidavits at the front door. We demand two types of identification. We also confiscate the fake I.D."

Ryan stated that the doormen confiscate four or five I.D.s each night. He added that less I.D.s are confiscated "once the word gets out that we confiscate fake I.D.s. No one wants to lose their I.D."

The bars are instituting these measures to discourage fake I.D. users for their own protection. Friendly's Saloon was recently found guilty in court for serving liquor to persons under 21. Tahir explained, "Pennsylvania finds the establishment guilty until they prove themselves innocent." Release forms and videotapes are ways in which the establishment can demonstrate their innocence.

Conboy stated that the establishment must be careful to check identification because, "If a placce is busted, people with fake I.D.s say they were never carded." He cited Mallory's as an example of a bar which had a problem with the Liquor Control Board (LCB) for this reason.

Conboy, an active member of the Delaware County Tavern Owner's Association, supported a bill in the state legislature which would penalize fake I.D. users with the loss of their driver's license. The bill, however, did not pass.

Tahir said that he doubted whether the $100 fine would be an effective deterrent to some fake I.D. users with money. He stated that he once told several people at Friendly's that there is a $300 fine in Lower Merion Township for using a phony license. The underage persons then told him that they would just give him a $300 check on the spot if he would allow them to enter the establishment.

Police departments in the vicinity reported that they are aware of the widespread use of fake I.D.s by underage drinkers and confiscate these licenses when possible. Lower Merion Township Police Department Superintendent Henry Hasson stated that they appreciate the fact that PennDOT has undertaken this campaign against fake I.D.s.

Hasson stated that the Lower Merion Police Department comes in contact with phony licenses "often enough that it's a problem." If fake I.D.s are encountered, the licenses are confiscated and, if they are Pennsylvania licenses, they are brought to the attention of the state police. In other cases, the licenses are returned to the state of origin.

Hasson also said that if the police department becomes aware of an operation for issuing phony licenses they will notify the appropriate university and the state police.

Radnor Township Police Chief Maurice Hennessy stated, "We intend to conduct an investigation of where students are purchasing these licenses." Last year, Hennessy said, one person was arrested for selling phony licenses.

clude all colleges, according to Lysionek. It will be held in the duPont Pavilion May 21 at 5 p.m.

The Law School will have Mass said in the Main Chapel at 9 a.m. May 20. Commencement will then be held at 11 a.m. in the duPont Pavilion.

The NROTC Mass and Commissioning Ceremony will be held May 20 in the afternoon.

It was decided that the indoor ceremonies would be the best way to have graduation, according to Lysionek, after an evaluation of last year's graduation ceremonies was conducted by the academic deans, the registrar, the directors of Maintenance, Housekeeping and Security, the president's office, the Radnor Township Police Department, the director of the duPont Pavilion, the dean of students and everyone involved with the planning and execution of graduation ceremonies.

"In case of rain, there's no way to move all these people indoors. Commencement is a community event and the overriding concern is that it be a pleasant event for parents and students in case of bad weather," said Lysionek.

"Most of the content of the actual ceremonies is still being negotiated," stated Lysionek. "There does not seem to be any movement toward naming each graduate individually during the commencement.

"In the past, naming each graduate has not been practical because of the size of the class," said Lysionek. "But most of the details are still being discussed."

If students would like to contribute input, they should bring their ideas to their deans' offices, stated Lysionek.

The legend of "Majnun Layla" is rooted in classical Arabic literature as well as in Persian and Turkish oral and literary traditions. It tells the story of unfulfilled love between the 7th-century Arab poet, Qays ibn Al-Mulawwah and the beautiful Layla. The musical drama weaves together Arabic, Persian and Turkish versions of the story.

TAILGATES '87

— Any student organization, residence hall living unit, family or group of friends is permitted to tailgate. At least one applicant must be over 21.

— Tailgate spots are available by registering with the Student Activities Office (214 Dougherty) using the "Tailgate Application" form. These are available the Monday preceding each home football game.

— Completed application forms must be returned to the Student Activities Office by 4 p.m. on the Wednesday preceding each home football game.

— Tailgate permits and table locations may then be picked up on the Thursday or Friday afternoons (12 p.m. until 4 p.m.) preceding each home football game.

— Each tailgate spot will include an eight-foot table and access to a large charcoal grill (you will need to provide your own charcoal and lighter).

— A limited number of on-campus parking permits will be available to tailgaters on a first-come-first-served basis. Others must park in the main lot on Lancaster Avenue.

— Tailgating may begin at 10:30 a.m.

— Tailgating must end promptly at 1:30 p.m.

— Tailgaters must be responsible for their own actions and those of their guests.

— Any violation of these rules will result in University judicial action and revocation of future permission to tailgate.

— Please be reminded that the legal drinking age in Pennsylvania is 21.

— Please don't drink and drive!

The Tailgate Management Team will be present to insure that we tailgate safely and to ensure that we continue to enjoy this privilege in the future. Your cooperation and assistance in their work will be greatly appreciated.

Unify graduation

After last year's fiasco graduation, which featured hundreds of people roaming among the graduates during the ceremony, the decision to divide the graduation in two comes as no surprise. However, a unified graduation, if well-organized, is better than the separate ceremonies and should be reinstated.

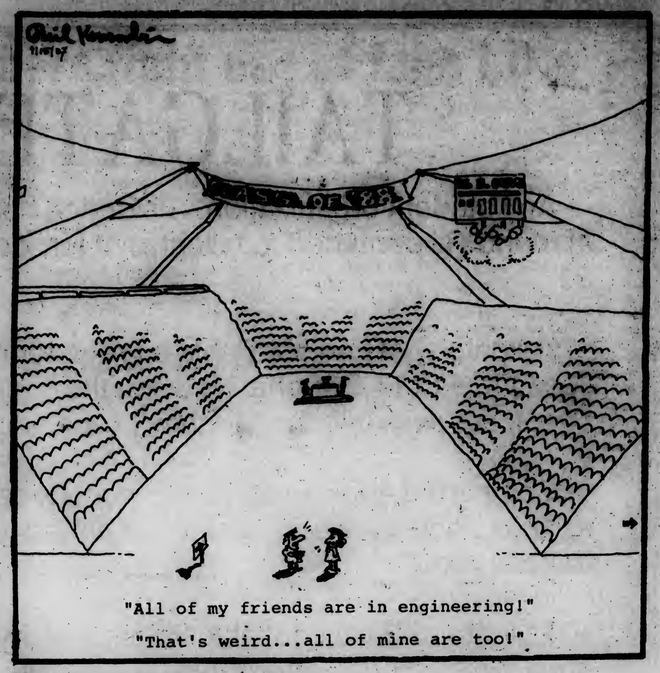
The fact is that a unified graduation provides a number of conveniences lost in the divided exercises. For instance, the schedule for the 1988 ceremonies puts arts and sciences graduates with nursing graduates in the duPont Pavilion at 10 a.m. on May 22. At 2 p.m. that same day, the commerce and finance graduates join the engineering graduates for a repeat ceremony, also in the pavilion. Although this plan allows for protection against the weather, it also significantly cuts the number of family and friends able to attend. Furthermore, the throngs of people leaving the early ceremony will face the congestion of more people going in the opposite direction as they arrive for the late graduation. The unified outdoor ceremony eliminates those problems.

In addition, we cannot discount the fact that several years ago seniors polled preferred a unified graduation over the divided graduations. Most likely, those seniors desired the opportunity to share the excitement of graduation with the people from other colleges who spent the last four years laughing, crying, working and learning with them. Why is it that this year's seniors were not given the same chance to voice their opinions?

On top of those points, we should note that the 1987 graduation certainly did not represent an exemplary unified graduation. With the cooperation of police, security and attendees, there is no question that a more successful unified ceremony could take place.

The organizers of graduation should not be so quick to drop the unified ceremonies, but should take the time to organize those ceremonies correctly.

Bork is not the man for the job



Judge Robert H. Bork, target of the most intense opposition to a Supreme Court nominee since 1970, faced vigorous questioning during the Senate Judiciary Committee's hearings this week — and rightly so. Bork's appointment would tip the court's balance decidedly to the right, likely swinging Supreme Court decisions far from where they are now and affecting countless crucial issues for years to come. With potential repercussions like these and Bork's record, the judiciary committee should seriously consider rejecting Bork.

First to be examined is Bork's philosophy of "original intent." A proponent of judicial restraint, Bork believes a judge should not intrude into decisions made by elected representatives unless the Constitution expressly authorizes it. This approach introduces the danger of selective interpretation. Bork could choose when and how to practice judicial restraint — possibly in a manner conducive to achieving conservatively oriented results.

Another point to bear in mind is Bork's poor record on civil rights. He has attacked many significant Supreme Court rulings of recent decades. Bork has opposed the constitutional right to privacy; the one-person, one-vote principle of representative government and the invalidation of poll taxes and literacy tests as prerequisites to voting.

Additionally, Bork concluded in a 1985 dissent against the Supreme Court that civil-rights law does not protect women from job-related sexual harassment. Also, he views affirmative-action programs to remedy past discrimination as "offensive to common justice."

With the complex issues the Supreme Court will address in the next 20 years, a staunchly conservative, unwavering justice would not be in America's best interest. Bork's record and his philosophies speak loud and clear — he is not the man for the job.

Why did Dole resign?

To the Editor:

In response to the present resignation of Elizabeth Hanford Dole from President Reagan's cabinet as secretary of transportation, I would like to make the following comments.

Why is it that Mrs. Dole, a Harvard graduate and a woman of the '80 s, is now conceding to be a subservient spouse? Is it because weeks earlier Senator Dole of Kansas mentioned that if he did run for the Republican nomination that the cabinet member, Mrs. Dole, would have to resign?

Or is it because of her character, as an independent achiever, that Bob Dole believes that by campaigning along side him she will attract more votes? Just one point — keep in mind who is running for president.

Would not Senator Bob Dole be seen in a much better light if his wife was working alongside President Reagan? Why not publicize that? Hopefully we are not regressing back into the past. I believe that the American public is ready for a first lady that represents both family and such a high-caliber career. Why deny all that?

Or is it, on the other hand, that objectively speaking, Mrs. Dole's position as secretary of transportation is just too demanding for her required plans in assisting her husband's campaign?

If so, is it not quite derogatory that the secretary of transportation steps down while Senator Dole, Vice President Bush, etc., find time to fulfill their obligations to their country. These men are — either supermen or hypocrisy has once again spoiled the political arena.

But as the record stands, whatever Mr. and Mrs. Dole's reasons for her resignation, the outcome is a charming and intellectual couple that has double standards.

The heartbreak of being robbed

By NOEL E. FALCO

To anyone who has ever had the urge to take something that does not belong to them: Do not do it! You have no idea of the pain and heartbreak you cause others, to say nothing of the monetary loss.

When you pick up a pocketbook, wallet or camera that has been left unattended, perhaps it is with the thought of making some money, of making a profit off others' carelessness. It is much more than this.

It is a malicious invasion of others' personal being and belongings. Those purses may contain items that are of solely personal value, such as prescription glasses (which you certainly cannot use, but are of great necessity to someone else), identification cards and mealcards (which may match your description if you are lucky, but which are difficult and costly to replace for the victim), medication (which someone may desperately need), or even trivial items such as that perfect shade of lipstick (which has been discontinued), plastic trinkets or pins, or a special change purse received as a birthday present or woven by a younger cousin. Even the bag itself may mean a lot to the owner. More importantly, purses, wallets and cameras contain pictures of sentimental value that are irreplaceable.

You are not just robbing someone of money when you take their belongings; you are stealing their personal paraphernalia, memories and trust in mankind. You are placing them in the situation where they are forced to feel suspicious of their brothers and sisters in a Catholic community.

You are not just robbing someone of money when you take their belongings. You are stealing their personal paraphernalia, memories and trust in mankind.

This is especially true if such a misfortune occurs at a social gathering where you are welcomed with open heart. You, instead, used the "open hand" policy.

Please, if you have taken anything of inconsequential value to yourself that you think someone else needs, return it to the security office. If you need the money that badly, keep it. Just restore peace of mind to those whom you have harmed and you will find the return of your own peace of mind. It is in your hands now.

Pay your student loans

By SUSAN TOLVE

Loans are wonderful. They allow people to purchase things they could never afford otherwise — homes, cars, high-cost educations ... and the list continues. Of course, taking out a loan can be a hassle, but it seems that the real problem, for students in particular, is paying back the loans.

In fact, the Office of Management and Budget expects a 25 percent increase in defaults on government-guaranteed loans this year, according to the Sept. 14, 1987, issue of U.S. News and World Report. That means that by next year, student loan defaults will total $1.6 billion and overdue loans not yet in default will reach $4.4 billion.

While the national rate of defaulted government-guaranteed loans is around 10 percent, Villanova's default rate is only about .41 percent for the National Direct Student Loan (NDSL).

"Villanova students have an excellent record," said Arthur Switzer, assistant director of Financial Aid.

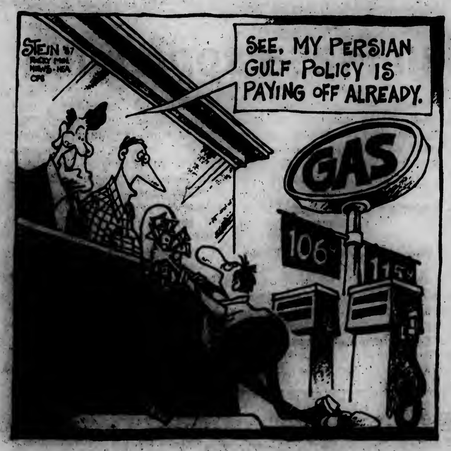
Switzer did not have precise figures on the Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) default rate which he said had a slightly higher default rate than the NDSL. "I would assume that it [GSL default rate] is very good," he added. The state loan division in Harrisburg could not be reached for more accurate figures.

Villanovans should be commended for a record that is significantly brighter than the national picture. And no one should try to explain this difference by pointing out that students at Villanova are wealthier than students at many other colleges. After all, the students who are wealthier are not granted government-guaranteed loans.

Experts cite many factors that have led to the rising trend in student loan defaults including "poor counseling by schools that make the loans, inflexible loan procedures and high debt loads that overwhelm borrowers' ability to pay," according to the U.S. News and World Report. Yet the fact remains that many students simply "rip-off" the government.

Villanovans should be commended for a record that is significantly brighter than the national picture.

If it were not for these low-interest loans, for which the federal government presently incurs all of the risk, some students would be unable to finance an education, at least not at the school of their choice. Education should not be an elite institution, but the U.S. government cannot afford to give out "gifts" to students. The government needs its money back. And that is exactly what Secretary of Education William Bennet has been concentrating on.



In an aggressive collection strategy, the Education Department has contracted private collection agencies and is working with the Internal Revenue Service to take loan payments out of income tax funds. This plan seems to be working. According to U.S. News and World Report, last year the Education Department collected $229 million on defaulted loans the government had already paid off.

Closer to home, the Villanova Registrar's office is notified of students that have not paid their loans by state agencies. According to Mary Jane Morrissy, assistant registrar, if a student owes the government money, slips are placed on the student's official record. Therefore, if the student requests a transcript, Villanova will put a hold on it and additional information about the student will be forwarded to his or her state.

Government-guaranteed loans are a privilege that should be treated as such. Believe me, I know from experience — about $13,000 worth to be more exact. I am certainly not looking forward to paying back all that money, but it is something I intend to do. Shouldn't I pay for the education that I will benefit from?

If I, or any other student, does not pay back a government loan, ultimately taxpayers are stuck with the bill. I have a feeling that the same students who defaulted on their loans also complain about high taxes they had a part in — if they pay their taxes, that is.

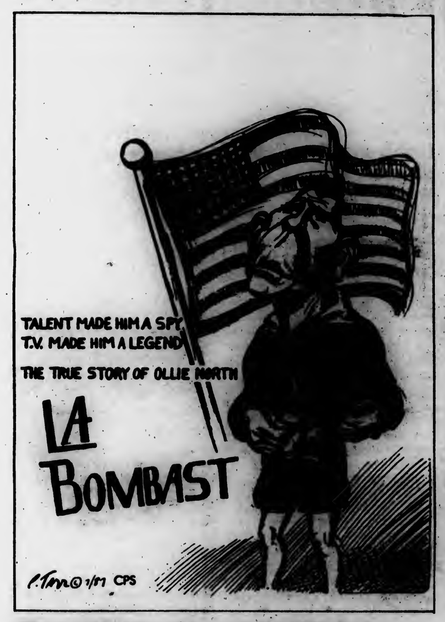
Counseling Center services explained

To the Editor:

The report in last week's Villanovan gives the Counseling and Career Services a welcome opportunity to correct a misunderstanding in the Shriberg Report and to inform the University community of our services at the beginning of a new academic year.

The center offers counseling based on the individual needs of the client. The number of sessions ranges from one visit to a continuing relationship.

Students seeking career counseling and study skills counseling often are served in three to five sessions. Most clients receiving personal counseling are seen eight to 10 times.



When clients need continuing professional care beyond what the University typically offers, the counselor works with the client to find counseling alternatives outside the University that are manageable in terms of cost and transportation. Counseling is never ended because some arbitrary number of sessions has occurred.

Services are available to the entire University community, including students, faculty and staff. In addition, we will consult with anyone who is concerned about another member of the University community.

Appointments can be made at 106 Corr Hall, or by phone, ext. 4050.

DKE suspension questioned

To the Editor:

I am writing in regard to the situation with Villanova University's ex-fraternity Delta Kappa Epsilon. I cannot honestly see why the severity of the decision was necessary. The severe punishment was a suspension of the fraternity's actions on campus for three years. In my opinion, the judgment was decided so that when the fraternity returns, if it does return, all the present members would be graduated.

Since the actions that decided the severe punishment were very individualistic, was it necessary to punish the whole fraternity so severely? I realize that the fraternity is responsible for the actions of its members, but could not a less severe punishment toward the whole fraternity serve as an equally creditable punishment?

I think Villanova has also overlooked, or at least failed to see, all of DKE's good qualities. They have had many members in previous years in several service organizations such as the Blue Key Society and Orientation Counseling.

DKE has one last appeal to the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president. I just hope it is an appeal, and that the decision has not already been made.

Convocation Mass applauded

To the Editor:

This past Sunday, the Campus Ministry staff revived a tradition from Villanova's rich and reverent past — the Convocation Mass. Considering the complexity of its Freshmen Orientation and Baccalaureate Masses, inviting the entire University community to a single liturgical celebration could well have been a tradition thought to be too unwieldy to renew.

No doubt there will be those who will complain about the lack of alternative choices. Perhaps others will complain about the lack of ceremony — no academic procession, no guest speaker, no honorary degree recipient, no room for the multitude of other agendas for which the occasion could have or should have been used.

For myself, I appreciated very much the long hours of tedious planning by the Campus Ministry Staff, the contributions of the Rev. John M. Driscoll, the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, their concelebrants, the work of the members of our community who served as ushers, banner carriers, musicians, singers, lectors, Eucharistic ministers and of those who prepared the Pavilion for the occasion.

I congratulate all of those responsible for providing an opportunity for our community to come together in common prayer for the school year's beginning. I applaud them for resisting the temptation to add to or detract from this simple but fundamental focus.

Lastly, I would encourage all of those who participated to continue to support the symbolism that Sunday's celebration actualizes. It and others like it help define, shape and center our community. It and others like it represent the essential uniqueness of the Villanova experience.

Political apathy: A V.U. tradition

To the Editor:

Sad as it may be, political apathy among the students has long been a Villanova tradition; and perhaps now while we celebrate the 200th birthday of the U.S. Constitution, it is an appropriate time to reexamine the role Villanova would play in domestic and world affairs.

At Villanova, two traditions — excellence in education and Christianity — merge into a meaningful environment which imbues its students with traditional American middle-class values. As such, Villanova, in concert with other fine learning institutions, contributes to the maintenance of the foundation upon which this republic was built — civil liberty. Consequently, Villanova contains the human talent and moral spirit to assume a position of national leadership in campus politics.

If anyone shares this vision, we of the College Republicans urge them to join our dynamic organization. This invitation is particularly directed toward freshman, because ours is a club where underclassmen can assume the highest positions of leadership. Our next meeting will be held on Sept. 23, at 3:30 p.m. in the Haverford Room of the Connelly Center.

If any issue from the deplorable housing situation to the 1988 presidential election, interests the readers of the Villanovan, we pray they will come and help us lead the nation into the 1990s and beyond.

Pa. National Guard to go to Nicaragua

To the Editor:

Since 1983, 100,000 United States troops have been on maneuvers in Central America. Thirty thousand of these have been National Guard soldiers. By the end of this month, Pennsylvania National Guard soldiers are scheduled to join them. Their "training mission" includes the building of roads, barracks, airstrips, etc. In the past, over 30 United States National Guards-people have lost their lives, including two from Bucks County, Pa.

On Sept. 12, I attended a rally in Media, to protest President Reagan's decision to send a unit of the Pennsylvania National Guard to Nicaragua. The guard was established to aid its own community in time of emergency. Such emergencies include floods, hurricanes and earthquakes. The list does include building military facilities on the Honduran/Nicaraguan border or training El Salvadoran army units.

Marijuana destroys users' health

To the Editor:

Occasional smokers of marijuana regard this habit as a passing fancy that can be stopped at will, only to experience a dreadful ending. A father of a son who was a heavy smoker of this weed made a concerted effort to gather all the information he could find on this subject.

He collected books, he read every doctors' report that was available, every governmental study, every police report, every magazine article. In all this massive research, he found a devastating case against the smoking of marijuana. This habit could cause loss of memory, damage to the brain, liver and lungs, just to mention a few consequences.

To the boys and girls who do not regard this habit as a passing fancy: This habit will eventually explode in your body like a bomb and destroy your health, your initiative, your way of life and make you unfit to enter the main stream of society. In other words, the penalty you pay will destroy you for life.

This habit [marijuana use] could cause loss of memory, damage to the brain, liver and lungs, just to mention a few consequences.

Students aid homeless

By NATALIE McKENNA

Homelessness. Is it a problem of poverty, housing, deinstitutionalization of the mentally ill, the breakdown of the family or a combination of all these factors?

How can Villanova students, comfortable in dorms, apartments and houses on the Main Line, reach out to the homeless men, women and children of urban America?

The Villanova community can make a difference in the lives of area homeless. The Villanova Committee for the Philadelphia Homeless, an organization promoted by Campus Ministry, contributes time, funds and caring to those who turn to soup kitchens and shelters for the basic necessities of life.

Begun in January 1983, the Villanova Committee for the Philadelphia Homeless has tapped into the wealth of resources at Villanova to provide food, shelter and various services to some less fortunate people living in the city of Philadelphia.

The committee is organized and lead by student chairpeople with a staff member from Campus Ministry as coordinator. Each chairperson is responsible for one of the three main programs of the committee.

The largest program is the Street Outreach. A group of six to eight students take back packs of peanut butter and jelly sandwiches to bus stations, train stations and back alleys of center city Philadelphia.

The students look for those who live in abandoned buildings, bathroom stalls, park benches and hot air vents.

The bread, peanut butter and jelly are donated by faculty, staff and local food stores. The sandwiches are made by members of each residence hall with the cooperation and support of the hall councils and the Office of Residence Life.

Another program involves volunteering at St. Francis Inn, a soup kitchen in the Kensington section of Philadelphia. The Inn is maintained by a community of Franciscan brothers and sisters along with volunteers from various backgrounds.

The Inn is open for coffee and donuts each morning and for dinner from 4:30-6 p.m. The St. Francis Inn often serves over 200 people a day.

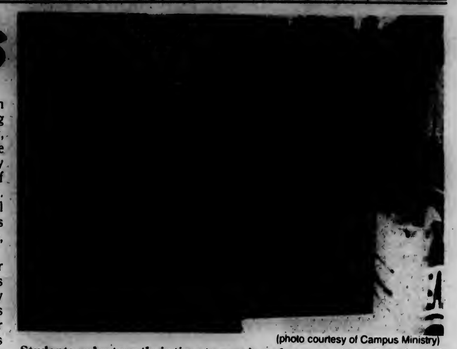
Often one pictures old men in tattered clothing when hearing the word "homeless." However, the guests at the Inn range in age from 18 months to 88 years. They are men, women and children of various ethnic origins and faiths. Some have the need for alcohol and drug rehabilitation; others have been victims of violence or, more commonly, of hard times.

The Villanova Committee for the Philadelphia Homeless sends four to five students every Friday and Saturday to the St. Francis Inn. They chop vegetables for soup, clean tables, wash dishes and serve dinner or brunch.

The third program handles campus education and fund raising. The students in this program have been able to purchase much needed household items for the shelter. The program is also responsible for programming educational and consciousness raising forums.

The fourth program is the environmental committee. This dedicated group of students does repair work for the St. Francis Inn and its community.

This year the students in this program will be joining volunteers from the international organization, "Habitats for the Homeless." They will be repairing homes and making them more livable.



The Villanova Committee for the Philadelphia Homeless recognizes the fact that small acts of service cannot change the social structures which create poverty and homelessness. The Committee's objective is to bring the Villanova community to a deeper awareness of their responsibility to minister to those less fortunate.

A commitment meeting will be held Sept. 23 at 6:30 p.m. in the Alumni gym.

Villanova Legal Aid Center:

Legal problems addressed

By R. MICHAEL BULLOTTA

Imagine you are a typical Villanova student who is under 21. You have just left a party and are walking down Lancaster Avenue toward campus when you are suddenly stopped and questioned by a police office. He claims that he smells alcohol on your breath and subsequently issues you a citation for underage drinking which will cost you nearly $300.

In this common dilemma, a student may feel that he or she has nowhere to turn for counseling and advice as to his or her legal rights in this matter. However, for the past six years there has been just such a place to go for free legal advice, and it is located right here on campus.

In 1981, Dr. Sebastian Rainone, a business law professor at Villanova, started the Villanova Legal Aid Center with the help of a few Villanova Law School students. Since then, the Center has been operating out of the basement of Sheehan Hall, aiding students with their legal problems which have included underage drinking, landlord-tenant, personal injury, auto-accident and breach of contract cases.

The main function of the Legal Aid Center is to advise students about their legal rights, prepare students for court and recommend students to a lawyer in more serious legal cases. It must be stressed that the staff of the Center does not represent students, but simply advises and prepares students for court. This is done at absolutely no cost to the student.

There are, however, certain matters that the center will not partake of. These include wills, divorces, immigration cases and any matters directed against the University itself, such as the suspension or expulsion of a student. The Center refuses to handle such cases because it would present a conflict of interests, ... as the University pays for the operation of the center.

Currently, the center is operating with a staff of four Villanova law students working under the guidance of the co-directors, Rainone and the Rev. Robert J. Martin O.S.A., J.D. The staff includes third-year law student Mark Martella, as well as second-year law students Dan Armstrong, Valerie Link and Chris Valente.

"The time to deal with the legal issue is in court and not on the street."

To make an appointment just call 645-4383 or stop by Rm. 105 in the basement of Sheehan Hall during office hours.

When asked if the Legal Center is a necessary service on the Villanova campus, Martella replied, "Yes, we've handled over 235 matters last year and I believe that if more people knew about us, we would have even more clients.

"As long as students have to rent, as long as they have to drink, and as long as the drinking age is 21, there will be a need for us."

Martella added that the landlord-tenant and underage drinking problems are the most common legal problems plaguing students at Villanova.

As far as general advice about landlord-tenant problems, Martella had a few words of caution. "Read your lease and work out all problems before you sign a lease and not after. Also, always make sure to inspect the premises before signing anything."

Career Day scheduled

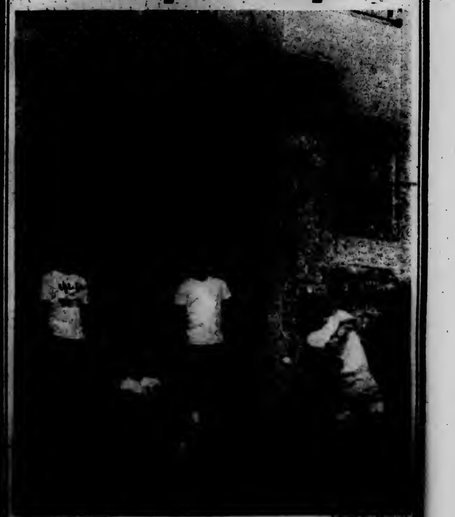
By SUSAN TOLVE

Booklets, brochures and counselors cannot provide students with the quality of information that a professional has retained. That is why the Career Development Center has arranged for 50 company representatives to come to the Villanova Room on Sept. 24, from 12:30-4 p.m. to share information and answer questions.

Career Day is "information gathering, not just for seniors, but for freshman, sophomores and juniors to start looking at different careers," explained Judy Madsen, coordinator of Career Day.

Madsen said that there are a lot of problems with seniors who come into the Counseling Center and have no idea what they want to do. She believes that talking with people from different companies and comparing these organizations can help confused students decide on what they want.

Evaluation forms completed by students after Villanova's first Career Day two years ago were used in the planning of this year's Career Day. The main complaint from students last time was the lack of companies representing areas of liberal arts. Madsen said that this year the Career Center was more selective in choosing companies and that Career Day will be more balanced for arts and science majors.



Planning for this year's Career Day began last February. Twenty-five student coordinators have been getting ready for the event, and as many as 100 students will be working on Sept. 24.

Students attending Career Day will be given brochures which contain a listing of all the companies present and some sample questions to ask the representatives. Student advisors and career counselors will also be on hand to guide students and answer any questions they have.

Madsen believes that the two most important things a student can learn on Career Day are "What can I do with my major?" and, "What career paths are available within certain industries?"

How does one go about answering these questions? "Don't be shy. That's the biggest thing. The worst thing that a student can do is just look around and not approach someone. Don't feel as if your question isn't important. All questions are important," said Madsen.

Legal aid offered

because of underage drinking, Martella said, "If you should happen to get stopped by a police officer, always be polite.

"Say 'yes, sir' and 'no, sir' and cooperate. The time to deal with the legal issue is in court and not on the street."

The Legal Aid Center is clearly a valuable resource for students and will continue to help students as it keeps expanding. If you have any legal questions, do not hesitate to stop by the center or make an appointment. The staff will be happy to assist you in whatever way it can.

So remember, do not take the law into your own hands, take it to the Legal Aid Center.

First Amendment debated

By BOB STERCA

While most people take for granted the provision of the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which includes the concept of "freedom of speech," interpretations of it have varied throughout history to the present day.

The wider interpretation of "freedom of speech" has caused many problems concerning whether pornography is to be protected under the First Amendment. This question surfaced recently with the Meese Commission and its report to the president.

On Sept. 19, at 7:30 p.m., in the Theater of the University Museum at the University of Pennsylvania, Moonstone, Inc. will present, in conjunction with other We The People 200 celebrations, a "First Amendment Forum."

The forum will feature panelists such as Murray Bacon, president of the organization Accuracy in Media; Dan Biddle, a Pulitzer Prize-winning reporter for the Philadelphia Inquirer; Angel Ortiz, a Philadelphia city councilman; and Barry Steinhardt, the executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union.

The forum's purpose is to find the fine line between "liberty and license" and the format will allow audience participation and questioning after each issue the panel considers in light of the First Amendment.

The "First Amendment Forum" is free and open to the public, but because of limited seating, those interested in attending should call to reserve seats at 215-735-9598, between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m.

We know that a cheap calculator can cost you blood, sweat and time.

Investing in a Hewlett-Packard calculator, on the other hand, can save you time and again.

HP calculators not only have better functions. They function better. Without sticking keys and bad connections.

Through October 31, you can get the cream of the calculators at a non-fat price.

We're cutting $10 off the HP-12C. That buys you more built-in functions than anyone else's financial calculator.

And we're giving away a free Advantage Module, a $49 value, with every HP-41 Advanced Scientific calculator you buy. This 12K-byte plug-in, menu-driven ROM was designed specially for students.

So drop by your campus bookstore and compare HP calculators with the rest. By midterm, you'll see what a deal this is.

FREE $49 HP-41 ADVANTAGE MODULE with purchase of HP-41. Purchase must be made between August 15, 1987, and October 31, 1987. See your local HP dealer for details and official redemption form. Rebate or free Module will be sent in 6-8 weeks.

Fans make U2 concert eventful

By KATHRYN QUIGLEY

When U2 performs, it is not just a concert, it is an event. Their show at the Spectrum this past Saturday night was no exception.

U2 is a band that inspires intense loyalty from its followers. Their sincerity and message of peace are part of the attraction. They also have a very strong connection with the audience. The lead singer, Bono, frequently picks people out of the audience to join him on stage. Saturday's performance was a good example of that.

The crowd in the Spectrum was going nuts even before the band took the stage. They were throwing beach balls, doing the wave and dancing frantically to piped-in Beatle's songs.

When the lights finally dimmed, a charge of electricity ran through the audience. All that could be seen were flickering lighters, and all that could be heard were the synchronized strains of "Where the Streets Have No Name."

As Dave "the Edge" Evans played his first guitar chords, the stage lit up to show him and the other band members: Larry Mullen, Jr. (drums), Adam Clayton (bass) and Bono Vox (lead vocals).

Bono is clearly the center of attention on stage. He sings from his heart and his soul and tries to make every concert memorable. This concert was no different. The band ripped into "I Will Follow," one of their older songs. Next came the very country-like and very biblical, "Trip Through Your Wires."

Most of the songs U2 played were from their latest album, The Joshua Tree. The album has a different sound from their others. During the concert, Bono said that during the past few years, he has discovered what real American music is — blues, country and rock-and-roll.

The first half of the concert was great, but during the second half, things started getting crazy. Bono and the band started playing "People Get Ready," an old Curtis Mayfield Song. "What do you think of my guitar playing?" Bono asked. "This song has only three chords, so even I can play it." Bono is not known for his guitar playing skill — and that is an understatement.

"You say you can play better?" he asked the crowd. "Well, come on!" With that, he picked a tall blond guy named Tom, out of the audience. Tom went up on stage and Bono showed him the chords. Tom strummed away and the crowd roared its approval.

During "Bad," a guy ran up on stage and handed Bono a block of wood. He then started taking off his necklace and was going to give that to Bono too, but he was hustled offstage by security guards.

Bono stared at the block of wood, wondering what to do with it. He shrugged his shoulders and said "only in America."

About two minutes later, a skinny girl in jeans (No, it was not yours truly) was hoisted onto the stage by her friends. She ran up to Bono and hugged him tight. He picked her up and began to dance with her.

Edge calmed things down by playing the melodic "October," and a laid back version of "New Year's Day." During "Pride," U2's dedication to Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., Bono brought two girls onstage. They had made a banner with the lyrics to the song on it.

U2 promoted their new album with a concert at the Spectrum. They'll be playing J.F.K. on Sept. 25.

U2's first encore was "One Tree Hill," a song written for Greg Carroll. Carroll was part of their road crew and died in an accident last year. Next came "With Or Without You," their first single from the album. About halfway through the song, a guy leaped onstage and grabbed the microphone from Bono. Security guards pulled the man away. Bono threw down his guitar in a rare flash of temper. "You can sing any other song, but not this one," he growled at the offender.

The band finished the song and left the stage; I had my doubts as to whether they would be back. But they were, first to play "Party Girl/Trash Trampoline," (a really silly song) and finally "40."

The audience chanted part of the words to "40": "How long to sing this song." They would have sung forever if they had not turned on the lights and started piping in the Beatle's music.

Mason Ruffner, a New Orleans-based guitarist whose fans include Bruce Springsteen and Jimmy Page, opened for U2. He is gaining recognition with his second album, "Gypsy Blood."

Ruffner played several songs from the album including, "Dancing On Top Of The World," "Running" and "Red Hot Lover."

Ruffner is an incredible guitarist. In Jimi Hendrix fashion, he played his guitar vertically, like he was sawing it, while kneeling, over his head, behind his back and with his teeth.

If Ruffner gets enough radio play and public recognition, he could become a major force in the record industry.

Ruffner will be at the 23 East Cabaret in Ardmore tomorrow night.

Innocent fairy tale proves to be entertaining

By ELANA ROSE STARR

"Maid to Order"
directed by Amy Jones produced by Herb Jaffe and Mort Engelberg

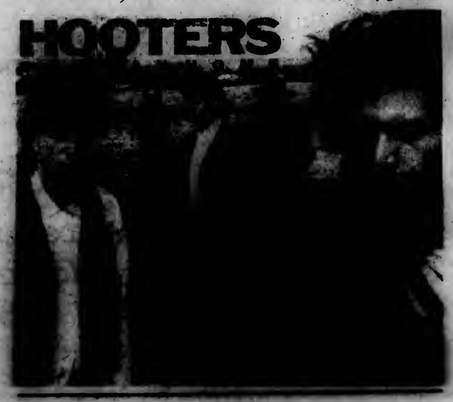
"Maid to Order" is an inverted fairy tale that is sweet, innocuous and mildly entertaining. It focuses on a lazy, born-to-shop "princess" who is magically transformed into a housemaid. The film begins and ends with the generic pronouncements "Once upon a time . . ." and "They lived happily ever after." At one point, the female protagonist even loses her slipper — updated to a pump — a la Cinderella.

Unlike the Grimm Brothers' classics, though, there are no ominous or ghoulish elements here. Instead, everything in this likeable but predictable riches-to-rags story is kept light and airy, much like Shelly Duvall's work for Showtime's "Fairy Tale Theatre" and "Tall Tales."

Ally Sheedy ("Wargames," "St. Elmo's Fire") gives her usual competent performance as Jessica Montgomery, a stereotypically spoiled, Beverly Hills heiress, whose sense of entitlement knows no bounds. When her beleaguered father (Tom Skerritt) wishes she were never born, a fairy godmother grants his request. (Sound familiar, Capra fans?)



Down on her luck, Jessie is forced to look for — uh oh, the dreaded "W" word — work as a maid, and what ensues is sporadically amusing. Her nouveaux riches employers are the Starkeys, broadly played by Valerie Perrine and the late Dick Shawn. The duo look as though they are having a terrific time, with their bathtub full of rubber duckies and closets filled with lame outfits (hers and his).

Unfortunately, the Starkeys are wan imitations of the outrageous couple in last year's "Ruthless People," done to perfection by Bette Midler and Danny DeVito. In fact, even the tasteless decor chez Starkey is evocative of the earlier film. However, instead of the post-modern, Memphis-style furnishings proferred in "Ruthless People," the mansion in "Maid to Order" is a cross between Las Vegas glitz and the Philadelphia Zoo.

Other supporting actors, including Beverly D'Angelo as the oh-so-hip, chain-smoking fairy godmother, and Michael Onthkean as the Starkeys' handsome chauffeur, are relegated to lackluster parts despite their fine abilities. This is a shame, since both have sparkled in good roles. (Catch D'Angelo in "Hair" and "Coal Miner's Daughter," and Ontkean in reruns of television's "The Rookies," opposite Kate Jackson.)

Tom Skerritt, who has been called "an actor's actor," is sufficiently stolid as Jessies's father. The only sizzling performance, though, is from Merry Clayton, a refugee from the '60's music scene, as the wise black cook with the heart of gold.

Of course, "Maid to Order" has the requisite moral: It is better to be poor, hard-working and generous than it is to be greedy, egocentric and rich. (However, no judgment is passed on those who are both very wealthy and bountiful, like Jessie's philanthropist father.) And although fairy tales are best shared with children — this reviewer saw "Maid" with an enthralled third grader — its lesson is one which today's legions of acquisitive yuppies sould not easily shrug off.

Hooters find 'One Way Home'

By MEGAN GUIDERA

One Way Home
Hooters
Columbia Records

It has been a long two-year wait, but Philadelphia's Hooters have finally released their second album with Columbia Records, One Way Home. In that two-year span, the Hooters' musical style has moved from the pop rock of their Nervous Night album to a folk-revolutionary beat that is different, but exciting.

The Hooters — Rob Hyman, Eric Bazilian, David Uosikkinen, John Lilley and Andy King — began their successful careers in Philadelphia by releasing the album Amore with Antenna records in 1983. The Hooters' popularity grew as did their musical talent, resulting in their signing a contract with Columbia Records. The Hooters then remade three songs from Amore and added six new songs to comprise the album that brought them national notoriety, Nervous Night.

The Hooters were originally noted for a pop bebop beat, however, they have left behind this image and created a highly patriotic sound in One Way Home, in which many of the songs make reference to the Civil War.

The album's first release, "Johnny B," is quite a surprise to many. It lacks the familiar beat of "And We Danced" or "Hanging on a Heartbeat." Despite its uniqueness, "Johnny B" is a catchy song that grows on the listener after two or three spins. It is a slow-paced song that centers on the theme that love blinds a person.

"Satellite," the second release, is a powerful tune that highlights Bazilian's voice. The folk beat of "Satellite" boldly expresses its theme of the perils of too much media in society.

STAFF in RESIDENCE LIFE

Linda Jaczynski

Linda is a lay minister from Carbondale, Pa. who resides in Sheehan Hall. Counted on by many as a counselor and friend, Linda's gifts also include the coordination of an inner-city spring break project, Big Brothers/Big Sisters program, and preparing students for the Sacraments of Christian Initiation and Confirmation. Her quiet and reassuring style emanates warmth and invitation to friendship.

GERRY DUFF, O.S.A.

This Augustinian is a native of Bryn Mawr, Pa., and has been a friend of the Villanova Community since his youth. He has reached many people through Sacrament and Worship experiences as a high school teacher and chaplain, as well as through counseling persons addicted to alcohol and drugs. Father Duff lives in Sullivan Hall, and divides his working hours between the Campus Ministry office, and the new offices for Alcohol and Drug Abuse Education.

Beth Hassel, P.B.V.M.

Beth is a Presentation Sister from Staten Island, N.Y. who lives and ministers in Good Counsel Hall. For the past six years Beth has devoted her creative energies towards the development of the Committees for the Homeless and the Eucharistic Ministers Program. Beth's interests in mime, dance, and clowning have often added to the texture of liturgical celebrations and Balloon Day festivities.

Noreen is our newest member on Campus and will reside in Sheehan Hall. She comes to Villanova with a variety of experiences. Trained as a nurse and also as a pastoral minister, Noreen brings insight and expertise to the complex areas of grief and loss of relationships through separation. Her interests include womens' and social justice issues.

On the Scene . . . Entertainment tidbits

By MARYJO YANNACONE

Greetings from Europe, friends and fellow students! Why am I in Europe, you ask? Well, the continent is simply jumping with western stars, and this is the best way to get the foreign dirt back to you. It seems that all the regulars in the entertainment world have chosen this week to invade the faraway places of Paris, Tokyo and even Northern Ireland. Perhaps the United States has become passe' behind our very backs!

In France, Madonna is causing a stir among local government officials. French Premier Jacques Chirac, rival to Socialist President Francois Mitterrand, surprised dignitaries in Paris when, responding to a request from his daughter, Claude, he guaranteed the performance by Madonna scheduled in Sceaux, a Paris suburb.

It seems that the mayor of the town had threatened to cancel the concert, because of unannounced reasons. Not only did Chirac intercede on Madonna's behalf, but he also cut the value tax on records nearly in half, so as to make them more affordable. Madonna visited briefly with the premier, and then proceeded to entertain a record-breaking crowd of 110,000 adoring fans.

Also in Paris this week were Sylvester Stallone and his estranged wife, Brigitte Nielsen, separately, of course. The "Rocky" star spent his time at the Paris cabaret, Paradis Latin, with American model Kathy Davis. Stallone was even seen and heard singing "America the Beautiful" with the cabaret showgirls, before flying off to Israel to film "Rambo III."

While Stallone enjoyed himself at the shows, his wife kept busy being interviewed by the Paris Match. Seeming not to have missed a beat since the separation, Nielsen announced that she had signed a contract for an Italian television show, was about to release her first album and had begun work on two new movies.

One thing is for sure, Nielsen has no intentions of reconciling with the Italian Stallion. With Stallone singing American folk tunes, and Nielsen doing her best to launch a career in music, maybe a reunion album is not too far down the road. That is certainly one worth waiting for!!

Over in Japan, Michael Jackson launched his first tour in three years. To promote his brand new Bad album, the gloved one performed in front of a wild Tokyo crowd on Sept. 12. This special return to Japan for Jackson was his first since the 1973 Jackson Five tour.

While Jackson gears up to continue his phenomenal career in Japan, Matthew Broderick seems to have ended his on the streets of Northern Ireland. The star of "War Games" and "Ferris Bueller's Day Off," Broderick has been formally charged with causing death by reckless driving to Anne Gallagher, 28, and Margaret Doherty, 62, both natives of Ireland.

Broderick returned to the United States last week with girlfriend Jennifer Grey, of "Dirty Dancing" fame. Grey was in the car at the time of the accident, and was hospitalized for shock, while Broderick suffered a broken leg. Broderick will appear in Northern Ireland in February, where he will be faced with a possible 10-year sentence for the Aug. 5 accident.

Back in the states, former speaker of the House, Tip O'Neill, has released a book about his years in politics, "Man of the House." In it, he chronicles the goings-on in the political arena from his first campaign for Cambridge City Council in 1934 to his retirement as speaker in 1986.

O'Neill discusses the Kennedys, calling Jack the "kindliest of the clan," and Bob a "know-it-all," as well as Nixon, who is described as "crude," and finally Reagan, who receives billing as a "rich-man's president." It looks as if old Tip is getting the last word on all his cronies.

One man not mentioned in the book is Gary Hart, whose alleged mistress has learned to capitalize on her success through the endorsement of No Excuses jeans in New York. While Rice plays dumb to the attention, company president Neil Cole freely acknowledges the ulterior motives in hiring darling Donna, claiming that she has a "very high profile."

So as not to neglect our furry friends in the animal kingdom, the Main Street Press of Pittstown, N.J., has released news of the impending arrival of Canine Quarterly, a magazine aimed at capturing the "essence of the modern dog." Ninety-six pages of parody available at the end of the month, CQ boasts a cover headline: "The Party Animal: Bud Light's Spuds McKenzie, 47 pounds of macho male, by Gay Taleash," as well as inside stories: "Get Serious: Hollywood's Top Dog Stars from Rin-Tin-Tin to Mike the Dog, by Rona Basset," and "Mush: From New York to Alaska," a story by "Bernard Malamute."

It seems nothing is below the modern press, and I am sure there will be many eager puppy lovers glad of that fact at the end of the month!

Hooters create a different, exciting new sound

"Karla With a K" is another catchy early American sounding song that has a hint of a country sound to it. The percussion and keyboards strengthen this song and add a great deal of power.

"Graveyard Waltz," "One Way Home" and "Washington's Day" are three patriotic songs that are a far cry from the typical Hooters music. "Graveyard Waltz" is a harsh sounding song with a blues sound to it that tends to make Bazilian's voice sound extremely screechy and rough.

"One Way Home," the title track, is another harsh tune that discusses the long journey home from war. "Washington's Day" is a long song that has a pretty sound unique to the Hooters.

"Engine 999" continues the album's tradition of an early American sound having the familiar pop beat that is often associated with the older Hooters music. This song compares a love relationship to the movement of a train. It is a good dance song that is sure to be a successful hit.

If you have ever attended a Hooters concert, one of the highlights is singing along to their invigorating version of "Fightin' on the Same Side." However, the Hooters have slowed down the song and changed some of the words.

Thus, changing it from a song that let out frustration about a failing relationship to a song that compares a squabbling relationship to the Civil War. The song starts out "We're both soldiers of the heart. . ." The song later mentions the "blue and gray," the colors of the opposite sides in the civil war.

Despite the fact that the original "Fightin' on the Same Side" was an excellent song that did not need improvement, the new version is an equally enjoyable tune that has a fun beat.

For those that have followed the Hooters since Amore, One Way Home is an album that should be listened to with an open mind a couple of times before judgment is passed.

One Way Home's patriotic sound is different for the Hooters; however, the majority of the songs complement their talent and create a pleasurable sound. The patriotic early American sound, although unique, is enjoyable to listen to in these times of anti-Americanism and global confusion.

LEGACY OF THE ANCIENTS  ELECTRONIC ARTS C64/128, AP

Never before has a role-playing game been so well-designed and presented than with this hit from Electronic Arts. It is one of the few role-playing games that tastes of a graphic adventure. In it, you design a character that must find a scroll known as the Wizard's Compendium in the land of Tarmalon and return it to the Tarmalon Galactic Museum, where your quest begins. This sounds easy until you take into account the 12 towns, 24 dungeon levels and a few continents.

The first order of business is to map out the museum. In it, you find windows that can instantly transport you to another area of Tarmalon or contain items or clues useful to your quest. All that is required is a certain coin. The graphics in the museum, and also in the rest of the game, are excellent, with flames flickering on the wall and a good sense of perspective.

Legacy of the Ancients is also distinctive because of the sound effects and music in the game. You can hear your footsteps as well as the squeal of ugly monsters as you rip them apart.

The smoothness of play and easy-to-use command menu contribute to the excellence of Legacy. Using a method first introduced in the Ultima games, all commands are shown on the screen. You only need to press the first letter of the command to execute it. Put this together with five action games within the adventure and Legacy of the Ancients is headed for the best-seller charts.

WORD WRITER 3  TIMEWORKS C64/128

Finally, Commodore 64 users can experience the features of the popular Word Writer 128 word processing program. Word Writer 3 takes everything that writers need and puts it onto two disks. The first disk contains the word processor on one side and the Spell Checker dictionary on the other side. The second disk consists of the Thesaurus of over 60,000 words. An amateur writer can basically do anything literary with these two disks. The easiest way to explain the program would be to describe the features.

The screen displays a prompt line at the top of the screen that tells you the page, line and column of the cursor's location. All commands in Word Writer 3 are accessed with a simple combination of one or two keys, keeping memorizing commands off your list of priorities. To aid in your knowledge of commands, a set of two keyboard overlays is included in the package that contains all commands.

Word Writer 3 can do so much more that it would be impossible to mention all of its power. Still, the program has an 80-column Print Preview Mode that allows you to see your file as it will be printed before it is printed. You can use boldface, underline, italics, superscript and subscript and all other printer features. An Integrated Outline Processor lets you write down ideas in an outline format. Combine these features with many more and the ability to interface with GEOS and other Timeworks programs and it is evident that Word Writer 3 is the best you can get for the Commodore 64.

221 BAKER ST.  DATASOFT C64/128, AP, AT

Based on the best-selling board game of the same name, this graphics mystery adventure places between one and four players in the roles of either Sherlock Holmes, Dr. Watson, Irene Adler or Inspector Lestrade. There are 30 possible cases that you can try to solve, each with unique situations. The game takes place in London and contains a graphic representation of the famed city.

The game play of 221 Baker St. is different, but easy to master. As one of the four characters, you must travel throughout London and use exclusive codes to gather information from one of 15 locations. This information helps solve the mystery and players try to break others' codes and change their own to thwart these attempts. This rivalry gives 221 Baker St. its flavor.

Ultimately, you must return to the title's address to announce the correct solution to the mystery if you plan to win the game. The game boasts speech synthesis, animated characters and other available Case Disks to keep the avid player occupied. Any way you look at it, 221 Baker St. takes one of the best sleuths and his colleagues and digitizes them in an equally good game.

GEMSTONE HEALER  STRATEGIC SIMULATIONS, INC. C64/124, AP

This sequel to the very popular Gemstone Warrior takes everything that made the original great and puts it into a larger and more challenging adventure. The two stand apart from other fantasy adventures in their unique method of game play, which closely mimes an arcade game rather than the average computer game. The game takes place in a large scrolling land and you move and control your inventory and weapons with the keyboard.

The story behind the game is interesting and promises an exciting ending. At the dawn of time, Mankind was given the Gemstone that allowed channeling of the Earth's magical powers into creating a virtual Paradise. The forces of evil stole the stone and, after finding that it was only an instrument of good and of no use to them, broke it into five pieces. In Gemstone Warrior, you traveled to the Netherworld to find the five pieces of the Gemstone.

Now, you have found that the Gemstone no longer has power and must be repaired. Your goal in Gemstone Healer is to return to the Demons' lair and find the healing tools that will make the Gemstone magical once again. This goal is not easy and offers a play time between 30 minutes and two hours in a scrolling land that contains over 280 trillion random possible dungeons.

The graphics in the game are consistent with the original and Gemstone Healer can be played without any prior knowledge of Gemstone Warrior. There are many magical items to find and the number of healing tools reaches 25. There are ten types of monsters that come at you in your journey, but if you have the right weapon they can all be destroyed.

Ultimately, the excellence of a game, or lack thereof, relies on the player's enjoyment. As a student with not too much time to play some games to completion for reviews, I can honestly say that Gemstone Healer let me escape for a while from the mundane world and finish its goal without being bored.

ACCOLADE'S COMICS *½ ACCOLADE C64/124, AP

Comic books were very popular in the '50's and '60's and have recently made a comeback. Along with this comeback enters a game from Accolade, called simply Accolade's Comics. This game is so different from the others that it deserves the title interactive comic book. The story line of the comic revolves around every decision you make and challenges you to eight arcade games as well.

Accolade's Comics contains two major themes and many different story lines on three double-sided disks. How you talk to characters and what you choose to do in the game dictates the story and ending. This is accomplished by using the joystick to cycle through a list of options in the actual panel of the comic and selecting one. The computer responds with the next frame or set of frames of the comic and the game goes on. This approach to the game gives it its flavor.

If that is not enough, there are eight arcade game sequences within the main game that you must conquer to be a success. As Steve Keene, private eye, you can handle these challenges as they come along, but whether you can rescue the kidnapped professor is another story.

Accolade's Comics is a needed game in a software world of shoot-em-ups, adventures and sports games. Although no mention was made of a sequel or continuation of this comic book method of game design, Accolade should strongly consider one. The game offers enough variation to keep you coming back.

GEODEX ½ BERKELEY SOFTWORKS C64

This new application for GEOS takes two useful utilities and places them on the same disk. The first is geoDex, an electronic card filing system that allows you to organize a lot of information and print it out in different ways. One entry can appear in three groupings, and searches can be performed. This utility is a welcome one for those used to using such a system. Its presentation is excellent and its closeness to its real-life counterpart is so good that you can almost reach into the screen and flip the cards.

The other utility is a dedicated mail merging program called geoMerge. This is the first program I can think of that is dedicated to mail merging. Form letters could never be easier. You can use either geoWrite or geoMerge to enter information into the program, and there is no limit to the number of useful "merged" elements that can be included. Now more than ever, GEOS owners are able to use the power of the system with these two new utilities.

Quaid makes passion look easy

By RICH ABRAHAM

"The Big Easy"
directed by Jim McBride
Columbia Pictures

Although summer is nearly over and from here on in temperatures will be plunging straight down, there are still places to be if you want something hot. One of these places is your local, air-conditioned movie theater.

Outside of the Cajun cuisine, music and love also contain certain spices in "The Big Easy." Despite the way it originally seems, this is not just a case of slick packaging, even though the backdrop is the trend-setting city of New Orleans. A smart and sassy movie that survives its plot predictability through sheer determination and the occasional twist, "The Big Easy" pleases because of its delightful quirks.

Hopefully headed for "the big time" and an embodiment of one of these quirks is Dennis Quaid ("The Right Stuff", "Innerspace") and his wickedly satisfying portrayal of Remy McSwain, a corrupt, fun-loving cop investigating a gang drug war among the "wise-guys" (Southern slang for Mafia). With a wide mischievous smile and an engaging "N'awlins" accent, McSwain has that wonderful quality of endearing slime.

From the other side, Assistant District Attorney Anne Osbourne (Ellen Barkin of "Diner" and "Tender Mercies") finds that this cool and wicked feeling she gets from McSwain is something she needs to cherish and desire. So the two throw themselves into a heat wave of passion. The result involves the "prim and proper" Osbourne in one of the sexier and steamier scenes of Hollywood desire.

But, naturally, as assistant district attorney Osbourne is also part of a team investigating police corruption, this conflict of interest presents a few trials and tribulations, one being the prosecution, and the other, the defense.

Combining love with offbeat humor, Quaid and Barkin make McSwain's and Osbourne's exchanges, romantic and otherwise, crackle with energy. Barkin's half of this quirky connection is no weaker a link. Just watching and understanding the seemingly unconnected features of her face can entertain for the beginning. With the eyes shifting and the mouth committing itself to some sort of smile, they help to keep you just a little bit off balance, which is satisfyingly just enough.

To be plain, "The Big Easy's" quirky performances, offbeat sense of humor and New Orleans foot-stomping is all that it has going for it and that is not bad, but McBride is average. Daniel Ptrie Jr.'s basic writing is somewhat mediocre. However, every movie is not a classic and at least "The Big Easy" is a diverting and entertaining curiosity that promises bigger and better things for Barkin and Quaid, without whom this film may have been mightily average.

Windham Hill enters a New Age of music

By JOE McGOWAN

Soul of the Machine
Windham Hill Sampler of New Electronic Music
Windham Hill Records

High Plateaux
Rubaja and Hernandez

The Soul of the Machine is the second release in the "New Age" record label, Windham Hill's instrumental series. The first of the series concentrated on the piano and this, the second, records the sounds of the piano's technological descendants.

Soul of the Machine brings together a variety of artists either signed to Windham Hill or independent, whose work has been exhibited on this compilation to present the musical "soul" of the modern array of synthesizers, synclaviers and other electronic keyboards.

Although groups such as Kraftwerk and Tangerine Dream are usually called to mind when the category of "electronic music" is brought up, most of the music produced in this field comes from independent, little-known artists.

The first side of this sampler sets off to a weak start until the fourth track, "Ayers Rock" by Colin Chin. What was so weak about the previous selections has not to do with either composition or performance, but — and this is crucial in the electronic field of music — the music offered is what Tangerine Dream and other musicians of their ilk did 10 years ago.

The side closes with "Peace of Mind" from Richard Schonherz and Peter Scott, which is one of the weaker pieces from their otherwise impressive 1987 Windham Hill release One Night in Vienna.

The second half of the sampler is far stronger, with "Cityscape" by Gary Chang, "Chorale" by Ted Greenwald and Scott Hiltzik, and "in the Age of Steam" by Mark Darnell. These three tracks fit into the "minimalist" vein of the electronic spectrum of music. However, they avoid the danger of this style: extreme tediousness. While Philip Glass is recognized as the genius of "minimalism," even his compositions are at times painfully boring.

The best of Soul of the Machine has been saved for last — Tim Story's "The Lure of Silence." Story does with five minutes what other electronic and minimalist artists could not do with an hour. "The Lure of Silence" builds with its layers of a rhythm that is strange and moody, and which recedes gently away.

High Plateaux is the title of another electronic release from Windham Hill, and this is the work of keyboardists Bernardo Rubaja and Cesar Hernandez. What makes High Plateaux such an interesting album is the influence of a Latin flavor on many of its electronic compositions, such as "Puerto del Sol (Gate of the Sun)," "Oro Blanco (White Gold)" and "Pampa."

Two tracks on High Plateaux, "Icebird" and "Child's Dream," mix together acoustic and electronic keyboards with a great degree of success, and "Forest" proceeds in the tradition of Tangerine Dream's more recent work on Le Parc and Underwater Sunlight.

Rubaja and Hernandez's High Plateaux was produced by Mark Isham, another of Windham Hill's artists, who is, suitably, also a keyboardist. The sound on this Windham Hill release is, no doubt to Isham's credit, remarkably clean and crisp. Rubaja and Hernandez have added diversity to the electronic music world, breaking away from the European school that has for so long set the standards for this realm of music.

In the April 1, 1985 edition of Sports Illustrated, there appeared an article by George Plimpton about a Buddhist monk, who possessed a 168mph fastball, trying out for the New York Mets. The amazing Sidd Finch became the greatest April Fool's joke ever played by the magazine. In his first novel, The Curious Case of Sidd Finch, Plimpton continues the saga of the legend who never was.

George Plimpton writes a novel about a curious case

Plimpton is best known as the "professional amateur" who played quarterback for the Detroit Lions for his book, Paper Lion, and pitched against major league hitters for his book, Out of My League, among his many other exploits. He has written many other bestselling non-fiction, non-sports books but this is his first attempt at a novel.

The Curious Case of Sidd Finch is told through Robert Temple, an out-of-work freelancer who ends up befriending Finch. Temple was a top freelancer until he broke down after taking a series of assignments to cover the Vietnam War. For the past 10 years, he has been suffering from a complete writer's block that has rendered him an almost non-person.

By accident, Temple happens upon Finch. The Mets were trying to keep Finch a secret until they could convince him to pitch for them. After Temple learns their secret, the Mets enlist him to persuade Finch that baseball is a worthy outlet for his unique abilities.

Sidd (two d's for Siddhartha, the Buddha) is an Englishman whose real name is Hayden Sidney-White Finch. He was an orphan until adopted by a famous British anthropologist. When his adopted father disappeared in a plane crash in the Himalayas, he quit school to go search for him. While in the mountains he became a trapa, an aspiring Buddish monk.

As Sidd progressed in his education, he learned the art of lung-gom, the ability to learn "the dynamic nature of the physical self" and "exert a direct influence upon any part of the body." Using lung-gom he has developed the "art of the pitch," which allows him to throw objects at incredible speeds with unerring accuracy.

The only requirements for throwing the pitch are total concentration and a bare left foot (for balance during the windup). With his pitch, however, Sidd threatens to destroy the delicate hitter-pitcher balance and change the game forever.

Temple tries to persuade Sidd that baseball is worthy of his lung-gom skills. During their conversations, Sidd presents a colorful picture of his life before and during his time with the Buddhists. This is a very beautiful and intelligent part of the work that Plimpton brings to life fully. Despite the bizarre nature of his chosen material, he attains a perfect balance of comedy and tenderness.

As Sidd shares his experiences with Temple, Temple shares the lore of baseball with Sidd. This is where Plimpton is at his best, delving into the mythic nature of sport while retaining the humanity that is always his first concern.

Temple tells Sidd of Sadahara Oh, the Japanese home run King; Steve Dalkowski, the man believed to be the fastest pitcher who ever lived but who never made it to the majors because of his control; and of many other legends and the man behind them. These passages are delights no baseball fan should miss.

The Curious Case of Sidd Finch is not just a book for sports fans. Plimpton has written a book that should appeal to all because of the merits of its great plot, interesting characters and the author's tremendous prose talents. The only gripe I have with the book is that it, as most of Plimpton's books are, over-researched to the point that it gives you all you never wanted to know about Buddhism, and more. This, however, is merely a personal cavil.

This is a book I recommend strongly for all non-sports fan readers. For sports fans, however, this book is a must, especially for those who have suffered through another long summer with "the local nine." The Curious Case of Sidd Finch is the perfect remedy to put the grand old game back into perspective.

Suspense embraced in film

By THERESA JONES

"Stakeout"
directed by John Badham
Touchstone Studios

'Stakeout,' a Touchstone film produced by Jim Kouf and Kathleen Summers, takes a unique story line and develops it into a clever combination of comedy and suspense.

Three hundred thirteen pounds of femininity was what detectives Bill and Chris (Emilio Estevez and Richard Dreyfuss, respectively) expected to turn up at their stakeout. When a slim, attractive figure about one-third that size appears ("She must have gone on a diet"), the assignment becomes a bit more bearable and the sequence of events takes on an unexpected twist.

"Stakeout," a Touchstone film produced by Jim Kouf and Kathleen Summers, takes a unique story line and develops it through a clever combination of comedy and suspense. Maria McGuire's apartment is being watched to see if her old boyfriend, Richard Montgomery, an escaped convict, will turn up there. Scenes are shifted from those in which Montgomery and his cousin work their way to Seattle to those in Seattle and at the stakeout, providing a frequent contrast of intensity and effectiveness.

A wrench is put into the works at the stakeout when Dreyfuss, as Chris, gets inside McGuire's home, posing as a telephone man in order to plant bugs. Chris' girlfriend has just left him and he finds himself helplessly falling in love with McGuire — a bit trite, perhaps, but forgivable when taken with the rest of the film.

Since McGuire is also quite attracted to her "phone man," Chris finds himself in quite a predicament. McGuire has no idea that Chris is really a detective spying on her from across the street — and the police department cannot be allowed to find out what he is doing. Only Bill knows, and he does not know what to think as he sees his partner snooping through McGuire's apartment while she is in the shower and even pausing for a peek before diving out the window.

The early scenes that involve Montgomery and his cousin escaping from jail are rather violent. Plenty of blood is spilled for those who like to see red on the screen. But throughout the remainder of the film, which includes a well-orchestrated car chase and a final battle bringing the action to a close, there is plenty of action with considerably less gore.

As mentioned before, "Stakeout" presents a superb combination of suspense and comic relief. Picture Dreyfuss trying to sneak out of McGuire's apartment without being seen by the cops across the street. She thinks he is the one being watched by the police because of his odd behavior. The police think he is the sought-after boyfriend.

Obviously, Chris has to figure out how to deal with this entire affair, pun intended. He grapples with the idea of simply breaking it off. Then, when Montgomery is assumed dead and the stakeout over, how is he to tell McGuire he is really a detective and has been watching her through binoculars from across the street, even as they talked on the phone. At least it would explain how he knew to tell her that her food was burning ("What are you — psychic?" "No, I ... uh ... heard it sizzling!").

McGuire is quite understandably upset when Chris fills her in, and she storms back to her place, only to have Montgomery turn up, obviously not dead. Chris follows her to make one last attempt at reconciliation and is greeted with Montgomery's pistol.

By now, Chris is quite adept at thinking on his feet, and manages to keep himself alive long enough for Bill to get in on the reunion. I will not go any further and spoil the ending — you will have to see it for yourself.

While it may seem like Estevez has a minor role, and indeed Dreyfuss does take the starring role, Estevez is an essential part of the humor. His quips about his partner's behavior, coupled with the practical jokes that he and the other stakeout detectives play, should at least tickle anyone's funny bone.

"Stakeout" has been released for some time and perhaps many of you have seen it. If not, try to make it to the theater before its run is over. Bring your sense of humor and enjoy an ingeniously produced film. Touchstone, the division of Walt Disney Productions that made "Stakeout," is trying to regain for Disney the reputation as a leader in film entertainment. If "Stakeout" is an indication of what is to come, they can expect great success.

If only typewriters let you proofread your work before they printed it on the page.

You've just proofread your term paper and it's got typos, spelling errors and misplaced paragraphs.

Now, you can't hand in a paper like this. So no matter how tired you are, you've got to retype the entire thing.

That is, unless you typed it on a Videowriter.®

The Videowriter solves all your typing problems.

Take the most obvious one: typos.

On an ordinary typewriter it would mean a bottle of white-out and a frustrating interruption.

On a Videowriter it just means pressing the key marked "delete." That's all. Because you type your work on a screen before you print it on a page.

It edits.

And how about those bigger problems like wanting to rearrange paragraphs?

On an ordinary typewriter you have to "cut and paste" them.

On a Videowriter you only have to press the key marked "move" and then indicate the area you want it moved to. It's that simple.

It spells.

What happens when you're typing and you come to a word you can't spell?

On an ordinary typewriter you have to stop typing, find a dictionary and look it up.

Not so on a Videowriter. Spelling problems can be corrected simply by pressing the key marked "spell."

It counts words.

If you've ever had a teacher tell you to write a thousand word essay, you know what a pain it is trying to count your words.

On an ordinary typewriter you have to do it with your finger.

But on a Videowriter you can press a mere two buttons and it does the counting for you.

It makes multiple copies.

From time to time you want a copy of what you've typed, right?

Well, if you use a Videowriter you won't have to go to the school library to look for a copier machine.

All you'll have to look for is the button marked "print." Press it and the Videowriter will make another original.

And because your work is automatically stored on a standard 3½" floppy disk, you can make those copies whenever you want.

It obviously does a lot more than type.

That's because the word processing features just go on and on.

What's more, we sell the Videowriter® Word Processor for around the price of a good electronic typewriter.

And that's quite a bargain when you consider the amount of time it'll save you. Time you can spend doing the work for your other classes.

You would do that, wouldn't you?

Executive boards set goals

By MARIE COLLEVECCHIO

Members of the executive boards of the Panhellenic Association and the Inter Fraternity Council take a break from Greek work in Sea Isle City, N.J.

Sea Isle City, N.J., was the scene for a working weekend for the executive boards of the Panhellenic Association (Panhel) and Inter Fraternity Council (IFC). A mixed setting allowed the boards to establish goals and objectives, to get reacquainted after a long summer and to welcome a new member, Bob Clarkin, IFC secretary.

The focus of the weekend was planning for the semester, as well as examining several key issues confronting the Greek system. For the first time, the IFC and Panhel developed preliminary mission statements that will be used to guide the actions of both bodies well into the future.

Two issues that occupied much of their attention were examining the possibility and impact of drug and alcohol abuse within the Greek community and how to respond to the University's Greek Study Commission Report. A decision was made to form two ad hoc committees whose function will be to address these issues.

Attending the weekend for the Panhel were Maureen Dannemiller, president; Lynn Dispenza, vice president; Pam Snarponis, treasurer; Marie Collevecchio, secretary; and Trish LaMotta, rush chairperson.

Attendants for the IFC were Lee Losciale, president; Sean Brown, vice president; Ty Marron, treasurer; and Clarkin. Gary Bonas, Greek advisor and assistant director of Student Activities, advised the weekend.

Some of the goals the board set include furthering publicity of Greek campus activities, increasing leadership training of the chapter officers, planning for membership recruitment, expanding the Greek system and focusing on service to member chapters.

One innovation to this fall's leadership weekend was Saturday night's dinner meeting and the volleyball tournament with the Villanova Union executive board. The evening provided an excellent opportunity for furthering intergroup communication among these organizations.

This leadership weekend was the second of the two bi-annual leadership weekends. The first weekend was held in January in the Pocono mountains.

Additionally, the two groups who attended the four-day North Eastern Inter Fraternity Council/North Eastern Panhellenic Conference Leadership Conference in February, will also attend the Regional Conference at Gettysburg College, and the Villanova Leadership Workshop on Saturday at the Valley Forge Hilton.

AOTT plans for rush

The sisters of Alpha Omicron Pi (AOTT) are looking forward to an exciting year after a very busy summer.

In June, Chapter President Elke Jones and Chapter Advisor Sally Gohn attended the national convention in Palm Springs, Calif. The week was highlighted by leadership workshops, guest speakers and award ceremonies.

Villanova Chapter of AOII was awarded first place for scholastics in Region 1 which includes the entire Northeast and Canada.

The summer was also highlighted by the marriage of AOTT sister Michelle Moses to Sigma Phi Epsilon's Frank Alter.

The sisters of Alpha Omicron Pi are excited to get back to school and start a new semester.

AOTT is currently planning for a block group rush this fall. On Sept. 22, the first party and informational meeting will begin at 8:30 p.m. in the Day Hop with special guests from the AOII chapter at the University of Delaware.

This year's fall rush is much different from AOTT's previous formal and informal rushes. The rushing procedure will include interviews. AOTT's international and regional rush officers will be arriving to conduct the interviews from 12 noon-8 p.m., Sept. 23 in the St. Claire House. Each sister is excited about expanding the sorority with this block rush, which is open to sophomores and juniors this semester.

Villanova pledge policy updated

By JILL M. DeFORTE

The Office of Student Activities has recently updated the policy of fraternity and sorority pledging. The purpose of the updated policy is to clearly outline what is expected from each fraternity and sorority during the formal pledging period.

By adhering to the Villanova standards, a pledging program may be developed with a more positive social and intellectual influence. Therefore, pledging would not only offer an opportunity for personal growth, but for the organization as a whole to grow as well.

In accordance with the updated policy, organizations cannot rush or pledge a first semester freshman. A written description of the pledge program, including a list of goals, is required to be submitted to the Office of Student Activities.

The policy also stresses the importance of encouraging high scholarship standards, participation in service projects and the legal use of alcohol. Statements of responsibility must be signed not only by the presidents and pledge officers, but by the pledges as well.

Another important issue addressed in the updated policy is hazing. Defined as an activity endangering a student's mental or physical health or destroying public property, hazing is prohibited by Pennsylvania State law and is in violation of University regulations.

Villanova has the right to suspend any individual found guilty of hazing. Any organization found guilty will no long be acknowledged by Villanova and will not be allowed to remain on campus. Overall, the updated policy should promote a more positive and effective pledging process, and provide a more rewarding experience for everyone involved.

AXO's Lange crowned Miss New Jersey

Robin Lange, a sister of Villanova's Alpha Chi Omega (AXO) chapter, was recently crowned Miss New Jersey and will be competing in the Miss America Contest Sept. 19 in Atlantic City, N.J.

AXO will be conducting a fundraiser and will raffle off a compact disk player.

Order of Omega meeting announced

All members of the Order of Omega are requested to attend the first meeting Sept. 23 at 7:15 p.m. in the Day Hop.

Important issues will be discussed and your attendance is appreciated.

Delta Gamma awaits exciting semester

Villanova's chapter of Delta Gamma, the Zeta Alpha chapter, is officially one year old this month. The DGs came back to Villanova with a host of new and exciting ideas that they shared at a retreat held Sept. 12.

The Delta Gamma pledges are awaiting initiation, which is scheduled for Nov. 1.

Sight conservation, a portion of Delta Gamma's philanthropy, will be addressed by the chapter this semester. The DGs plan to conduct sight conservation workshops at area grade schools.

One exciting piece of news for Villanova's Delta Gammas is the location of this year's national convention. Convention is held every other year for Delta Gammas around the nation. The event will be held in Philadelphia in June 1988.

Zeta Alpha will host the convention and will initiate their 1988 formal pledge class at this national convention. Thousands of DGs from around the nation are expected to attend.

Wildcats net first win

By DOUG SCANCARELLA

Villanova's men's soccer team kicked off its 1987 season with a three-game road trip that saw them go 1-2. A victory on opening day against St. Joseph's University was followed by losses to La Salle and Mount St. Mary's universities.

In the opener, Jeff Collins scored a first period goal against St. Joseph's, which was all the 'Cats would need as they held on to win, 1-0. The goal came at the 30:32 mark with an assist from junior forward Bill Gallagher. Tending goal for the 'Cats was Ron Klos, who played outstandingly, saving seven goals and earning the shutout.

A few days later, the Wildcats ventured to La Salle where they were topped by a score of 2-1. Sophomore John Bond, whom Head Coach Chris Jones refers to as "a great scorer," rallied for a goal at 41:30 of the second period, but it was not enough as La Salle held tough to win. Jones commented, "It was tough playing La Salle. They are made up of mostly seniors and our team is young. It was a midweek game right after the St. Joe's game and it was hard to get the guys up."

Mt. St. Mry's downed the Wildcats several days later in a tough defensive battle. Villanova played great defensively and had several shots on goal, but just could not capitalize, falling 1-0. Jones summed up the disheartening loss, saying, "We were very unlucky. We outshot them, but just could not score."

Although the 'Cats lost two of the first three, and have a difficult schedule, Jones is still optimistic. "We are playing very competitive teams this year. There are no slouches on the schedule, but we still expect to be better than last year. We have all our players back, except one. Four seniors are returning and we have four solid freshmen who are all impact players, two which are starters."

Since most of Villanova's soccer players are returning, including four seniors, they should have a successful season. However, the 'Cats are going to have their work cut out for them because of a rough schedule. Villanova will be facing teams such as Rider, Temple, Penn and Textile, as well as all the Big East teams, which include top-ranked Seton Hall.

A factor that should work in the 'Cats favor is the acquisition of Assistant Coach Ed Townsley. Townsley, the ex-Westchester assistant, has a wealth of experience and should help Villanova tremendously.

With all the talent returning this year there is still an important element missing: fan support. The soccer team had disappointing crowds at their games in 1986 and need more support in 1987. Jones said, "We need student support. Soccer is one of the top collegiate sports, so we need fans."

Though the Villanova men's soccer team dropped two of its first three games, Head Coach Chris Jones is still optimistic that his squad will have a fine season.

Grant wins at Olympic Festival

Debbie Grant became the first female runner from Villanova to win a U.S. Olympic Festival gold medal with her victory in the 800-meter in July.

Grant, who graduated in May, set a new Villanova record with her outstanding time of 2:00.47.

She now holds the top three 800-meter times and five of the top seven times in Villanova women's history.

Wildcats to be seen nationwide

For the first time in 17 years, a Villanova football game will be broadcast live across the nation.

On Nov. 19 at 8 p.m., Villanova's home game against national power Holy Cross will be televised on ESPN, one of six Thursday night games to be shown by the all-sports network.

The last nationally seen Villanova game was against Boston College on Sept. 19, 1970.

duPont starts foundation

Head Villanova Wrestling Coach John E. du Pont announced the establishment of the Foundation for America's Citizen-Athletes. The goal of the foundation is to help exceptional young athletes become fine citizens as well.

The foundation will sponsor yearly week-long workshops in Washington, D.C., where young citizen-athletes will meet with officials in U.S. government and business.

The citizen-athletes will be chosen on the basis of academic achievement, citizenship and athletic talent.

Pennefather receives Wade Trophy

Shelley Pennefather, Villanova's all-time leading basketball scorer for both men and women, was awarded the Wade Trophy this summer after leading the Wildcats to a 27-4 record in 1986-87.

The Wade Trophy, named after Margaret Wade, is given annually to the best women's basketball player in the nation, and is the highest honor a women's college basketball player can achieve.

Pennefather joins an elite group of past Wade recipients that includes Lynette Woodward, Nancy Leiberman and Cheryl Miller.

Golf team places 10th

By JOHN FAY

The Wildcat golf team totaled 604 strokes to register a 10th place finish in the 11th annual West Point Invitational held on the par 70 West Point Golf Course. Although the meet was originally slated to be a 54-hole event, rain washed out Sunday's final round and shortened play to 36 holes.

'Cat's golf coach Don Ficco was extremely pleased with the team's overall effort and envisions even stronger play for the future. Commenting on the third day cancellation Coach Ficco stated, "I certainly would have liked [to have played on] the final day because I feel we would have further shown what we were capable of."

Wildcats tie Huskies and share tourney title

By EDWARD DEMSKI

It was warm and cloudy on Sept. 12. On this day, the Villanova women's soccer team hosted Providence College in the preliminary game of the University of Connecticut Tournament.

In this fiery match, Villanova outshot Providence, with an impressive 21 shots to five shots on goal. Out of those 21 shots, junior Ann Bierne made two of them count, including the winning goal at 26.42 into the second period. Junior Lauren Anderer passed to Bierne from 10 yards out to earn the assist.

On the following day, the Wildcats played the University of Connecticut for the Division I, Final Four women's soccer championship, at the University of Connecticut.

The game commenced under overcast skies, with a steady rain falling, making play slow, wet and muddy.

Bierne led the Wildcat attack at 34:31 in the first period, scoring the only first-period goal.

Junior Jean Hajjar netted the assist.

After Villanova's score, the Huskies lashed right back without letting the Wildcats catch their breath.

UConn worked with their fast and furious offense to exhaust Villanova.

"Our team led a good offensive and defensive game," said Don Paxon, Villanova's head soccer coach. "But in the second half of the game," he continued, "our girls began to weaken. UConn began to pick up a great deal of momentum with the 90 minutes that were left in the game.

"It was like we were trying to hold back a flood of water from an exploding dam. Even though our girls were tired and beat physically, our defensive press equalled their offensive press. We only let them score one time."

The Huskies fired 33 shots at senior goaltender, Lynn McHale. However, with her incredible goaltending talents, McHale let only one shot evade her.

Villanova's entire team played well and limited the Huskies to one goal to make the final outcome of the championship game a 1-1 tie.

Paxon stated that he really did not expect to be in that game, but once his team got there, he said there was no question in his mind that the squad had the talent and the capability to defeat the top-ranked University of Connecticut.

"You can't take anything away from these girls," Paxon stated. "They all played well and gave every ounce of energy they had to hold UConn to a tie.

"We were playing with a team of only 11 people. Four of them were on the bench, and three of those four were freshmen. UConn played with a full squad with everyone on a scholarship. Our team is all walk-ons."

Senior goalie and championship-game MVP McHale stated, "We were all tense going into this match. We knew it would be tough to beat UConn, but we also knew we had a better team than last year.

"This game brought back memories of Boston College two years ago. We were there in a near monsoon and we played UConn in heavy rains also. UConn is a quicker team than we are. The rain slowed them down and gave us a break."

Bierne, a defensive sweeper, scored the only goals for Villanova in their first two Division I efforts.

Paxon commented, "It is unusual for a defensive sweeper to score as much as Ann."

It is important to note that the University of Connecticut has appeared in four of the last six Division I Final Four championships. The Huskies are nationally ranked and were again rated in the top 10 in the 1987 pre-season polls.

'Cats set to face Liberty Flames

By DOUG SCANCARELLA

On Saturday the Villanova football team will be traveling south to Lynchburgh, Va., where they are set to do battle with the Flames of Liberty University. The game will be the first time Villanova has encountered the up-and-coming Liberty team.

Liberty only went 1-9 last year, but fa ed some stiff competition. The Flames are a tough team with a lot of talent, and are vastly improved since last year. The well-coached team is making the transition from Division 2 to 1AA.

Head Coach Morgan Hout feels the Flames have a decent shot at defeating the Wildcats. "Villanova has bigger offensive and defensive lines, but otherwise, I believe we match up well. I do not see any weaknesses in the Villanova football team. Shultz is fine quarterback, who knows how to find his receivers."

Hout was correct, Shultz is a great quarterback and the offensive and defensive lines are strong. And actually Shultz is an excellent quarterback, who had a .619 completion percentage and passed for 1,964 yards in just nine games last year.

Shultz and the lines are going to be a vital part of Villanova's attack this Saturday and Coach Andy Talley is fully aware of this. "Kirk Shultz is an outstanding quarterback. That's one player we cannot afford to lose. In Kirk we have a big league quarterback."

As for the lines, Talley stated, "We have a nice nucleus of guys back on the offensive line. They all have started for three years. We look strong there. Our front people [on defense] are playing well now. We play three down linemen and we have five kids we can really play with."

A person Villanova's defense is going to have to keep a close eye on is Liberty running back Willie Larkins. Larkins, who ran for 458 yards last year, gained over 100 yards in the Liberty opening day victory over Edinboro. In addition, Larkins is a fine receiver. He led the Flames in receiving with 35 grabs.

Coach Hout said of his talented running back, "Larkins has been playing well; however, Larkins will only do as well as the other 10 guys on the offense do. If the other 10 players play well, expect Willie to have a big day."

One of those guys that is going to have to play well is Liberty quarterback Paul Jones. Jones has excellent agility in the pocket and has a strong arm. Last year, he threw for 976 yards. However Jones also threw 15 interceptions. Jones' main targets are tight end Doug Thompson and wide receiver Scott Quenn. Quenn came up with several big plays last year, and the 'Cats are going to have to watch him deep.

Although Liberty looks strong on offense, they are going to be hard pressed to move the ball on the Wildcats' strong defense. This defense consists of Ted White, a defensive tackle that registered 55 tackles, 24 of which were unassisted, and Josef Allen who was tied for the lead in quarterback sacks with John O'Brien.

Villanova also has a talented offense. In addition to Shultz, Villanova has a great pair of receivers in Greg Downs and Bob Brady. Downs is a sophomore that started in seven out of nine games last year. He has excellent speed, tremendous hands and was able to conclude the '86 campaign with 21 receptions and six touchdowns.

Brady, a junior, started all nine games last year and led the team in receiving. Coach Talley spoke highly of his two receivers, "With Greg Downs and Bob Brady we have two football players who are as good as anybody in the Big East."

On defense, the Flames have linebackers Mickey Paige and Ramon Scott, who are very talented. Paige and Scott led the Flames in total tackles, and according to Hout, they are on the same pace this year.

Another powerful defender for Liberty is the hard hitting defensive back, Richard Shelton, who had big games for the Flames in their first two appearances in '87. The three backs, along with the rest of the defense are going to be tested by Shultz, the wide receivers and Wildcat running back Ron Sency. Sency led the Cats in rushing and in scoring last year, while averaging 5.7 yards per carry.

Both coaches, Hout and Talley, are looking for wins come Saturday. Hout commented, "I feel we have a chance to win. We match up well, and have some fine players." Talley stated, "The Liberty game is important to us. If we can win that one, then we can get it off the ground."

The 'Cats are looking forward to having another good season, but Liberty can not be taken lightly. They are a solid ball club on the rise. They have a lot of talent and present multiple formations in both offense and defense. They should give the 'Cats a good fight Saturday, in Lynchburg City Stadium.

After the Liberty game, the schedule does not get any easier. Next, in the home opener, Villanova battles Mercyhurst, a team that went 6-4 last year. The rest of the schedule includes teams such as Boston University, Massachusetts, Richmond and Holy Cross. The toughness of the schedule makes the Liberty game all the more important to win.

Paving the way for Liberty on Saturday will be Willie Larkins, Liberty's top runner.

Horton to take reigns

By JOHN RICCO

The Villanova women's swimming and diving team enters their 1987-88 campaign full of talent and ready to win. The team did not lose a single player to graduation and is extremely optimistic about the upcoming season.

A main reason for this optimism was the off-season addition of Head Coach Chuck Horton. Horton, who replaces Chris McKee, is hoping to improve upon last year's impressive 12-2 record and third place finish in the Big East.

An assistant coach at Alabama last year, he wants to emphasize getting the best out of each one of his girls. "I hope to derive 100 percent effort from everyone to achieve individual lifetime best performances," he said. "I want to improve on last year's overall performance."

Though it is still early on in the year, and the season seems in the distant future, Horton likes what he has seen so far. "From all the information I have gathered, the season will be exciting," he commented.

Many times when a new coach comes on the scene, it takes the team and school a few years to adjust to him or her, but Coach Horton does not foresee any problems of this kind. He said, "Everything here is positive. The staff and administration have a positive outlook on our team."

An All-Western Athletic Conference swimmer himself at the University of Wyoming, Horton seems intent on not only the upcoming season, but the future of Villanova women's swimming as well.

When listing his goals for this year, he not only mentioned improving on last year but said, "I hope to have a good recruiting year, attracting as many talented new swimmers as possible."

With this type of attitude and the talent to go along with it, the Villanova women's swimming program seems to be in find hands and should continue to be a success for years to come.

In examining and questioning drug testing of college athletes, the comment always arises that these people represent their respective institutions and, thus, should be tested in order to maintain a positive school image. With this thought, familiar questions arise:

Do not academic scholarship winners also represent their institutions?

Does it not also hold true that anyone who wears school colors of any sort represents the school?

Why then should student athletes be singled out as the victims of this violation of rights?

If this small segment of the student population is held accountable for their activities, should not all students and faculty also be held accountable for their activities?

The situation and subsequent death of Len Bias usually enters the discussion of the drug-testing issues. The comment that accompanies this situation is that athletes, because of their strenuous lives, are more susceptible to harm than other students. However, many persons attend class, exercise and are active in extra-curricular activities. Are they not susceptible to drug-induced harm, as well.

Upon further examination of the drug-testing situation, the query of the leniency of the program also arises. If the sale, transportation and/or consumption of a drug is illegal, should not those persons that are caught be punished under the full extent of the law?

At this writing, a first-time offender (one who tests positive for drugs in the urine sample) would not lose his or her scholarship nor his or her eligibility. The only responsibility that these persons would incur is that they must be tested three times in the next 180 days and must abide by the conditions set up by the drug and alcohol counselor.

The second-time offender would lose his/her financial aid and be suspended from the team for one year. The athlete would still be allowed to attend Villanova University and would be allowed to reapply for eligibility.

Is it ethical that a crime be punished so lightly? With such limited punishment, does this not send a message to the athletes that taking drugs is not that big of a risk?

Contained within the borders of this column are many questions and few answers. In my opinion, the reason for this is that drugs are prevalent in society in general, and few could decide for themself or take a stand without seeing

Asbestos concerns continue

By SIOBHAN A. RODER

Thomas N. Trucks, director of Maintenance, stated Monday that he is unaware of any dormitory at Villanova which contains asbestos other than St. Mary's Hall. In addition, he said that there is no asbestos in the dining rooms of Dougherty Hall nor in the dining room of St. Mary's Hall.

"Except for St. Mary's, to the best of my knowledge, there is no asbestos... in any other dormitory on this campus. I can say that with all honesty. I do not know of any," said Trucks.

Trucks also asserted, "We have none [asbestos] in dining rooms here; none in Dougherty, none even in St. Mary's [dining room]. And, certainly none in Donahue [because it was built after the use of asbestos in buildings was outlawed]."

"Yes, there is asbestos on this campus [in buildings which are not dormitories], but I don't know of any dangerous situation. If I did, I'd be doing something about it," Trucks maintained.

Trucks said Maintenance has "no plans as of now [to bring in companies to clean up or remove the asbestos which is in some buildings on campus], but, as needed, it will be done."

When asked for specifics as to which buildings on campus do contain asbestos, Trucks declined to comment.

The Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., assistant to the vice president for Student Life, said he spoke to a number of St. Mary's residents and answered their questions concerning asbestos in St. Mary's Hall for about 35 minutes Monday night. Martin said he spoke at the rquest of Jennifer M. Chantz, west area coordinator, in order to respond to allegations made by a St. Mary's resident that Villanova has been "covering up" the asbestos problem in St. Mary's Hall.

Martin said the session went "fine," and he did not detect any unresolved issues remaining among the students.

Martin clarified in a telephone interview that the asbestos "to my knowledge is in the entire ceiling of the third floor [of St. Mary's Hall]" including the hallways and dormitory rooms but is not in the closets.

Traffic board members dismissed

By DANTE J. SCALA

The timing of Security Director Rowan Kelly's dismissal of five members of the traffic appeals board last week has created controversy concerning his motives for the changeover.

The letters of dismissal were dated Sept. 16, the day after the board, which judges traffic violation appeals, upheld a faculty member's appeal of a parking ticket.

Senate plans to probe Security

By DANTE J. SCALA

University senators' complaints about Security procedures led to a unanimous agreement to create a "fact-finding committee" to study the Security department and parking policies, last Friday at the Senate's first meeting.

Several top administrators supported the decision, including the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students; Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life; and the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs.

Gallen stated that the Senate committee would be better suited than the University's vice presidents to study the Security department, and he described the Security situation as a "damn mess."

The subject was brought to the Senate floor in order to find more information on how Security creates parking policy. In reply to this, Gallen said the vice presidents and the University president approved the "Parking by Permit Only" booklet.

Dr. John A. Doody, faculty council chairperson, was one of several executive committee members who thought the parking policy should be studied. Doody began discussion Friday by stating that he and other members of the traffic appeals board had been dismissed last week by Security Director Rowan Kelly after the board had upheld a faculty member's appeal of a parking ticket.

Doody also said that Security's actions were inconsistent with the conception of Villanova as a community.

After Doody's statements, the discussion quickly shifted and broadened, with several senators and Stack taking the opportunity to criticize Security's actions.

Stack, who was present in the audience, was invited to speak to the senators. He described the Security situation as a "real concern" which had created many problems for his office. He stated that his office has regularly received a number of complaints about Security from students.

Also, he said there was a sense of Security not respecting people and that Security had not "caught onto the Villanova spirit."

After Stack's speech, several student senators voiced complaints about Security. Student Sen. Naomi Karam noted that the Security department is one of the only offices on campus which does not receive student input, although the office affects students everyday.

Phil Brach, Student Government president, also questioned the lack of student input and stated that there were "inconsistencies" in Security's actions.

Student Sen. Robert Iorio said that discussions with several

The "Army's Reserve Officer Training Corps (R.O.T.C.), having recovered from its post-Vietnam enrollment slump, has become far more selective in commissioning new officers and calling them to active duty," according to a July 20, 1987 New York Times article.

Villanova University's chairperson of Naval Sciences, Capt. Charles D. Shields Jr., U.S.N., said there has been an increase in enrollment nationally, but Villanova will maintain the same class size with increased standards.

He said, "Villanova has always had an excellent enrollment number," in its R.O.T.C. program.

"The campus has supported the military, the Navy, through thick and thin for 40 years. We're drawing [students] from a segment of the population that has a heavy work ethic," Shields said.

He added, "We're also drawing from a successful group of families who are conservative and who have always supported the military. So it doesn't surprise me that Villanova is always one of the five largest of the 66 programs [across the United States] even though there are only 6,000 [students] in the school."

The Times article stated, "There has been a gradual revival of the R.O.T.C. on the campuses of the Ivy League and other prestigious universities where it was a particular target for vociferous and often violent criticism during the Vietnam War."

Shields attributes Villanova's consistent enrollment to the fact that "success breeds success."

According to Shields, two of the four most recent four-star generals in the Marine Corps, a Marine captain recently selected for the astronaut program, and the recently-elected Adm. Ray Walsh of the Ticonderoga, attended Villanova.

Shields said he toured the U.S.S. John Hancock Sept. 13, skippered by Comm. Bob O'Donnell, a Villanova alumnus.

"Bob was telling me about all his contemporaries from Villanova who are in charge of ships or in charge of squadrons right now," Shields said.

He commented, "I was most impressed by the high morale and smart appearance of the Handicapped Encounter Christ (HEC) is a retreat experience for very disabled people in our society in and around Philadelphia. Many disabled persons are poor because of the burden of their physical disability — and the hidden oppressions in the society that does not understand! The retreat takes place on Oct. 2-4. A meeting will be held on Sept. 27 at 7:15 p.m. at St. Clare's Guest House on Lancaster Avenue across from O'Dwyer Hall. We need able-bodied persons to assist during the retreat, and we also need drivers who can help the disabled get to and from the retreat center. You can call Margie Kernicky or Shawn Tracy, O.S.A. at Campus Ministry for information and details, 645-4080.

Alpha Epsilon Delta

On Oct. 6, at 12:30 p.m. in Mendel Hall, AED will be hosting Dr. Mark Panneton, a recent graduate of Creighton University School of Dentistry. Panneton will be giving a slide presentation to anyone who might be interested in dentistry as a career.

Ukranian Club

There will be a meeting at 4:30 p.m. on Oct. 1. All Ukranians as well as Rusins, Lemkos and Carpatho-Rusins welcome. Plans for this year's events will be discussed.

Basketball Tourney

Rosters for the Delurey Hall Three-on-Three Basketball Tournament are available in the Dean of Students Office, 213 Dougherty Hall. The deadline for entry is Sept. 21 at 5 p.m.

ACS

Attention Commuters: You are cordially invited to join us for coffee and donuts every week! Our next date is Sept. 30, from 8-10 p.m. See you next week in the West Lounge — it is the only way to brave the morning! Also, watch out for our posters advertising our next general meeting — Oct. 1, at 12:45 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema.

College Democrats

Organizational meeting for the new College Democrats will be held on Sept. 30, at 3:30 p.m. in the Peace & Justice seminar room. Come learn about the issues and put your activist instincts to work. Complaining about issues is one thing; doing something about them is something else. Help us do something about them.

Reception for Faculty

A reception will be held for all part-time faculty on Sept. 29, from 3-6 p.m. in the Connelly Center Lounge. Refreshments will be served.

To All Seniors

If you have a cum of 3.0 or better and have not received a letter concerning Who's Who, please contact the Dean of Students Office, 213 Dougherty Hall.

Noted Woman Theologian to Speak at Villanova

Rosemary Haughton, lecturer and author of more than 30 works, will speak at Villanova University on Sept. 30 in Connelly Center at 8 p.m. The title of the lecture is "What Kind of Church are We Making?" All are welcome.

Ushers Needed

Anyone interested in being an usher for the 11 a.m. Parents' Weekend Mass in the duPont Pavilion can contact Linda at 645-4080 or in Campus Ministry, located on the ground floor of St. Rita's Hall. The responsibilities of an usher are to welcome people and pass out the Mass bulletins to people as they come in. Also, the usher would help to direct the flow of people during Holy Communion.

Accounting Society

The Society's next event is Sept. 28 at 7 p.m. in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center. Steven Heile of Arthur Young (New York) will conduct mock interviews. Also, the wine and cheese reception for juniors and seniors is Oct. 1 at 7 p.m. in the Villanova Room. Representatives of public accounting firms and private companies will be on hand.

Bread for the World

There will be an organizational meeting for Bread For the World on Sept. 30 at 4:30 p.m. in the Peace and Justice Center in the basement of Sullivan Hall. A guest speaker from Bread for the World will be there. All are invited to join in this special event.

Lecture

The science division of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences will sponsor a special lecture on Gregor Mendel, Augustinian, Abbot of Brno, Czechoslovakia; discoverer of the Laws of heredity at 4:30 p.m. on Sept. 28 in the Chemistry Lecture Hall. The Rev. Michael Wernicke, O.S.A., Augustinian historian will present the lecture. Wernicke received his doctorate in 1971 from the University of Bonn, having been the last pupil to study under the famous historian and theologian Herbert Jedin.

Operation Identification

The Resident Student Association is sponsoring Operation Identification from Sept. 28 through Oct. 2. Resident students can register their valuables with Security. See your House Council staff for more details. Remember, better safe than sorry . . . Participate in OP ID!

Something Different

Come join the German Club in a celebration of Steuben Day. We will attend the annual Philadelphia Steuben Day Parade on Sept. 26. It is a cultural, entertaining and fun way to get away from campus. Bring your friends and meet us at the St. Mary's train station at 9 a.m.

VCACA

Villanovans Concerned About Central America (VCACA) will be holding its meetings this semester every Tuesday at 4:15 p.m. in the Peace and Justice Center. The center is located on the basement floor of Sullivan Hall. Anyone interested in the Central American crises, regardless of his/her political outlook, is invited to attend VCACA meetings, films and presentations.

Gamma Phi Honor Society

The first meeting of the Gamma Phi Honor Society will be held Sept. 29 at 12:45 p.m. in Bartley Room 209. All interested members must attend. If you have any questions regarding membership, please call 525-2641.

Biology Club

The Biology Club will have a general meeting on Sept. 30. We will elect new officers and discuss upcoming events. Anyone who would like to run for office, please attend, or make yourself known. Messages can be left in the Biology Club mailbox in Mendel Room 115. All are welcome to attend. Please make an effort to stop by. We will meet at 4 p.m. in Mendel Room 104.

AA Meeting

The University Counseling Center is sponsoring an AA meeting which meets Wednesdays at 2 p.m. in the Counseling Center's Group Room, 106 Corr Hall.

Network

On Oct. 1 the Peace and Justice Network will be having its first meeting. Representatives for all social action, peace and justice, campus ministry and related groups, along with all newly elected social awareness officers are encouraged to attend. We look forward to seeing you at 8:30 p.m. in the Center for Peace and Justice Education.

Attention All Girls

Lambda Chi Alpha is sponsoring a Slave Auctioin that will be held on Oct. 6 at Rosemont College, McShane Hall. All girls interested in buying a Lambda Chi brother for three hours of unlimited service should attend. The auction will begin at 8 p.m. and there will be a 50 cent charge at the door. There will be approximately 17-20 talent acts. For more information, see Mike Delforno or Jim McGuire in Room 146 Sullivan or call Jim Walker at 527-0294.

Hawk migration

The Biology Club is sponsoring a trip to Hawk Mountain to observe the seasonal hawk and eagle migration. The trip will be on Oct. 3. We will meet in Mendel parking lot, behind Mendel Hall, at 9 a.m. We must leave shortly after in order to catch peak migration time. Bring binoculars and a lunch. Hawk Mountain also has beautiful trails to hike on. This spectacular event only happens once a year. Don't miss it!

Concerned About a Parent's Drinking?

Information and support groups being offered for Villanova students who are concerned are about their parent's drinking problems or alcoholism. For more information or to sign up, visit or call the Counseling Center, 106 Corr Hall, 645-4050. All services at the Counseling Center are confidential.

Counseling Center

Villanova Counseling Center is offering a therapeutic discussion group focusing on interpersonal relationships. Issues to be addressed may include balancing emotional involvement with academic and social life, jealousy, level of commitment and intimacy, responsibility and compromise. Contact Villanova's Counseling Center at 645-4050.

Beds Available

Immediate openings are available for any male student currently on the waiting list who wants to live on campus. First consideration will be given to full-time students. Please respond ASAP to the Office for Residence Life, Tolentine Hall Room 220.

Political Science

On Sept. 26 the Political Science Club will be haing its first tailgate! All political science students welcome. Do not forget to come to our second meeting, Oct. 6 at 3:30 p.m. in the North Lounge when Judge Cirillo will be speaking.

Step into the world of investments! Make your money grow as you learn about the stock market. There is an informational and sign up session on Oct. 1 at 12:45 p.m. in Room 110 Bartley for all those interested. Remember, you do not have to be in business to invest.

Evaluator praises athletic program

By LYNN PERDEK

"Villanova has an excellent, well-rounded program of intercollegiate, club and intramural sports that serves the University's students well," according to the recent evaluation report on the Athletics department by George H. Hanford, president emeritus of the College Board.

The evaluation was conducted in the late spring of last year as a part of a University-wide self-assessment process currently underway during the 1986-87 and 1987-88 school years.

According to Hanford's report, Villanova's athletic program's strengths are found in the variety of quality sports activities available to students, the academic performance of students taking part in intercollegiate activities, the high caliber of coaching provided along with the dedication of the Athletic department's personnel and the facilities available.

Villanova has an excellent, well-rounded program of intercollegiate, club and intramural sports that serves the University's students well.
—Evaluator George H. Hanford

The evaluation noted that the community's appreciation of Villanova's Athletics department is lessened because of a "figurative chasm" created by Ithan Avenue, separating the Athletics department from the rest of the campus.

According to Hanford, the Athletics department draws attention from the "University family" only on special occasions, such as the construction of new athletic facilities, the reinstatement of football or when funds are dispersed during the annual University wide budget process.

It was concluded that the bridges in communication across Ithan Avenue are in danger as long as the debate over Villanova's participation in Division IAA football exists. Hanford elaborated in his report, "It makes no sense to keep rubbing salt on wounds that need to be healed, and I call upon players on both sides of Ithan Avenue to begin the healing process now."

Hanford's evaluation process was conducted in four phases. The first phase consisted of the background reading of materials sent by Dr. Angelo Armenti, chairperson of the program evaluation committee and dean of University College. The next phase was a campus visit from April 26-29, 1987.

An exit interview and preliminary findings meeting was held at the end of this visit, making up the third step of this process. The final phase included the gathering of all information and the preparation of the report.

The evaluation was based upon the study of 12 topics for self-assessment suggested by the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) and by the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools. Areas of specific consideration included the use of drugs by athletes, athletics for women, minority concerns, alumni relations, communications and Division 1AA football.

According to the evaluation of the Athletics department's finances, the athletic incomes and expenditures at Villanova are generally equal to those of comparable institutions. The average department income is approximately $2.5 million while the average yearly expenditure is approximately $5.75 million, indicating a net loss of $3.25 million. This reflects the support of the Athletics department to be about 3 percent of the general University funds.

Dr. Theodore A. Aceto, director of Athletics.

A major concern of late in the NCAA, in which Villanova was ranked very well by this evaluation, is the academic performances of student athletes. The report noted that Villanova's admission standards are well above the NCAA minimums, and the athletes are enrolled in a variety of majors, so there is no "easy athletes' route" to a diploma at Villanova.

According to the evaluation, in recent years the percentage of basketball players that have graduated has been 100 percent, and the overall graduation of athletes has been 90 percent in that same period.

The evaluation produced many recommendations to further improve the Athletics program at Villanova, including searching for more woman coaches and advisors, increasing alumni activities now focused primarily on athletics to include academic perspectives and continuing its efforts to insure the equitable use of its facilities by all elements of the Athletics program.

Fellowship seeks applicants

The James A. Finnegan Fellowship Program is currently accepting applications from students at accredited Pennsylvania colleges or universities who are considering a career in government or politics.

The fellowship will provide training in state government through weekly seminar meetings with state cabinet officers, other elected and appointed state officials and outside specialists in state government operations.

Foundation awards consist of a ten-week internship from June 1 to Aug. 15, and a stipend of $2,500.

The foundation also has a limited number of special awards, $100 each, which also provide the summer internships at standard trainee rates.

The applications must be submitted by Feb. 15, 1988. For more information write: 1988 Contest Coordinator, The James A. Finnegan Fellowship Foundation, P.O. Box 591, Harrisburg, Pa. 17108-0591.

V.U. administrators commended

Radnor Commissioner Jim Marks recently commended several Villanova University officials, including the Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., assistant to the vice president for Student Life; the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students; and Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life.

Marks commented on the administrators' cooperation with the township and their participation in the town and gown committee, which was formed several months ago to improve relations between Villanova students and Radnor residents.

Marks said the three Villanova representatives have made themselves available at any time of day.

He said that student behavior is not as much of a problem as in the past and parking violations are declining, according to the Main Line Times.

Class of 1991 profiled

By JENNIFER REIDY

The class of 1991 is "academically, the best class ever at Villanova," according to the Rev. Adrian Gilligan, O.S.A., assistant dean of Admissions.

Gilligan stated that the outstanding high school class ranks of this year's freshmen can account for their academic superiority.

He reported that 33 percent of the freshmen were in the top 10 percent of their graduating class. Moreover, 66 percent of the students were in the top 20 percent, and 92 percent were in the top 30 percent of their high school class.

However, the SAT scores of the freshmen class were essentially the same as those of previous years, according to Gilligan. This year the mean composite SAT score was 1125, while the preceding class of 1990 had a mean score of 1124.

The class of 1991 is academically the best class ever at Villanova.
—the Rev. Adrian Gilligan, O.S.A. assistant dean of Admissions

"Class rank is a much better indicator of academic ability than are SAT scores," added Gilligan.

Of this year's 1,525 freshmen, 55 percent are male and 45 percent are female. The majority of them, 241 men and 248 women, are presently enrolled in a liberal arts curriculum, while the College of Commerce and Finance follows closely with an enrollment of 276 men and 185 women.

Moreover, the College of Engineering gained 218 male and 57 female students, while sciences and the College of Nursing witnessed the lowest enrollment of all the schools, with 58 men, 69 women and 107 [illegible] men, respectively.

Aside from their academic superiority, the class of 1991 represents the first attempt by school officials to expand the University's reputation from a regional school to that of a national level. Gilligan reported that a number of the freshmen represent states as far away as Florida, Texas, California, Michigan, Illinois and Kentucky.

Gilligan commented that 91 percent of the Villanova student body represents, geographically, northern Virginia through southern New England, and the entire east coast west to Ohio.

Gilligan hopes to attract more students from the southern and western states, as well as from foreign countries. He projects that Villanova will eventually obtain this national reputation in about five to 10 years.

The Villanova administration approaches this goal through heavy recruitment for the University in the more distant areas of the United States. For instance, Villanova has attended 18 of the 25 national college fairs throughout the country, according to Gilligan.

Gilligan added, "Villanova's reputation is best spread by word of mouth. Our graduated students as well as our current students are the perfect advertisement for academic excellence."

Students develop shuttle experiments

By E. McELDOWNEY

A general meeting to organize this year's Villanova shuttle program was held Sept. 9. First conceived in 1984, the program involves Villanova students designing experiments to be conducted on a future space shuttle flight.

Initiated by Karl Zimmer, professor of mechanical engineering, to give students more than the typical paper design, the project has expanded to include faculty and students of various disciplines. A recently published newsletter, "Supernova," explains the history of the project as well as its present state and future expectations.

According to the newsletter, the first experiment will be the production of a "super polymer," or nylon, in space for examination. The experiment, conducted away from gravitational forces, should result in a polymer with "superior chemical and physical characteristics."

The second experiment, explained Zimmer, is the investigation of the boiling, evaporation and condensation of [illegible] in the [illegible]

trical engineers, the project stalled after their graduation. But now under juniors and sophomores electing to work on the experiment on an extracurricular basis, the project is quickly moving ahead again, according to Zimmer.

The two experiments will be conducted in a special 5-cubic-foot canister that can hold up to 200 pounds. The cost for this procedure and canister, called Get Away Specials (GAS), is $10,000. This amount, plus additional costs for components and special parts, will have to be raised by the program from sponsor contributions, reported the newsletter.

Currently, the program's major sponsors are General Electric/Radio Corporation of America (GE/RCA) and American Electronic Laboratories (AEL). GE/RCA has donated money for the down payment to reserve space on a future shuttle flight, as well as technical assistance.

AEL, a company which designs, manufactures and tests military equipment, has agreed to donate much of the necessary technical assistance the project needs. The company also donated its services to print the first edition of "Supernova."

At this point, the project is [illegible]

Mitchell suffers stroke

By SHARON M. NEUBAUER

James J. Mitchell, a professor of English at Villanova since 1949, is currently recovering from a stroke that he suffered Sept. 13, according to Dr. Sterling Delano, chairperson of the English department.

"Mitchell is making slow but steady progress. He is suffering mild paralysis on his left side and slight slurring of words due to the stroke," stated Delano.

According to Delano, Mitchell had planned on retiring next May, [illegible] fall semester classes, which have been reassigned to various part-time faculty, said Delano.

It is still questionable whether he will be returning to teach in the spring semester, according to Delano.

On Sept. 8, Mitchell was admitted to the University of Pennsylvania Hospital's coronary unit for testing for abnormally high blood pressure, said Delano. He was diagnosed as having arrhythmia.

While recuperating in the hospital, Mitchell suffered the stroke, according to Delano.

Studies show students apply to more colleges

(CPS) — Students are applying to more campuses and becoming "more sophisticated" in choosing which one to attend, two recent surveys indicated.

The phenomenon may help explain the mystery of why, when there are fewer 18-year-olds in the population, colleges are receiving record numbers of applications.

"Students," observed Kristin Persson of College Connections, a New York-based marketing firm that works with colleges, "have become smarter consumers."

In 1967, more than half the nation's college freshmen applied to just one school, Schalit said. But in 1986, only 35.3 percent applied to just one school.

"It was predicted that fewer 18-year-olds would mean colleges and universities would receive fewer applications," said Persson. "But that just hasn't happened. A higher proportion of 18-year-olds are enrolling in colleges.

"Students are realizing how competitive it is, and they're preparing better by taking courses to prepare for the SATs and ACTs," Persson explained. "They're also taking a better look at more colleges."

Students also are shopping around to see which schools offer the best financial aid programs, said Dr. Kenneth C. Green of UCLA.

Students' increasing sophistication — and the dwindling number of 18-year-olds — has forced colleges and universities to adopt more aggressive marketing techniques, Green said. Schools have successfully maintained enrollment levels by appealing to older students and emphasizing graduate programs.

But the number of 18-year-olds will decline by 60 percent between 1988 and 1995, he added, forcing campuses to recruit more creatively.

"The worst is yet to come," said Green.

The National Order of Omega

Member of the Greek Order of the Week

This week the Order of Omega is proud to spotlight the achievements of Leslie Dondero. Leslie is a senior psychology major from nearby West Chester, Pa. As a sister of the Delta Gamma sorority, Leslie has served as rituals chairperson and currently holds the position of vice president, chapter programming. Leslie also holds the position of facilities and logistics chair for Pan-Hellenic formal rush next spring.

A Dean's List student, Leslie is a member of the Psychology Club, the Psi Chi Honor society and, of course, the Order of Omega.

Leslie has also been actively involved in the New Student Orientation Program, serving as an administrative assistant in 1986, and then going on to dedicate the better part of the last three months to the position of Administrative Coordinator for the orientation program.

Leslie's other activities include being a member of the Villanova Leadership Society, Balloon Day and Special Olympics. When she finds the time in her busy schedule, Leslie enjoys drawing, swimming and writing. For all of her accomplishments, the Order of Omega is happy to salute Leslie Dondero of Delta Gamma as Greek of the Week.

Mary's Hall, commented after Martin spoke, "It's [asbestos in St. Mary's] pretty scary. I was very concerned when I heard there was an asbestos problem, knowing the possible effects asbestos can have."

Alexander also stated, "If the [Villanova] administration says the building is safe, I am willing to accept it ... but they should have follow-up tests and let us know our safety is their prime interest."

Several other students also urged Villanova to have further tests conducted in St. Mary's Hall.

One third floor resident said, "I trust what he [Martin] said because if there were a problem they would have an obligation as human beings to do something. I trust them [the Villanova administration], but to keep me trusting them, they should conduct more tests."

Another third floor resident stated he believed, "the problem must have been resolved," because the University had moral and legal obligations to do so. He said, though, that he and many other St. Mary's residents were upset because they felt information had been kept hidden from them. The resident added that the University should make sure further tests are conducted to ensure that the dormitory is safe "because this is our home, and we live here."

One student stated, "I believe it [St. Mary's] is safe to live in now, but I believe this latex thing [the heavy latex paint which, according to Martin, was used to encapsulate the ceiling to ensure that no asbestos would come down] will not hold up with the damage that is bound to occur."

Students expressed concern about the presence of asbestos in St. Mary's Hall this week.

PCB Update

Trucks also stated Monday that a $75,000 project to remove PCBs (polychlorinated biphenyls) from campus has been completed since the middle of January. He said since then Villanova has been "rid" of all PCBs.

According to Collier's Encyclopedia, PCBs are responsible for killing birds, fish and other wildlife in addition to causing Yusho disease in humans. Yusho disease can affect the skin, eyes and internal organs and can cause bone deformities. In 1972, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (E P A) announced some restrictions on the use of PCBs.

Accoraging to Trucks, an outside contractor, General Electric, handled the removal of PCBs. He stated all smaller energy transformer units which had contained PCBs at one time were removed, disposed of and replaced.

Trucks said the larger transformer units in the main substation were retrofitted by Genereal Electric. This involved draining the units of their PCB-laden oil and then continuously putting in new oil and draining it until a "spot reading" showed a PCB level of zero. New oil was again put in the units.

The E P A tested the oil in the transformers 90 days later and found the oil contained "well below" the allowable level of PCBs, accoraging to Trucks.

If the (Villanova) administration says the building is safe, I am willing to accept it . . . but they should have follow-up tests and let us know our safety is their prime interest.

Traffic board

Kelly did not think the appeal should be accepted, said Joseph S. McDonnell, chairperson of the board and faculty member of the college of science.

Some dismissed members said McDonnell indicated that an upholding of the appeal would not be received favorably.

However, Kelly said Wednesday there was no connection between the board's decision and the letters of dismissal. He stated that the Rev. Patrick J. Rice, O.S.A., vice president for Administration, had discussed the changeover with him in the spring. Rice was not available Wednesday to confirm this.

The letters were sent to the five members because they had all served two years and "after such an extended period of time I think it only fair that other members of the University community be given an opportunity to relieve you of this additional burden," wrote Kelly in the letter. Kelly also thanked the board members for their service.

Despite the fact that the appeal was not mentioned in Kelly's letter, its juxtaposition with the dismissal has left dismissed members questioning in varying degrees whether the upholding of the appeal was a motive in Kelly's action. None of them had received prior notice that their terms were near completion, they stated.

The dismissed members are Dr. John A. Doody, chairperson of philosophy; Harry D. Gray, director of Central Services; Dr. Oliver G. Ludwig, chemistry professor; Christine A. Lysionek, assistant to the dean of students; and Rose M. O'Driscoll, assistant to the dean of the College of Nursing.

The sequence of events

The eight-member board met Sept. 15 to vote on appeals of traffic violation tickets. One member was absent, but all of the dismissed members were present.

A re-hearing of a faculty member's case concerning a parking ticket issued April 30 between Tolentine Hall and the Chemical Engineering Building was brought before the board, according to McDonnell. The faculty member's appeal was delivered Aug. 13.

Kelly said the appeal should not be accepted because of the time span beteween the issuing of the ticket and the appeal, said McDonnell. However, there were no ultimatums delivered by Kelly to the board, stated McDonnell.

The faculty member argued that a warning ticket should have been issued, because the "no parking" signs had not been up for some time, and he had been parking there with no problems, said McDonnell.

The faculty member also stated that Security should give better notification of rule changes and that Security was acting more as an adversary, rather than as a member of the community, according to Doody.

The board voted 5-0, with two abstentions, said McDonnell, who abstained as was customary in majority decisions. Not all of the dismissed board members voted to uphold the appeal, said O'Driscoll. But the composition of the attendance indicates that at least four of the dismissed members did vote to uphold.

The upholding reversed an earlier board decision. At the Sept. 16 meeting, board members argued they had a right to reverse earlier board decisions, said McDonnell.

Kelly's letter was dated the following day, and the dismissed members received their letters between Sept. 16-18.

The dismissed members' reactions to Kelly's decision varied. Ludwig said he would give Kelly "the benefit of the doubt," while Doody stated he saw no other reason than the upholding of the appeal for his dismissal.

Gray, Lysionek and O'Driscoll agreed the timing of the letter led to a questioning of Kelly's motives for the dismissal.

McDonnell refused to comment on Kelly's possible motives for the dismissal.

Kelly indicated that his letter should be taken at face value.

Kelly also stated he always honored the board's decisions and did not tell any board members how to vote. No one interviewed denied these statements.

Kelly said he created the board two years ago to leave no doubt about the objectivity of the appeal process. He stated that the replacement of the board had not been taken care of during the summer because it was a low priority.

He also stated that new board members were already in place and that McDonnell would continue to be chairperson because he has the time to do so. Two other members who joined recently will also continue.

Down phones still sought

By SHARON A. WATERS

The addition of telephones in the dormitory rooms is "still under very active consideration by the University at this time," said Don Hoover, director of telecommunications, this week.

A phone in every room is just part of the proposed overhaul of the telecommunications system. The update would also include video and data capacities, according to Hoover.

The price quoted in the initial proposals was between $5 million and $8 million, according to Hoover. Hoover also predicted that the project, if approved, would take about six months to reach negotiations concerning a contractor for the construction of the new system. The actual physical installation of the expanded system would then take approximately 18 months.

Telecommunications International, Inc. (TII), a consulting firm hired by the University to provide more expertise in the field of telecommunications, is expected to submit a final report by the end of this month, according to Hoover.

A select committee will then review this report, which is based upon facilities' surveys, interviews and documentation reviews, and make a recommendation to the president and the Board of Trustees about continuing the project, Hoover said.

The telecommunication overhaul was first considered in 1985 in response to the need to keep up with the growth of the University. According to Emidio R. Santoleri, acting executive director of the University Computing and Information Services, "Our present system has more or less reached its limit."

Hoover agreed, but commented that there has never been a problem with blockage or phone calls not going through fast enough.

The entire phone service at Villanova begins in Kennedy Hall, from which wires run underground to the various on-campus buildings. Phones cannot currently be added because there is not a sufficient number of wires servicing the buildings. Ninety percent of the cables which encase the wires are now being used, so in order to expand the present system, wires and cables must be added, said Hoover.

The addition of underground wires and cables entails extensive labor, expensive construction and digging up sections of the campus.

At present, the dorms only offer coin-operated phones located in the hallways except for south campus, Moriarty Hall and Delurey Hall. Students in these dorms can receive phone service in their rooms through Bell of Pennsylvania.

Santoleri explained that these students would be charged a lower rate after the overhaul of the system because all phone service would be coordinated by the University. The University would thus be billed as one unit and would in turn be responsible for billing each student.

According to Hoover, another advantage for the student would be the convenience of being able to pick up the phone from the University and easily install it in one's room.

On the other hand, with Bell of Pennsylvania, a student must pay a large security deposit and installation fee and then wait for the phone company to install the phone.

Though expanding the phone service in the present dorms is the bigger obstacle, the new proposed dorms must be evaluated too. Santoleri commented, "In any new dorm construction, phone service to each room should be provided."

The University is considering various options which would accompany the expansion. One such option is the feasibility of "video networking." This video option would allow video service in any classroom to come directly from one location on campus via video hook-up, according to Hoover.

This set-up would eliminate the cumbersome task of transporting heavy video equipment and any possible damage which could result. If the video option is approved, the University would then decide which classrooms would be furnished with television monitors for video hook-up, said Hoover.

Students could also be given the opportunity to choose "simultaneous voice data capability" at an extra cost. This alternative would allow students to operate a personal computer connected to a larger system by telephone and still be able to receive incoming phone calls, stated Hoover.

Another possible feature is "voice store and forward," which would allow one to leave a message of where he will be, allowing the caller to either leave a message or call at the new location.

Besides providing a phone for every dorm room, the new system may allow for a phone for each dorm resident. Also, the University is considering the installation of a phone in every classroom for computer hook-up and every laboratory for safety purposes, according to Hoover.

National News Notes

Machines dispense condoms

In an effort to help control the spread of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, (AIDS), scores of college campuses nationwide, including the Universities of Nebraska, Minnesota and Florida, have made condoms readily available in vending machines.

According to condom sponsors, the vending machines provide not only a convenient method of obtaining condoms for unplanned or spontaneous sexual encounters, but also anonymity for those people who may be self-conscious about purchasing them.

However, opponents fear that the machines may be signifying that sexual promiscuity is allowed in the dorms. Conservative groups feel that colleges should be promoting monogamy and sexual abstinence as the best ways to escape AIDS, according to sources.

Student jailed for resisting draft

A University of Wisconsin law student was fined $10,000 and sentenced to three years at Leavenworth Federal Penitentiary for refusing to register with the Selective Service System, according to sources.

Gilliam Kerley, the exective director of the Committee Against Registration and the Draft (CARD), was accused of "aiding, abetting and encouraging" other draft registers to protest the draft, according to Judge John Shabaz.

According to CARD's acting executive director, Zoltan Grossman, the judge was making a political example in an effort to deter other anti-draft organizers.

John Russell of the U.S. Department of Justice denied this by stating that Selective Service chooses people at random to discover if they are registered.

Suicides studied at universities

A recent cooperative study investigated suicides occurring between 1980-81 and 1980-85 at eight Big Ten universities, and the University of Chicago and Southern Illinois University. The research project covers one of the largest and most diverse student populations to be studied for the problem of suicide.

The actual suicide rate at the 10 schools was 6.1 per 100,000, half the average rate of 12.2 per 100,000 for the general U.S. population aged 15 to 24.

The study also found that males accounted for 67 percent of the 77 total suicides. Graduate students committed 32 percent of the suicides. In addition, foreign students committed 9 percent of the suicides.

Drug overdose accounted for 27 percent of the deaths. Twenty-one percent committed suicide by gunshot, 17 percent by hanging, or 16 percent by asphyxiation, 14 percent by jumping and 5 percent by other methods.

Typewriters stolen from Sullivan Hall

By SIOBHAN A. RODER

An IBM Wheelwriter typewriter worth about $600 was reported stolen from the Peace and Justice Education office in the basement of Sullivan Hall Aug. 27, according to a Security incident report.

Lt. John Harrity of Security said that there were no signs of forced entry into the Peace and Justice Education office. He concluded, therefore, that the thief or thieves must have had a key.

Edward Sullivan, coordinator of Peace and Justice Education, said a report was filed with the Radnor police department, in addition to a report filed with Villanova Security. According to Sullivan, the Radnor police were "not overly optimistic about finding" the typewriter.

Sullivan said none of the keys belonging to the Peace and Justice Education office were missing and all keys given to students were accounted for.

Nancy White, a secretary in the Peace and Justice Education office, said a portable typewriter belonging to a student was also stolen. "I assume [it was stolen] at the same time because he [the student] came in a day later and his typewriter was gone."

White also said $150 worth of supplies was stolen from the photography darkroom in Sullivan Hall recently.

Hiring of mentally ill studied

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

Villanova University's Human Organization Science Institute recently conducted a study that determined that an overwhelming majority of America's largest corporations do not have any specific policy regarding hiring or promotion of workers who have a history of mental illness.

The study found that those corporations that had such hiring and promotion policies were generally pleased with psychiatrically-handicapped workers and did not see major differences between them and other employees.

The study was commissioned and released by Altro Health and Rehabilitation Services Inc., a non-profit organization that specializes in placing psychiatrically-handicapped workers in firms in the New York area.

In a survey of the hiring and promotion practices of Fortune 500 companies, Villanova researchers found that only 23 percent of the firms that responded had a specific policy governing employment of the psychiatrically-handicapped.

A majority of employers, 52 percent, without such programs admitted that they lacked expertise in this area when asked to explain what prevented them from implementing a policy, according to the study.

Fifty-one percent also said that they had serious concerns about the job performance of workers who had suffered from chronic mental illness.

According to Villanova's Dr. Brian J. Jones, associate professor of sociology, lead author of the study, these concerns are not grounded in reality. "The study shows that as firms gain more experience with psychiatrically-handicapped workers, they find that these employees can make a real contribution," he said.

Indeed, most companies that do have a policy covering these workers find that they are quite similar to non-psychiatrically-handicapped workers in their job performance, according to the survey. These companies also gave psychiatrically-handicapped workers high marks in other key areas such as promptness, absenteeism and ability to follow rules in the workplace.

"The study shows that there is a great need for education in this area," according to Dr. Barry Roff, associate executive director of Altro.

Security discussed

student groups had brought out student problems with parking procedures.

During the course of discussion, the evaluation of the division of Student Life by Dr. Arthur Shriberg of Xavier University was cited. The report described Security as a "most distressing situation" and that people "consider it arbitrary and capricious." However, Shriberg also stated, "You have done a good job of tightening up procedures in a situation that was awkward."

In his report, Shriberg described Security Director Rowan Kelly as a "strong leader" who "needs direction from Student Life."

dent Life."

Kelly was not available for comment on Tuesday.

Student Sen. John Lewis suggested that Kelly should be asked to appear before the Senate "to defend himself" against senators' charges. Neville said that he also had suggested that Kelly appear before the Senate.

Administration Sen. M. Louise Fitzpatrick, dean of the College of Nursing, said that she saw problems with Security but added that the situation might be handled at the vice presidents' level. Gallen disagreed with this idea.

After Gallen's statement, Brach motioned to form the fact-finding committee, which will consist of six members — two faculty, two students and two administration members. There was no debate on forming the committee.

Student senators Diane Carman and Brian Moses and Dr. Vito L. Punzi, chemical engineering professor, all volunteered for the committee. Stack accepted a nomination from the Senate. The Rev. Patrick J. Rice, O.S.A., vice president for Administration, who was not present at the meeting, was also nominated. Also, a member of the theatre department will be selected.

In an interview Tuesday, Stack said he had not received any notice from the Senate about the committee's tasks but said his perception was that the committee would determine if there are problems with Security, "and if so, of what nature."

Interest and competition in R.O.T.C. increases

Hancock's crew. We sent a van full of our midshipmen down to tour the Hancock Saturday [Sept. 12]. They came away very impressed.

"These are a few of the reasons why I say 'success breeds success.' When the chief of naval education and training inspector general visited Villanova, he was totally impressed by the support that Villanova University gives the Navy. He said it was the best of the 14 schools that he had personally inspected up until that time," Shields said.

The Times further commented on the recent increase in competition in R.O.T.C., "The competition for choice, active duty assignments results from a combination of fewer places in the Army for young officers and an increase in applications for R.O.T.C. scholarships as the cost of education rises and the reservoir of financial aid shrinks."

In comparison, speaking of Villanova's Naval R.O.T.C., Shields said it is more selective today than seven years ago. "I would hate to compete against these kids. They are good."

According to Shields, out of 70 seniors in the program, 68 are on scholarship.

"Of our 56 sophomores, 39 are on scholarship and we're hoping more of those students will pick up scholarships as they move through the next two semesters. Of 62 freshmen, 17 are on scholarship. Six more have three-year scholarship guarantees," he said.

He added, "I have told the other 39 that the competition is so tough they're going to have to get a 3.0 GPA in freshman year to feel confident about getting a scholarship. A 3.0 for a freshman is a tough challenge, but it can be achieved. My 26 Marines last year averaged 3.3. The overall average of the battalion was 3.01."

Shields said, "Unquestionably, it's more difficult for a freshman just making the adjustment from high school to achieve 3.0 than it is for an upperclassman. That's why I'm soliciting active involvement from our upperclass midshipmen to assist our freshmen in getting the highest grades possible.

"I would say that achieving high academic achievement from our freshmen is our top priority around here, in addition to training young men and women for the fleet," he said.

Shields stated, "I feel that Villanova is competing with the other schools for scholarships, not that one student is competing with another one."

Midshipman First Class Rich Lynch, a senior general arts major, said when he first enrolled in R.O.T.C., he was not on scholarship, but received a "two-and-a-half year scholarship after a lot of hard work."

"The quality of the person coming in is much higher today in intelligence, physical fitness and maturity," said Lynch.

Lynch stressed the "camaraderie and esprit de corps" of the unit and said "the goal as a unit is to become naval or Marine officers."

Lynch said, "A lot of people on this campus support the military and its goals. In turn, we give a lot of support to the Villanova community. It is not a parasitic relationship.

"We are more than a military group on campus. We are young men and women with a purpose. Yes, our ultimate goal is to defend our country, but we're not one-track ... There is a pretty healthy relationship between Villanova and its N.R.O.T.C. unit."

Midshipman Second Class Brian Morgan said R.O.T.C. scholarships have always been "pretty competitive."

"There were only 2,200 scholarships nationwide this year as opposed to 2,800 last year," added Midshipman Second Class John Doherty.

According to Morgan, while the Marine R.O.T.C.s are to go to the basic school, "the Navy R.O.T.C.s are the ones in competition for slots, [for instance], in naval aviation, nuclear propulsion and surface fleet.

"That competition doesn't really come until the end of the year when they apply for slots, or when they go for interviews in senior year," he said.

Midshipman Third Class Joe Alcorn, a sophomore electrical engineering major, attributed competition to the fact that the government is "being more selective in the money they're putting out."

Alcorn said the two most important factors for scholarship consideration are grades and physical fitness.

He said he has seen more people working out on a daily basis and working hard in academics as well.

Alcorn commented on the teamwork represented by the "big brother" program in which upperclassmen are assigned freshmen in their major to help with academics and personal problems.

He said, "There is fierce competition for scholarships, but non-scholarship students are not out to see others fail in their attempt to gain scholarships."

Judicial hearings required

(CPS) — In a decision that could affect students who protest at private colleges, a federal appeals court last week said Hamilton College in New York must offer judicial hearings to 12 of its students before disciplining them for participating in a sit-in.

Hamilton had suspended the 12 students who, in the series of racial tension outbreaks building on American campuses last fall, had sat in at a campus building to try to get college President J. Martin Carovano to talk to them about black students' complaints.

The appeals court decision, Carovano said Sept. 11, would give colleges "less discretion" in disciplining students.

The court, which voted 2-1 in favor of the students, said Hamilton's disciplinary policy — written specifically to comply with a 1969 New York State law — violated the students' constitutional rights to due process.

The court said in Albert v. Carovano that, "There is little doubt that Hamilton would ever have adopted the new regulations and the policy reflected therein had it not been required to do so by the state."

The case, said the students' attorney, Michael Krinsky, could be used as a precedent in other states if there's evidence of state influence or coercion on how to handle student protest.

"We successfully argued that the Constitution's due process clause gives the students the right to a hearing" before they are punished, Krinsky said.

Because they are state agencies, public schools have long been required to grant hearings in disciplinary matters. The Hamilton case, Krinsky said, established that right for private college students if their schools have links to the state.

"In a broader sense, colleges must be truly independent of the state if they want to avoid extending constitutional privileges," Krinsky said.

The court, according to Krinsky, also ruled the school violated federal civil rights laws by singling out black students — and white students active in civil rights issues — for "undue punishment."

"I consider the Court of Appeals decision a significant step forward in having Hamilton College deal with student protests in a fair and responsible fashion and also in having Hamilton pay attention to the serious racial situation on campus," Krinsky said.

In the dissenting opinion, Judge Ralph Winter wrote, "The sweeping opinion in this case subjects to federal judicial review virtually every decision disciplining students for disruption by a private college or university in the State of New York."

"Every independent college in New York will have to look at its disciplinary procedures," Carovano agreed.

Krinsky said the problem arose during the fall 1986 term, when a black student received several death threats, and other black students said they were verbally abused by whites.

In response, Hamilton convened a campus forum on racism, which, the protesters charged, ineffectively addressed the problem. The forum, they said, was typical of the school's insensitivity to racial and gender issues.

When Carovano then refused to meet the students to discuss racism further, 50 students occupied a campus building for three days. When threatened with suspension, most left. The 12 who remained were suspended for six months.

Before you choose a long distance service, take a close look.

You may be thinking about choosing one of the newer carriers over AT&T in order to save money.

Think again.

Since January 1987, AT&T's rates have dropped more than 15% for direct-dialed out-of-state calls. So they're lower than you probably realize. For information on specific rates, you can call us at 1 800 222-0300.

And AT&T offers clear long distance connections, operator assistance, 24-hour customer service, and immediate credit for wrong numbers. Plus, you can use AT&T to call from anywhere to anywhere, all over the United States and to over 250 countries.

You might be surprised at how good a value AT&T really is. So before you choose a long distance company, pick up the phone.

In 1982, Time magazine's Man of the Year was actually a machine: the computer. Time's publishers explained that the most significant force in that year's news was not a single individual, but a process, citing, "widespread recognition by a whole society that this process is changing the course of all other processes." Unfortunately, five years later, the Villanovan's production process has yet to be changed to one that uses the computer.

In virtually every newsroom across the country, the computer terminal has replaced the outdated typewriter, improving the timeliness and reporting of news. This is not so at Villanova. English, communication arts and other students interested in journalism careers are not adequately prepared for the technology of the modern newsroom that they will encounter in internships and in jobs. This lack of exposure to the computer's use in the communication field is a major drawback for those students.

While most academic majors have computers somehow integrated into their curriculum, the arts major's course of study practically ignores the computer. By not making computers an integral part of education for over 100 Villanovan staff members as well as numerous arts majors, Villanova University is neglecting a basic part of its mission statement: education.

Presently, the Villanovan staff types, edits and lays-out all articles manually on Tuesdays and Wednesdays for publication Friday. This process is lengthy, involved and antiquated. In addition, because of time constraints, Wednesday and Thursday news and events usually cannot be reported until the next week's issue, when the news had become somewhat dated.

With a computer system, though, news occurring as late as Friday morning could appear in that same Friday's issue, better serving the needs of the University. Also, the possibility of publishing twice weekly could become reality.

Furthermore, the current system is not cost effective. Articles are typed on Tuesday and Wednesday, and brought to the printer who retypes them into a computer for typesetting purposes. If a computer system were installed, staff members could type directly into a terminal connected through phone lines to the printer's typesetting machine, thereby eliminating that step and cost at the printer. And, in the future, Villanova could purchase its own typesetting machine, thus skipping another step at the printer, while providing more hands-on experience for students.

Since these printing services run in excess of $3,000 per issue — and costs have risen 20 percent in the past year alone — the savings the Villanovan could realize would easily pay the cost of the computer system. The Villanovan's advertising revenue could also provide some of the funding for these computers.

The Villanovan is the official newspaper of record for the University and has proven itself worthy of the respect of Villanova students, faculty and administrators, as well as others outside the University. Over the past several years, the Villanovan has consistently won a first-place-with-special-merit award from the American Scholastic Press Association, making it one of the top 20 weekly college newspapers in the United States. We have won awards, but we cannot go any further without computers. Our status as an award winning newspaper is to jeopardy without this technology.

The bottom line is that a computer system for the Villanovan makes sense academically, technologically and financially. The only thing that does not make sense is that previous proposals for a computer system have been rejected by the administration. Now is the time to remedy the situation before it is too late — bring 1982's Machine of the Year to the Villanovan.

Day care center recommended

To the Editor:

In response to the recommendation made in the evaluation of student life that a day care plan be instituted at Villanova, I would like to ask why there is not one already in place.

Considering that this is a Catholic university with an active pro-life organization, it is a hypocrisy not to have some kind of help available for students with young children.

Considering that this is a Catholic university with an active pro-life organization, it is a hypocrisy not to have some kind of help available for students with young children.

It also reflects poorly on the women's professional societies active on campus.

The most serious problem women face today in the advancement of a career is the lack of quality, affordable day care. Put simply, day care in the United States is a national disgrace with far too few state-licensed child-care workers for the number of children with working mothers.

Most students probably feel that this does not affect them, but if they are planning to have a family eventually, they had better start working for the change now because it will take years to remedy the situation.

Colleges and universities have always been at the head of social changes and other colleges have successfully started day care centers. Villanova needs to meet this challenge now also, and maybe the problem of child care will begin to be solved before the majority of present students need to face it.

Say no to drugs and to drug testing

By NICHOLAS RONGIONE

"I was not born to be forced"
Thoreau in Civil Disobedience

At this time of national celebration, when most of the country is commemorating the 200th anniversary of our Constitution, I find it both deplorable and depressing that our university has seen fit to institute a policy of mandatory drug testing of its student athletes.

The policy is deplorable because, in my opinion, it is unconstitutional, immoral and will lead to greater intrusions on more and more of the Villanova community. It is depressing because no individual or group on this campus has discussed, demonstrated or protested this diminution of individual freedom. Permit me to explain.

The mandatory drug testing policy, no matter how well-intentioned, flies in the face of the Fourth Amendment of our Constitution. No authority, whether it be governmental or institutional, can search a person without a warrant based on probable cause.

And what a search it is when institutional authorities can examine, not only the contents of your clothes, but the contents of your body as well! To justify such an intrusion requires facts — evidence that would convince a reasonable person that the individual to be tested was selling and/or using drugs. But the policy instituted here requires no such evidence: it stipulates that everyone be tested, that no one be given the benefit of the doubt, even though no drug use is evident.

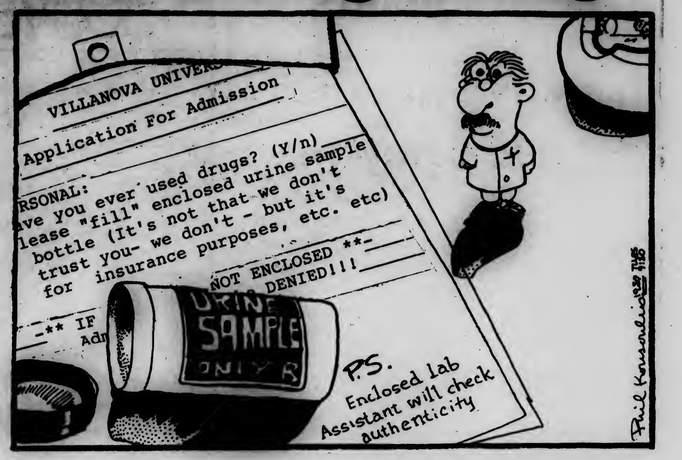
Now I am aware of the fact that the Supreme Court has not yet spoken on this issue; the legal question is still pending. But those few students who have challenged policies of this kind at other institutions have been winning their cases. I expect that when the court does take up the question, it will reaffirm what it has explained for generations in innumerable cases, namely that probable cause is required before a search can legitimately be conducted.

More importantly, the mandatory drug testing policy is immoral, a deficiency should be enough to discontinue its use at an institution based on religious and moral principles. Here at Villanova we believe, I thought, in the dignity of the person. We believe, I thought, that persons have an inviolability based on their likeness to God which endows them with rights that cannot be taken away, even by the state, even for commendable reasons.

It is wrong for institutional authority — those with power — to require of the powerless that the latter bare their very bodily fluids, because such requirements detract from their dignity as persons. The student athlete becomes nothing more than a thing to be abused at the discretion of the authorities.

And for what purpose? To please the NCAA? To please parents? To avoid legal liability? No, the only legitimate justification for such a violation of one's person would have to be evidence that people are being hurt. But no such evidence is required by the present policy.

Now please, do not misunderstand my meaning. I know that drug abuse is a serious problem with catastrophic effects on the individual and his or her family. I long for a drug-free society. But commendatory ends do not justify the employment of illegal and immoral means. If they did, we could eradicate the drug problem by executing all the drug pushers and users and be done with it once and for all.



The policy is deplorable, thirdly, because it will lead, if uncontested, from the mandatory testing of athletes to the testing of all scholarship students, to the testing of faculty, to the testing of administrators, and so on. The policy will, I am afraid, lead to a situation in which no one has any privacy in any respect. Do not diminish this eventuality. Once one group surrenders the privacy of its bodily fluids, can there be anything else left sacred?

I am, finally, depressed by the fact that no one has yet challenged the legitimacy of the policy. And I am not referring here only to the athletes who are being tested. (After all, the University has tremendous clout over them.) But where are the other 5,400 students? Are they so concerned with the trivial matters of beer, sex and money that they do not realize what is at stake here?

And what of the 500 faculty members? Are they so concerned with their academic freedom and personal careers that they have lost their interest in leadership on fundamental issues? Have we all become so complacent that the violation of 600 student athletes does not affect us? Have we all become so docile that we will protest nothing?

For myself, when they come to my office with that jar and demand my urine, as they surely will, I hope that I will have the courage to just say no . . . to drugs, and to drug testing.

Catholics portrayed inaccurately

By JOSEPH McGOWAN

Praise God for giving us Pope John Paul II to travel the world and personally preach to us what the majority of living Catholics believe.

All throughout the Pope's visit to the United States during the past few weeks, numerous articles with the same theme have appeared in national newspapers: "Pope Faces Tough Opposition In America," "Vatican And U.S. Bishops Walk A Thin Line," "Catholics At The Crossroads," etc. If you believe what you read, it appears that millions of Americans are ready to leave the Catholic Church if the Pope does not get his act together.

Liberal-minded Americans are frustrated that the Pope has not come out with new stands on issues concerning abortion, women priests, divorce, etc. However, such complaining is typical of the conceit and ignorance of many American Catholics.

Catholicism is the largest single religous denomination in the United States. Our religious enthusiasm is evident in our success with Catholic education and attendance at Sunday Masses. Obviously, for millions of Americans, the spirit of Catholicism is alive and well.

It has been common for the American media to depict the Catholic Church headed by the Vatican as a decrepit and backward institution in the midst of a highly advanced and modernized society here in the United States. We Americans believe that the best way, if not the only way, to decide what is best for a group is through democracy. This is based upon our success with issues such as determining political leaders and laws.

However, determining Church policies and teachings is not to be decided by popular vote through which minority groups, such as homosexuals, might have a chance to have their way by barking loud enough. These decisions are for the members of the Catholic hierarchy who have devoted their lives to this type of work.

To the rest of the Catholic world, Americans must appear to be spoiled brats. If you are influential enough and you have had it with your wife after 30 years and four children, it should not be too difficult to obtain an annulment that says the marriage never existed.

It is very hard to sympathize with the idiot who becomes a priest and then calls for the end of priestly celibacy. Besides, American parishioners do not want to be supporting a priest and his family. Often in the United States, the Church is important, but money is something else.

The Church is open to necessary changes. Over the past 25 years, we have discontinued all Latin masses, popes who isolate themselves inside Rome and going to confession to be absolved of the seven times we swore the previous week.

Pope John Paul II is not afraid to stand up to a San Franciscan crowd that mocks him. He and the rest of the higher clergy are aware of current world problems such as overpopulation and nuclear weapons. The Church is very concerned about many issues and is working to solve them.

American Catholics must sit back, and confidently and patiently await whatever changes the Vatican may institute. Praise God for giving us Pope John Paul II to travel the world and personally preach to us what the majority of living Catholics believe.

Press probes candidates

By SUSAN TOLVE

Does it matter if Gary Hart was unfaithful to his wife or if Joseph Biden plagiarized speeches and lied about his law school years?

It matters that the holder of the nation's highest office is a person of morals and principles. It matters that U.S. citizens elect a president they can look up to and count on for the truth.

If Hart lied to his wife, as president would he lie to his aides, Congress or the American people? If Hart flirted with danger, meeting Donna Rice at night after there were questions concerning his marital fidelity, as president would he flirt with danger on a national level?

If Biden repeatedly mixes up facts about his past, as president would his recollections during press conferences also be muddled?

Press coverage of the 1988 presidential campaign seems to be probing more into the candidates' lives than ever before. But Americans have always expected their national leader to have exceptional honesty and integrity.

George Washington could not tell a lie when he chopped down the cherry tree, and Abraham Lincoln, when he worked at a general store, searched for a customer he mistakenly did not give enough change to.

These stories, whether true or false, reveal that Americans believe trivial incidents in a person's past can tell a lot about one's character.

And character aside, a president with a closet full of skeletons could be easy prey for hungry blackmailers, which might prove to be devastating for our nation.

"Whatever the press exposes, it is ultimately up to the American people to decide if the issue raised is relevant to the presidential race and if it will hinder a candidate's journey to the Oval Office.

Benjamin Franklin said, "A lie stands on one leg, truth on two." Judging from Hart's and Biden's experiences, candidates with a "wobbly" past are going to have a difficult campaign journey.

Susan Tolve is a senior communications arts major and the associate editor of the Villanovan.

Students urged to return plants

To the Editor:

On Sept. 16, I received the following letter at the Office for Residence Life:

I live in the block of 6300 Overbrook Ave. in Philadelphia, which is in the heart of Villanova and St. Joseph's student off-campus housing. On Sept. 10, 1987, as I was leaving my home for work, I stepped out on my back porch and was devastated to see my potted plants taken from my property.

Historically, every fall when the students move in, plants and other items are taken from the homes in the neighborhood. I have had porch furniture taken one year and plants all other years. Obviously, this year was no exception. However, the plants taken this year have great sentimental value to me. I have just had a tragedy in the loss of my husband while we were on vacation, and these plants that were taken were his last gifts to me.

I know students will be students, although I cannot begin to tell you how the whole neighborhood is simply horrified by their behavior until the wee hours of the morning with the screaming, shouting obscenities to each other and their music blasting at its highest sound, with no consideration as to who may be affected by it.

I would very much appreciate if a note from you could be placed wherever the students are living in the Overbrook area asking them to return the plants that were taken from my back porch. There was a very large pink geranium planter and a Hawaiian Ty plant in a gray planter. Of the three taken, these two are the most important to me. They can return it with no questions asked. All I want are my plants.

I have just had a tragedy in the loss of my husband while we were on vacation and these plants that were taken were his last gifts to me.

I will be deeply grateful for any effort on your part to help me get my plants back.

The implication of the assumptions made in this letter should be of concern to every member of the Villanova community. Any assistance we can provide will be greatly appreciated. Anyone having information should contact my office. Thank you for your cooperation.

New graduation plan proposed

To the Editor:

This year will mark the third straight year that Villanova University has used a different graduation ceremony. The administration evidently seeks to achieve the "ideal" ceremony that will please (according to the Sept. 18, 1987 Villanova) the academic deans, the registrar, the directors of Maintenance, Housekeeping and Security, the president's office, the Radnor Township Police Department, the director of the duPont Pavilion, the dean of students and everyone involved with the planning and execution of graduation ceremonies.

I ask the administration the following two questions: Why don't you ask the students what they want? Where did you get this year's most pitiful plan for a divided graduation?

In response to the above two questions I have devised a plan of my own and present it to the administration and student body for consideration. This plan consists of four separate college graduations on Saturday at which each student's name will be read, followed by a unified outdoor graduation on Sunday. This will accomplish the goals of having each name mentioned at graduation and allowing everyone to graduate together.

This plan consists of four separate college graduations on Saturday at which each student's name will be read, followed by a unified outdoor graduation on Sunday.

The plan is as follows:

Friday May 20
N.R.O.T.C. Mass and Commissioning Ceremony

Saturday May 21
10 a.m. Commerce and Finance Graduation (in duPont Pavilion)
12 p.m. Engineering Graduation (in Jake Nevin Fieldhouse)
2 p.m. Arts and Sciences Graduation (in duPont Pavilion)
4 p.m. Nursing Graduation (in Jake Nevin Fieldhouse)
7 p.m. Baccalaureate Mass (in duPont Pavilion)

Sunday May 22
10 a.m. Villanova University Graduation (stadium)

This plan, already used at schools like the University of Pennsylvania and the University of Delaware, has proved to be effective, adequate and usable. Why don't we implement it here at Villanova for the class of 1988 graduation?

If the administration is afraid of getting wet during the outdoor ceremony, I suggest that they construct a shelter over the area where they will be seated.

Working to improve relations

To the Editor:

In a February 1987 issue of the Villanovan, the main concern of the student government external affairs department was said to be "... the improvement of relations with the University's neighbors." As this year's secretary of external affairs, I would like to assure you that once again this is one of our main concerns.

This year it is even more important to me that you understand that the external affairs department is not alone in its efforts to create a unified community of surrounding township residents and Villanova students. We are working along with members of the Villanova administration and township representatives to make living and socializing within the community more enjoyable for everyone.

The best example of this cooperative effort is the town-and-gown committee, formed last year, which is continuing to meet on a monthly basis. Local township managers and other township officials, along with members of the administration; Phil Brach, Student Government president, and myself, meet to discuss those circumstances and events, both positive and negative, members of that community must become sensitive to student's needs.

Still, if we can prove to be an asset to our surrounding community, then the members of that community must become sensitive to student's needs.

ways to improve and maintain the behavior.

Representatives from the townships seem to agree that as long as Villanova students cooperate and act respectably within the community, they will support the efforts to establish ourselves as residents of the local neighborhoods. Until they feel they have evidence of this, however, they must continue to respond to complaints from citizens.

It is only right that the local government officials are focusing their attentions on those people who were responsible for electing them into office. Still, if we can prove to be an asset to our surrounding community, then the members of that community must become sensitive to student's needs.

If for any reason you feel that you have been treated unfairly, and that those needs have not been met, please come and let me know about your situation and we will do what we can, to remedy it.

While external affairs is working for you, handling any immediate difficulties that you may encounter, you can help by taking an active role in solving the underlying problem of improving the image of Villanova students in the eyes of local home owners and businessmen.

Keep strangers out of dormitories

To the Editor:

Yes, you guessed it. This is yet another complaint about the visitation policy. No, not your usual complaint. We are not asking for a new policy. We are not asking for any policy. We are simply asking for a consistent policy.

As we understand it, no members of the opposite sex are allowed in the dorms before 12 noon. However, maintenance men are seen on a daily basis, working and roaming the halls of women's dorms, in our case, St. Rita's.

If, as they tell us, the visitation policy exists for our protection and privacy, then why is it only enforced for our friends and relatives? Waking up for an 8:30 a.m. class only to find strangers (male maintenance workers) in our hallways, stairwells and fire escapes, not to mention sitting in front of the dorm apparently fascinated by the structure of the building, does not offer us a feeling of safety and privacy.

If, as they tell us, the visitation policy exists for our protection and privacy, then why is it only enforced for our friends and relatives?

Again, we are not, at this time, asking that our friends and relatives with whom we feel safe, be allowed in. We are asking that the strangers be kept out.

Correct crowded free-weight room

To the Editor:

As of late, I have encountered extreme frustration in my attempts to use our athletic facilities, specifically the free-weight room.

The limitation of this undersized facility is only further worsened by its minimal operating hours. The room is not merely crowded during its peak afternoon hours, but is now crowded from the moment it opens until it closes. In the past, I have avoided the peak afternoon hours by working out in the early morning before class (8 a.m.) or at night after studying (9 p.m.).

May I suggest expanding the operating hours to alleviate the overcrowing, as this would benefit the student weight-lifters as a whole.

May I suggest expanding the operating hours to alleviate the overcrowding as this would benefit the student weight-lifters as a whole.

While this solution will help the weekday problem, the weekend problem will still exist unless the same extention of hours is carried over as well.

"HOW I MADE $18,000 FOR COLLEGE BY WORKING WEEKENDS."

When my friends and I graduated from high school, we all took part-time jobs to pay for college.

They ended up in car washes and hamburger joints, putting in long hours for little pay.

Not me. My job takes just one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Yet, I'm earning $18,000 for college.

Because I joined my local Army National Guard.

They're the people who help our state during emergencies like hurricanes and floods. They're also an important part of our country's military defense.

So, since I'm helping them do such an important job, they're helping me make it through school.

As soon as I finished Advanced Training, the Guard gave me a cash bonus of $2,000. Then, under the New GI Bill, I'm getting another $5,000 for tuition and books.

Not to mention my monthly Army Guard paychecks. They'll add up to more than $11,000 over the six years I'm in the Guard.

And if I take out a college loan, the Guard will help me pay it back—up to $1,500 a year, plus interest.

It all adds up to $18,000—or more—for college for just a little of my time. And that's a heck of a better deal than any car wash will give you.

THE GUARD CAN HELP PUT YOU THROUGH COLLEGE, TOO. SEE YOUR LOCAL RECRUITER FOR DETAILS, CALL TOLL-FREE 800-638-7600,* OR MAIL THIS COUPON.

A.C.S. rally burns up the roads

By R. MICHAEL BULLOTTA

It was 8 a.m. on Sunday morning when my alarm clock blared, and I soon remembered why I had set it. It was the morning of the Fall Road Rally, sponsored by the Association of Commuting Students (A.C.S.).

With this in mind, I managed to make my way to the bathroom where I downed a couple of aspirin to alleviate my souvenir from the previous night's festivities.

I then picked up the phone and politely reminded my partner that he too should get up and prepare himself for the upcoming event. After taking a sizeable amount of abuse and promising my buddy that he could keep my entire Barry Manilow collection, I got him to agree.

We arrived at the rugby Field parking lot at approximately 8:33 a.m., where we were met by 10 other cars that would be our competition. Some members of the A.C.S. were on hand to officiate the Rally.

Each car was given a list of directions with questions following each one. For example, the first direction was, "Go east on Route 30." The question that followed it was, "What SEPTA route are you on?" Fine, it sounds easy enough, but it gets tougher.

We had the good fortune to be the first car to begin the race and were labeled Car No. 1. Before we left the lot, the A.C.S. officials recorded the time, as well as my car's mileage.

After taking a few snapshots for nostalgia's sake, my trusty sidekick and I peeled out of the lot like Mario and A.J. coming out of the pits. But, as we soon found out, speed was not necessarily the key to success. By going rather quickly, we managed to drive passed the answers to questions three through five.

I then executed a U-turn, legally of course, and headed back to find out the Sunday Mass schedule at the Church of Good Shepherd as well as the current adjustable mortgage rate.

This lack of driving prudence cost us the lead, and we were now in third place. We eventually overtook the second-place car by surprising them with one of our secret weapons.

Unbeknownst to them, my partner and I were armed with your standard Uzi automatic water guns, which are crucial for an event of this kind. We simply pulled alongside the second team at a red light and we took off before the team could dry their faces. If this sounds like fun, believe me, it was.

Road rally contestants rev up their engines.

I must stress, however, that finishing the course quickly is only part of the grading system. The number of correct answers and a team's total mileage are also figured into the final score.

Many of the clues and questions, painstakenly written by A.C.S. special events chairperson, Tricia Whalon, were ingenious

V.U. musicians selected for festival band

By MARTY REYNOLDS

On Sept. 17, the nation's attention was focused on Philadelphia for the celebration of the 200th Anniversary of the Constitution ... and Villanova was there!

The Constitution Bicentennial Fanfare Unit, which was prominent in the day's events, was made up of 200 of the finest college musicians from all 50 states. Villanova's band was represented by John Alshefski, trumpet, and Rick Markham, tuba.

John is a senior accounting major and the villanova pep band's student director. Rick is a junior business administration major.

These V.U. band members joined the Fanfare Unit on Sept. 13 at the Garden Park Hotel in Cherry Hill, N.J. Fittings for their uniforms were first on the agenda. Tri-corner hats, ruffled shirts and blue Colonial jackets were combined to make a spectacular costume.

The brass ensemble was composed of 65 trumpets, 25 euphoniums, 20 mellophones, 22 tubas and 30 percussion instruments. Yamaha Corporation supplied all of the instruments in order to give the unit a uniform appearance.

A typical day's activity began with 6:30 a.m. breakfast, four hours of morning practice, lunch, three hours of afternoon practice, dinner, four hours of evening practice, and then back to the rooms to memorize the music before turning in for the night.

The group was directed by Dr. Arthur C. Bartner of the University of Southern California, and the project was coordinated by Jeff Ernstoff of Radio City Music Hall Productions, N.Y.

On Thursday morning, Constitution Day, the group left Cherry Hill at 6:30 a.m., and assembled at Penn's Landing before moving to Independence Park. Opening ceremonies began at 9 a.m. with "Opening Fanfare," written especially for the unit by Ernstoff.

Next, they accompanied the Mormon Tabernacle Choir's singing of "The Star Spangled Banner." The finale was "We the People Fanfare," composed for the occasion by Peter Nero of the Philly Pops.

The unit, with Alshefski in the front row, led the parade from Independence Park, down the Parkway, to the Philadelphia Art Museum. The rain did not dampen the spirit of the band or the enthusiasm of the crowd.

Next on the agenda was a dress rehearsal for the evening's Constitutional Gala at the Civic

Freshman ponders college life

By JACQUELYN LANZA

"Congratulations! The Committee on Admissions has approved your application for admission to Villanova University." I blinked and read it again: " ... Approved ... application ... admission ... "

It was starting to sink in. I had been accepted. I had been accepted! I laughed. My mother cried. I was going to college.

It was about time.

Now, do not get me wrong. I loved high school. But college is so much more exciting — no school uniforms, no curfews, no rules (well, not as many), fraternity parties, tailgating, INDEPENDENCE.

The spark of enthusiasm caught fire over the summer. Everyday I got mail, the highlight being my roommate's name and our dorm assignment. I shopped and packed, unpacked, repacked and crossed off the days on my calendar.

One by one, my friends left for college. It suddenly occurred to me that things were never going to

Women's team chronicled

By IRENE LANGRAN

So you claim to be a true blue Villanovan? Well now you can test your knowledge with this piece of trivia: What is significant about the school year 1968-69, and what organization, started that same year, is currently in its 20th season? The answer may surprise you.

The 1968-69 school year marked the first year women were admitted to all areas of Villanova education. And the first Villanova women's athletic team was born that same year.

This second fact may not seem that significant at first, but a study of the past 20 seasons reveals just how much has changed over that period of time.

The team we are speaking of is the women's tennis team. The team has had 20 seasons already because it switched from a fall schedule to a spring schedule, and back to a fall schedule through the years.

The program first began when a group of students approached Dr. Robert Langran, the Villanova men's tennis coach. The students asked him to coach them as they had already formed their own women's team. Langran, who still coaches both teams today, can easily recall those early years.

According to Langran, back then, the team only played local schools, most of which had started their own teams years before. It was difficult to get the seven players needed each time Villanova faced an opponent, and the program was virtually unheard of on the rest of the campus.

Langran also remembers the players having to deal with the attitude that women simply could not be as competitive as men.

Today women at Villanova compete in athletics on teams such as tennis, field hockey, soccer, volleyball, cross country, indoor and outdoor track, swimming, diving, basketball and softball, and lacrosse on a club level.

This fall, as the Villanova women's tennis team is proudly playing through their 20th season, they and the other women's athletic teams continue a proud tradition here at Villanova.

and downright hysterical. One question that I found particularly amusing concerned the unfortuante demise of one Augie Lee Roney.

The question was, "What year did Augie Lee Roney die?" When we came to this question, we were somewhere in Conshohocken. We searched all along the roadside for the important information concerning Augie, but we did not find what we had expected.

After a great deal of backtracking and retracing our directions, we came to what appeared to be an ordinary cemetery. We figured old Augie might be buried among the hundreds of others there. When we read the first tombstone we saw, we knew that it had to be the right place.

The Tombstone read, "Here lies our cat, Fluffy. May he catch lots of mice in heaven." I then read a few others which indicated the untimely deaths of other cats, dogs, hamsters and various other furry creatures.

My partner, on shotgun, quickly got out of the car and, after a little looking, found a tombstone shaped like a collie. It was that of the late Augie Lee Roney, born 1966, died 1980.

After pausing to say a few brief words in memory of Augie, we held back our tears and pressed on to answer the remaining questions. Before we could finish the race, we were required to obtain a few scavenger hunt items including a V.U. football schedule, a Dunkin' Donuts napkin, an A.C.S. Road Rally poster and a cup from Connelly Center.

At approximately 10:03 a.m., we checked in at the finishing point, and were happy to find that only one car finished ahead of us. But that did not necessarily mean we came in second.

Now it hinged on the correctness of our answers. To be perfectly honest, I did not have the utmost confidence in our answers. You really cannot blame me, since the person who was responsible for reading the directions, navigating and reading many of the signs along the road was my trusted, but legally blind (without his glasses) partner in the right seat.

While we were waiting for the other teams to finish, we unwound by enjoying some refreshments, consisting of soda and hoagies.

Finally, one by one, the remaining teams made their way to Dougherty Hall's East Lounge. Many brought with them humorous tales about the morning's activities.

Each participant was then evaluated by Whalon, Sheila Bartlett, president of the A.C.S., Joan Dorley, vice-president, and Mindy New, publicity chairperson. After considering all the pertinent facts regarding the performance of each team, the judges decided on the top three.

Our morning ended in sheer jubilation when it was announced that Car No. 1, driven by yours truly, finished in third place.

My partner and I graciously accepted our trophy and returned to our respective domiciles to make up for lost Zs. Not bad for and a blindman from Austin, Texas.

By the way, if this spectacular automotive event sounds appealing to you, you need not wait until next year. The A.C.S. has these rallies bi-annually, and the next one is in the spring.

If you decide to take the Road Rally challenge, please try to get plenty of sleep the night before, and do not forget your Uzi.

Students absorb French life and language

By STACEY WILKINS

How would you like to get six college credits in one month?

You do not think it is possible? Well, I did, along with 30 other Villanova students taking part in Villanova's summer program abroad.

The course runs the month of August with classes including Intermediate French I and II, Conversation and Composition I and II, as well as Practical French I and II, taught by Villanova instructors Dr. Rene Mongeau, Dr. Jan Rigaud and Professor Marge Caprara.

Lodging and meals were provided at the international student complex C.I.S.P. Maurice Ravel in Paris, and classes were also conveniently held in C.I.S.P. Maurice Ravel.

The real story is the learning experience which reaches far beyond the traditional classroom setting.

We constantly visited museums, such as the famous Louvre, which houses Leonardo da Vinci's Mona Lisa, and the breathtaking splendor of the French villages, such as St. Paul, nestled in the mountains.

"What would a semester be without a midterm break? Our mid-semester vacation was a four-day trip to the Riviera. We strolled the rocky beaches of Nice; visited the principality of Monaco, including the palace in which Grace Kelly resided; and caught a brief glimpse of the Monte Carlo casinos.

Yes, we conjugated irregular verbs and memorized pages of vocabulary, but the instant immersion into the French culture developed a whole other facet of appreciation for the French language.

We used the language we were studying every day; you had to if you wanted to be accepted by the French people. Unfortunately, the French foster stereotypes of brazen American tourists and do not take kindly to the presumptuous American assuming that the French are fluent in English.

Whether you know the language or not, making even a halfhearted attempt to speak it makes all the difference, so we did. Hence, we learned a great deal of French in a short time span.

What about that French food we have immortalized with its crepes and sauces and more recently with the lighter fare of nouvelle cuisine? Of course, cafeteria food is the same no matter what continent you are on, but the restaurant meals that we ate were worth writing home about.

The approximate cost of the trip is $2,450, including meals, lodging, group outings and the six-credit course.

For further information on next year's trip, see Mongeau in the modern languages department located on the second floor of Tolentine Hall or call him at 645-4680.

Center. Later that day, CBS televised the entire event.

Once again, the Constitution Bicentennial Fanfare Unit performed three numbers; Nero conducted them as they played his fanfare, they accompanied Sandi Patti's rousing rendition of the National Anthem, and they closed the gala with a stirring "Yankee Doodle."

Both Alshefski and Markham agreed that the hard work was more than compensated for by the thrill of being part of this talented group, and by meeting other students from across the nation.

Alshefski said, "It was a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity," and Markham added that, "The experience was unforgettable.

Campus Ministry Perspective

By REV. RAY JACKSON, O.S.A.

Jesus was a storyteller. His tale of the Good Samaritan reminds us that we are called to reach out and help people who have fallen by the wayside. It is a story which reminds us that everyone is our neighbor.

A different lesson is taught in the narrative about the Prodigal Son. While the title focuses on the young man who repents of his selfishness and returns home, the essence of the story is about the forgiving father who represents God, our all-forgiving Father.

Yet another of Jesus' famous stories, the one about the Unforgiving Servant, tells that God will only forgive us our failings to the degree that we are willing to forgive the mistakes of others.

In all of the parables (stories with a moral lesson), we see a contrast between the ways of God and the ways of humans. It is true that God has created us in his image and likeness; we are intelligent, creative, reflective and loving; we are capable of care and concern; we can show compassion and mercy.

Unfortunately, we are all too prone to turn inward through selfishness, revenge, indifference and manipulation. Where the ways of God invite us to help others, our ways frequently lead us to use others in order to satisfy our own needs, or harden our hearts toward the poor and oppressed.

One particular value which Jesus taught by way of storytelling is the virtue of generosity. In one tale, we find an employer paying all the laborers the same wage even though some worked a full day, while others worked for only an hour.

Our natural instincts lead us to demand better compensation for the full-time workers, but the employer, representing God, indicates that it is His prerogative to be as generous as He wishes.

He has done no one an injustice by paying all the workers equally. Jesus indicates to us that the mercy and goodness of God is offered to all people in a generous and bountiful manner.

Generosity involves not only sharing our money and possessions with others who are less fortunate, but it also leads us to share our talents, time and energy.

A conscious concern toward our family and friends through gift giving and an interest in their lives is the foundation for going beyond them to the poor and hungry of our world.

Many students at Villanova contribute their time and talent to a variety of projects from Special Olympics to feeding the homeless. Since all the Sunday collections go to the poor, many find a way to cut back on their own pleasures in order to contribute generously in the collection basket.

Whatever form it may take, generosity is high on the list of God's ways. Let us pray for a spirit of generosity within our hearts that others may experience the love of God through our kindness and gift giving.

Freshman's thoughts on V.U.

be the same. The enthusiasm waned. I was scared.

Why did I want to go to college anyway? McDonald's was hiring; maybe I could elope.

My check-in time was 9:30 a.m. As my parents and I unloaded the van onto the sidewalk, I pasted a bright smile on my face — one which in no way reflected how I was feeling inside.

Would I like my roommate? Would she like me? The tension mounted.

I walked over to an R.A. to get my key. She smiled, I introduced myself. She said they had been waiting for me. (They had been waiting for me!) She told me that my roommate had mono.

I wanted to go home. I wanted to die. But I picked up my popcorn popper, pasted on another smile and found my home away from home for the next eight months.

At that point, I began to realize what dorm life was all about. It meant carrying a refrigerator up four flights of steps. It meant sharing five washers with 411 other people.

My parents left that night and suddenly I was alone. This is what I had been waiting for, right?

Now I should say that if it were not for my O.C. — all of the O.C.s — and my orientation group, I would not have made it through the first week.

Gradually I met people. I found my way around campus and could even understand my O.C. when he said that, "All O.C.R.s in A&S are supposed to go with the S.C. to J.B. to meet the dean," — of the O.S.A., no doubt.

As the first few weeks went by, I accomplished several other things: I opened my mailbox on the seventh try. I think it is a record. Someone else said that he opened his on the sixth try, but there were no witnesses. I have made it to every class on time so far, and I have only locked myself out of my room once.

Want to meet people? Go to the library. Need a quiet place to study? Try Saturday morning at the Pit.

It takes some getting used to, but I think the freshman class is beginning to "Come Alive With Wildcat Pride."

I think I am going to like it here.

If only typewriters let you proofread your work before they printed it on the page.

You've just proofread your term paper and it's got typos, spelling errors and misplaced paragraphs.
Now, you can't hand in a paper like this. So no matter how tired you are, you've got to retype the entire thing.
That is, unless you typed it on a Videowriter.®

The Videowriter solves all your typing problems.

Take the most obvious one: typos.
On an ordinary typewriter it would mean a bottle of white-out and a frustrating interruption.
On a Videowriter it just means pressing the key marked "delete." That's all. Because you type your work on a screen before you print it on a page.

It edits.

And how about those bigger problems like wanting to rearrange paragraphs?
On an ordinary typewriter you have to "cut and paste" them.
On a Videowriter you only have to press the key marked "move" and then indicate the area you want it moved to. It's that simple.

It spells.

What happens when you're typing and you come to a word you can't spell?
On an ordinary typewriter you have to stop typing, find a dictionary and look it up.
Not so on a Videowriter. Spelling problems can be corrected simply by pressing the key marked "spell."

It counts words.

If you've ever had a teacher tell you to write a thousand word essay, you know what a pain it is trying to count your words.
On an ordinary typewriter you have to do it with your finger.
But on a Videowriter you can press a mere two buttons and it does the counting for you.

It makes multiple copies.

From time to time you want a copy of what you've typed, right?
Well, if you use a Videowriter you won't have to go to the school library to look for a copier machine.
All you'll have to look for is the button marked "print." Press it and the Videowriter will make another original.
And because your work is automatically stored on a standard 3½" floppy disk, you can make those copies whenever you want.

It obviously does a lot more than type.

That's because the word processing features just go on and on.
What's more, we sell the Videowriter® Word Processor for around the price of a good electronic typewriter.
And that's quite a bargain when you consider the amount of time it'll save you. Time you can spend doing the work for your other classes.
You would do that, wouldn't you?

Pink Floyd storms Philadelphia

By TIM DANIELS

Pink Floyd returned to Philadelphia for the first time since the 1977 Animals Tour. JFK stadium was packed Sept. 19 as the reformed group opened the show shortly after 8 p.m. with "Echoes" from the album Meddle. The opening chords billowed forth from behind a wall of smoke that concealed the band until spotlights burned it away and guitarist David Gilmour emerged.

After the numerous rumors about who was going to join the band to sing the old Roger Waters music, it was somewhat surprising to hear Gilmour handle all of the lead vocals, as well as play lead guitar. Gilmour's vocals matched the former singer/bassist Waters' emotional dirges with incredible precision and, of course, his playing was electrifying.

Completing the re-formed group is drummer Nick Mason and keyboardist Richard Wright. The band also employed a rhythm guitarist, bassist and backup singers to round out the characteristic sound.

From "Echoes" the band went into their new single "Learning to Fly," which featured the backup singers leading the crowd into the chorus. A circular video screen above the stage provided the first breathtaking footage of the night.

The new album, A Momentary Lapse Of Reason, was well-represented in the first set. The band played "One Slip" and "On the Turning Away" with great emotional power. "A New Machine" contained an instrumental that was much more rocking than the jazz version on the record. In addition, "The Dogs of War" ran wild across the video screen for the second song of the second set.

The Dark Side of the Moon provided some of the show's highlights. "Money" and "Time" kicked in with the usual sound effects of cash registers and grandfather clocks respectively. "Us and Them" was the slowest song of the concert, and Gilmour's vocals made it one of the best. "Breathe" opened with a bang as a neon plane dove over the audience, exploding into thousands of balloons that soared out of a pillar of smoke.

Although the plane was one of the few special effects, the light show was very good. Lasers shot through the sky in a choreographed dance, light circled the video screen, and overhead spotlights used in conjunction with smoke masked and unveiled individual members of the band.

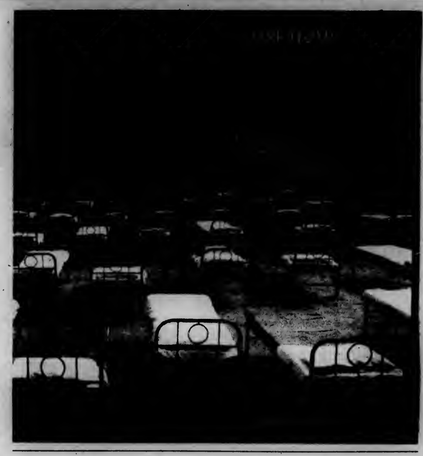
From the album Wish You Were Here, the distinctive acoustic guitar introduced the title song, which had everyone singing along. When the switch was thrown for "Welcome to the Machine," the crowd was totally captivated.

Another song from Meddle, "One of These Days," opened an exquisite second set. The computer simulated voice thundered its warning through the crowd followed by Gilmour's lightning-fast riff.

Gilmour's vocals matched the former singer/bassist Waters' emotional dirges with incredible precision and, of course, electrifying playing.

The show wound down with music from The Wall. Everyone sang the chorus, "we don't need no education," to "Another Brick in the Wall Part 2."

Then, shouting over an incredible ovation, Gilmour announced, "We're going to leave after this one," as the threatening rain finally came pouring down. The group went into an intense version of "Comfortably Numb" with an incomparable guitar solo. The lights came up, but most of the crowd continued their ovations through the driving rain.



Pink Floyd returned to the stage as the lights fell and rocked through "Run Like Hell" to the delight of the crowd. The band left, only to return once again, sending the thinned-out stadium home with "Shine On You Crazy Diamond."

This was an incredible concert. The only complaint I can possibly think of, is that they did not play anything from Animals or The Final Cut. The vocals were great, the band played as if they never separated, and a fine sound system perfectly conveyed this.

During three hours of performance, through all of their biggest hits, and two encores, the band proved that the Pink Floyd mystique lives on.

Floyd album released

By TIM DANIELS

Pink Floyd has re-formed to release A Momentary Lapse Of Reason, their first album since 1982. Although singer, songwriter and bassist Roger Waters has long since left for the artistic freedom of a solo career, the band has retained the inspiration that created some of the most successful records of all time.

Guitarist David Gilmour has stepped out of Waters' shadow and into the spotlight, as he performs the vocals, and writes all the songs. Gilmour, also is co-producer with Bob Ezrin.

On About Face, Gilmour first showed that he could be a great frontman. He proves it again for A Momentary Lapse Of Reason, along with a talent for great songwriting. Of equal importance, the leadership that he exhibits has unified the group to recover the fire that is so frequently lost when a key member leaves.

The album opens with the instrumental "Signs of Life." With a creaking rowboat in the background, the lead guitar finally emerges from a sea of keyboards for an arrangement and sound extremely reminiscent to that of "Shine On You Crazy Diamond." This dies out for the machine-like beat of "Learning to Fly," which describes this incomparable sensation with the help of a soaring guitar and sleek backup singing.

"One Slip" contains great lyrics about the "momentary lapse of reason" that leads a man to slide into the trap of love. Drummer Nick Mason's fine playing holds the verses together through some slick bass solos by Tony Levin.

One of the few acoustic guitar leads is found "On the Turning Away." The acoustic slowly metamorphizes into the best electric guitar solo on the record. Once again, excellent lyrics convey the stirring theme about the abandonment of "the pale and the downtrodden."

"Yet another Movie" is also in keeping with the dark vision of Pink Floyd. Cryptic lyrics describe the imaginary world of the cinema, backed up by prominent drumming.

"A New Machine" is a two-part song, which features Gil-

FACING A SLOW, PAINFUL END, EMILY BAUER SAW ONLY ONE WAY OUT. WITH THE PROMISE OF HER HUSBAND'S HELP, SHE MADE THE MOST IMPORTANT DECISION OF HER LIFE...

This Far and No More
A TRUE STORY
ANDREW H. MALCOLM

Book probes the right to die

This Far and No More
by Andrew H. Malcolm Times Books

By ROBERT DUGGAN

It all began with a stumble for Emily Bauer. She was a successful psychologist, loving wife, mother of two young children and a strong-willed woman who would contract a disease that would lead her to one day make the decision to end her own life.

This Far and No More by Andrew H. Malcolm is the true story of a woman who he has given the fictional name of Bauer. Malcolm, the Chicago bureau chief of The New York Times, has long been concerned with the issues of death and dying in America. Malcolm felt that Bauer's story must be written to inform people about "the developing right-to-die issue and the new kinds of painful dilemmas that patients, their families and doctors face every day and night" and how "to cope with the agonizing decisions that accompany marvelous advances."
Of the 6,507 Americans who die on an average day, 80 percent meet their end in hospitals or medical institutions. It is this isolation of death from everyday society that Malcolm confronts. Americans have grown to regard death and dying as taboos that should be confined to the medical "industry."

When forced to deal with death through family members or in our own lives, we feel alone and unable to cope with a situation we have always known would occur but never prepared for. This Far and No More teaches us through the life and death of Bauer that we are not alone.

Bauer contracts ALS, better known as Lou Gehrig's disease. Beginning as merely a minor foot problem, she could not foresee this crippling disease escalating in three long years to the point where her only bodily movement would be the slightest head movements and eye-blinking. The same analytic mind and determined will she exhibited before the disease, were now imprisoned in a totally useless body.

Malcolm makes extensive use of the journal Bauer kept during her illness to reveal the mental anguish and total helplessness she felt. (She kept the diary even up to her final days by using a special printer she manipulated through head movements.)

Being able to follow this woman's feelings as they evolve from a determination to beat the disease to an awkward acceptance, to finally a desire to be released from her bodily prison is the main reason why one cannot help but be moved by this book.

The feelings of her family and friends and those who treated her are also movingly presented. The emotional, physical and economic strains placed on those around Bauer are recounted in their own minds. That Malcolm put a tremendous amount of time and energy into interviewing these people and remained completely faithful to their stories is quite evident in the book and is a testimony not only to his abilities as a writer, but also to the genuine sensitivity and compassion he feels toward this subject.

This Far and No More is also educational in that it pulls back the dark curtains society has placed before the right-to-die issue and presents the alternatives we all may choose, but so very few know. He discusses living wills which state that no extraordinary means are to be taken in case of serious illness with little chance for significant recovery (especially a respirator, which can prolong an agonizing, terminal disease far past the patient's desire to live).

Theater festival shines

By RICHARD ABRAHAM

The American Music Theater Festival already has a strong history. Entering only its fourth season, it is widely respected throughout the cultural arena as a place where artists can take chances and show the world their greatness. All of the productions this season are world or American premieres and this greatness is the ultimate hope for all the craftsmen involved. Unfortunately, life does not always work out that way.

In unveiling the start of its new season to the press this past weekend, the American Music Theater Festival gave us productions of pleasantness and disappointment. Neither "Let Freedom Sing!" or "Stauf" released the satisfaction that could be realistically hoped for.

Opening Sept. 18, "Let Freedom Sing!" a satirical revue of our Constitution, was the more entertaining of the two. Although one would think that the Constitution has been beaten to death by now with an endless barrage of press, picnics and parades, co-conceivers Paul Lazarus, David Crane and Marta Kauffman have still managed to create a pleasantly entertaining show and they must be given credit for that.

Another plus for the production, is its five performers. They seem to run through their parts with energy and joy for what they are doing — a joy that is expressed at times with earnestness and at others in parody.

What are some of the highlights among the numerous musical numbers? Well, one catchy tune that still rolls within my head is "A Little War," written by "Little Shop of Horrors" master Alan Menken. Critics of undeclared wars from Korea to Vietnam to Nicaragua. Samuel E. Wright, David Carroll, and Jeff Keller are the performers who bring it to life on stage.

Some jazzy blues were belted out by Jennifer Lewis in "The Immigration Policy Song," another highlight which gave us the Statue of Liberty telling us who she lets in and for what price.

Highlights with a more cleverly subtle touch were also thankfully present. First among these is "Three Fifths" in which Lewis and Wright, along with the rest of the small cast, set the constitutional injustice of blacks being named only three-fifths a man, to '50s rock.

"School Prayer" also showed superior substance in its portrayal of high school students voicing both their serious and comparatively trivial emotions in an ordered prayer. Finally, in "Come to the Rally," another tune with more substance than style, performer Elizabeth Austin gives us a message that tells of the benefits of interrupting our normal lives for organization and protest for a good cause.

Despite these efforts, the largest failing of "Let Freedom Sing!" was its inability to challenge the audience without feeling that it had to soften the blow. The viewer could miss the message simply because the delivery was done so pleasantly. As a result, the production lacked a truly biting edge and failed to send the audience home with any considerable issues or ideas in their mind. "Let Freedom Sing!" is good, but as a satire, it simply does not challenge enough.

Unfortunately, the same can be said for Crane, Kauffman and Lazarus' sketches. They were pleasant enough and occasionally humorous, but challenging they were not.

The Festival's second production is, in fact, a co-production with the Philadelphia Theater Company. "Stauf," which opened on Sept. 20, made disappointment the order of the day. It sounded so eclectic and creative, as to give a true experience, but in this

THE SENTRY ½ FIREBIRD C64/128

Computer chess may just be replaced by the popularity of this recent release from Firebird Software. In The Sentry, your one and only goal is to capture energy on an alien landscape of squares. The uniqueness of the game is seen in the many different ways in which you can meet this goal. You gain energy in your reserves by getting the Sentry, a Landgazer, robot, boulder, tree or Meanie in your sights and absorbing their energy.

The landscape on which you move is three-dimensional in that you can see it from any vantage point — all objects are solid. The colors used to depict the playfield and objects are distinctive. You will always be able to tell whether you are looking at a boulder or a tree.

The object of The Sentry is to travel around the playfield and absorb the energy from all objects on the landscape. In the process of meeting this goal, few Landgazers and the Sentry are out to get you. In order to successfully win The Sentry, you need to create boulders, trees and robots (for you to move) for strategy. Finishing one landscape advances you to the next.

Although the game play used in The Sentry is rather unique, this newest offering from Firebird will quickly gain your attention. With over 10,000 landscapes on the disk, you can never be bored with the game. Just remember to use the ability to scan the landscape at the beginning of the level and you will never go wrong. Watch out for the Meanies!

FLEET SYSTEM 2+  PROFESSIONAL SOFT WARE, INC. C64

With the release of this new version of Fleet System 2+ for the Commodore 64 comes many new features found before only in Fleet System 4 for the Commodore 128. The package includes three disks packed with word processing and database power. One contains the Fleet System 2+ word processor and the Spell Checker on the other side. The second disk has the thesaurus, and the last disk holds Fleet Filer, an integrated database.

The Fleet System 2+ word processor is the best-designed and simplest stand-alone program of its type. It has the most special features of any word processor on the market. The program counts your words, finds an antonym or synonym with the thesaurus quickly, contains a tutorial and boasts a screen with a status line that tells you what mode you are in, as well as indicates any message that the program has to tell you.

Fleet Filer, the database included in Fleet System 2+, is also indicates its degree of usefulness. Fleet Filer has very simple commands that allow full access to all data in many different ways. You can perform multiple searches, calculations between fields and many other functions. If you need mailing labels printed, the program can produce them. Ultimately, what Fleet Filer does is up to the user.

In any case, Fleet System 2+ is the best that can be bought because of the inclusion of these two programs in one package. Now more than ever, the Commodore 64 user can get productive software at a reasonable price.

BLACK MAGIC  DATA-SOFT C64/128, AP, AT

This new game from Datasoft is simple in its rules and game play, yet very entertaining. There is a story that goes along with Black Magic, as well. It seems that an evil warlock named Zahgrim turned the good wizard Anakar into gold and scattered his six magical eyes around the land of MariGold so that he could see the evil that has taken over MariGold. Your goal is to travel throughout the land and collect these eyes in order to place them in the stone statue of Anakar.

Black Magic is a graphic adventure and you move your character around the screen with a joystick. The only things that you can pick up are the eyes of Anakar, spells, food and arrows for killing the monsters that you encounter along the way. You pick up these items by simply walking over them. When you do obtain all of the eyes, you still must defeat Zahgrim in his lair.

There are only a few monsters that wander throughout MariGold. These are: death-spitting plants, demons, bats, ghosts, water monsters, prisoners, trolls and rocs. They all have their own unique characteristics that make one monster tougher than the next. In the course of the game, you will quickly find out which monsters to avoid if at all possible.

The graphics that are used in Black Magic are very simple, yet at the same time very detailed. You can see the statue of Anakar very clearly and determine how many eyes it has, but the land of MariGold is laid out carefully so that you are not confused. You will be able to tell very easily whether you are fighting a troll, a roc or a water monster.

Included in the package are the manual, disk and a special map of MariGold that is actually sealed to prevent the gamer from opening it before it is really needed. With these things in hand, you can be sure that a challenge awaits you in the land of MariGold.

DELTA MAN ½ COSMI C64/128, AP, AT

It is the year 2027. A nuclear holocaust has just reduced Chicago to a pile of ruins. You are one of a handful of survivors in what is otherwise an empty city. Your goal in Delta Man is to traverse the city looking for survivors, food, weapons and a means of survival in this terminally toxic atmosphere. Although this theme sounds like a typical arcade game, Delta Man makes a very good effort of staying away from the mundane.

The entire game is played from the vantage point of a person inside a space suit. You are that person. The city of Chicago is nothing more than a destroyed mess. Mutants running through the streets are only one of many obstacles in your way as you attempt to survive in this nightmare.

The main goal of the game is to find a vehicle that you can stock with weapons and goods with which you can escape the holocaust. Meeting this goal is not as easy as you may think. First of all, food is not found very easily. Second, some food is even tainted and useless. Finally, these mutant creatures are tough enemies and you must decide whether to avoid them or fight. If you can coordinate a strategy, there may be hope.

The graphics used in Delta Man are three-dimensional and can be seen from your perspective as you walk or ride through the streets. This vantage point only makes the atmosphere of the game stronger and tricks you into putting all efforts into the game to escape. Try this quest for the key to nuclear survival.

CREATE A CALENDAR ½ EPYX C64/128, AP, IBM

For the first time, you can put graphics and messages together on a calendar to keep track of important events and special occasions. With the release of Create A Calendar, Epyx has offered the computer user the chance to make personalized calendars and print them out in a variety of ways. The only other requirement of the program is a printer if you want to get the maximum use from it.

The year span that Create A Calendar knows goes from 1753 to 9999. You probably do not have to worry about running out of space for your events. You can use graphics from Create A Calendar or the Graphics Scrapbook disks. In either case, you have a lot of pictures to choose from to add to your calendar, more than I can ever see using.

The calendar is instantly updated on the screen as you enter an event. This feature lets you edit your calendar if it does not look right. More importantly, Create A Calendar allows you to print out weekly or monthly calendars and event listings. So if you need to keep track of occasions and want to use graphics to remind you, Create A Calendar can do it all.

DEF CON 5  COSMI C64/128, AP, AT

In this new simulation from Cosmi, you control the computers in what is a very familiar situation: nuclear war. What is even more frightening is the fact that the technology used is SDI (Star Wars) and you are in control of all of the defense computers. The four weapons at your disposal are land-based chemical lasers, space-based free-electron lasers, neutral particle beam weapons and electro-magnetic launchers. These four weapons are the key to success in preventing enemy missile strikes.

The graphics used in Def Con 5 are very clean and depict well the world, missiles and computers needed to control the weapons. What makes this game so good is the incredible realism involved. Perhaps, in the process of loseing this game, people will see what nuclear war can do. In any event, Def Con 5 is a challenging and addictive game and will test every area of expertise that you possess. See if you can prevent the enemy from knocking out your cities.

Based on the Faustian legend and mixed with the life and death of Karen Silkwood, "Stauf" tried to preach to us against the evils of nuclear energy and the moral corruption of power. Since the character's show little or no development and lack the ability to create sympathy for themselves, one feels no sorrow when someone suffers at the hands of unjust death.

With a mixture of gospel, pop, blues and country serving as the musical structure around emotionally static material, the seeming randomness of composer Eric Salzman's musical styles served to further alienate one from the stage. The values of "Stauf" on nuclear power and corruption are admirable, but they are done in such a heavy-handed and uninvolving way, so as to only get a bare minimum of its message across.

Again, there are not thoughts that arise from this production to seriously mull over because its arguments have no cohesiveness or substantiality.

There are a few pluses, however. Thomas Young was the most impressive among the cast with his performance of Dr. Jove, who lures Henry Stauf (John O'Hurley) away from a dream of wind-powered electricity and enticed him into the sheer power of nuclear energy. D'Jamin Bartlett also more than held her own as Kali, Dr. Jove's strong, if not good, rival. In the leading roles, Patricia Holley's Margarita was in a battle to surpass the material, while John O'Hurley's Stauf was engulfed by it.

Although these productions have not worked out as one could have hoped, one can be thankful that four more intriguing and adventurous American Music Theater Festival productions have yet to arrive. Next up, and the most promising of the remaining productions, is the possibly Broadway bound "The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz," which is based upon a novel by Mordecai Richler and contains music from "Little Shop's" Menken.

Some dates and places where these can be seen: "Let Freedom Sing!" is at the Mandell Theater at 33rd and Chestnut streets through Sept. 29, while "Stauf" will play through Oct. 4 at Plays and Players Theater, 1714 Delancy St. For information on other productions, call the American Music Theater Festival at 988-9055.

Saturday morning with animation

By COLLETTE S. MITCHELL

Remember when you were little and Saturday mornings were devoted to Bugs Bunny, Scooby Doo and The Superfriends? What ever happened to Plastic Man and Grape Ape? Saturday mornings were the peak of the week.

The Saturday morning lineup has changed to accommodate today's youth. The line-up includes many cartoons that have been created from popular toys on the market. In turn, many toys have entered the market as a direct result of a popular cartoon.

For the early bird, on NBC at 8 a.m., Disney has created "Gummi Bears," adapted from the popular bear-shaped candies. The story line follows the adventrues of the Gummi Bears and the situations they find themselves in. Their adventures are humorous, as well as exciting. The animation is clearly done to Disney standards. Along with the colorful and extremely active characters, the background scenery is also done to perfection with extensive detail and clarity. Overall, the show is fun to watch, pleasing to the eye and a nice way to start the day.

Following "Gummi Bears" is one and one-half hours of the "Smurfs." These little blue creatures have fa-la-la-ed their way into every child's heart. Along with them, many adults have been wooed into following the antics of the smurfs too.

With the addition of Smurflings, the Smurf population continues to grow. With this expanded population, the Smurfs have to work even harder to conceal their village from the prying eyes of their archenemy, Gargamel. This villain's goal in life is to serve up a multi-course dinner with the Smurfs as the main ingredient. The "Smurfs" will most probably weather many more seasons as a Saturday morning hit.

Rivaling the "Smurfs" at 9 a.m. is "Muppet Babies." — CBS has borrowed Jim Henson's expertise to create "Muppet Babies" and as with the other morning shows, it contains adorable characters, exciting adventure and exceptional animation. What makes this show different from the others is its format. Cutting into the animation at certain points are clips from movies that range from "The Blob" to "Oliver." The technique used to incorporates these shots into animation adds a new, exicint twist to the cartoon and promises to carry this show to a high ratings slot.

Another difference in today's youth is their deviation from the typical mold and their attachment to a not-so-cuddly stuffed animal. "My Pet Monster" has found its way into many children's hearts and homes and can now be seen on ABC at 9 a.m. Although the animation of this cartoon is good, it does not rival or supersede any of its competition. What it does do is draw viewers and followers with its wonderful humor.

At first glance, the character, My Pet Monster, would seem the type that would devour the Smurfs. Once the character is personified, its warmth and humor shine through and it becomes a harmless and lovable creature. He is sure to draw a smile from children and adults alike.

The popular, puppeteered television show "Fraggle Rock" was recently animated for the Saturday morning lineup. It follows the "Smurfs" on NBC at 10 a.m. "Fraggle Rock" seems to lose some of its appeal with its cartoon transformation. The animation is poor and the story line hardly provides enough incentive for anyone to stay and watch.

Much of the vocalization of the "Fraggle Rock" characters lacks enthusiasm, as do the plots of the stories. Perhaps a better alternative at 10 a.m. would be to turn to CBS and enjoy the off-the-wall humor of Pee Wee Herman and his outrageous cast of friends.

Saturday morning cartoons have changed a lot over the years. Regardless of the new, better animation, many will be remembered simply because they contain the most important element: entertainment.

Philadelphia Theater returns to '60s with 'Beehive'

By ELANA ROSE STARR

The best thing about last year's film comedy "Little Shop of Horrors," notwithstanding Steve Martin's performance as a sadistic dentist, was the Supremes-like trio of singers commenting on the action throughout the picture. A contemporary Greek chorus, the three young black women were sassy, earthy and full of life.

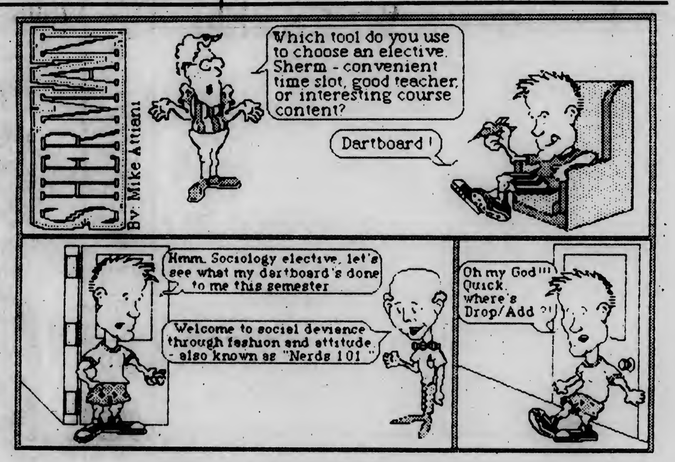
I was hoping that this same foot-tapping verve would dominate in "Beehive," the musical revue at the Walnut Street Theatre that celebrates some of the popular female singers of the '60s. After all, two of the understudies in this show were actually part of the "Little Shop of Horrors" trio.

Unfortunately, while I know the words to almost all the hit songs in the show (I admit to being a product of the era), rarely did I feel the urge to sing along or dance in the aisles. While there are some kinetic moments in "Beehive," notably Ann Peck as a tacky Brenda Lee and Letha V. Walker as an egomaniacal Diana Ross, it just is not highly charged.

This lack of energy is, in part, because of the lack of verisimilitude; the singers do not sound much like the songstresses they are portraying, and they do not look much like them either. Lesley Gore ("It's My Party"), for example, is portrayed as a curvaceous blonde, when, at the height of her fame, she was really a chunky brunette. (Trust my memory; I was an impressionable eighth grader when Gore first hit the Top 40.)

While most of the imitations are not on target, the six women in the cast do have fabulous voices. The stand-out is Magda Nova, who has appeared in the long-running off-Broadway version of "Beehive." Nova's voice is sultry, like Cher's, but very powerful, and she is very good in her guises as Lulu ("To Sir With Love") and Janis Ian ("Society's Child").

Nova's parody of Janis Joplin's gritty blues singing is terrific as well; however, with her high cheekbones and lithe body, there is no physical resemblance whatsoever, which is a detraction.



The show is intermittently entertaining, especially when there is interaction with the audience. For example, the second song is an impromptu version of "The Name Game," with tongue-tied spectators getting into the act.

Later, a couple of the cast members jump into the audience and judicisouly pick out a couple of straight-laced-looking men to dance with them. In addition, at the performance I viewed, the cast poked gentle fun at disruptive latecomers, to the delight of the rest of the audience.

Most of the revue, though, seems too glib and programmed. Perhaps if the production were less patent-leather slick and more spontaneous, the rousing playfulness so apparent in "Little Shop of Horrors" would emerge, and the enormously talented cast members of "Beehive" would be showcased at their best.

On the Scene . . . Entertainment tidbits

By MARYJO YANNACONE

The biggest event of this past week in the entertainment world was the airing of the 39th Annual Emmy Awards. Most astounding this year was not the show itself, but the network on which the show was broadcast. The Fox Broadcasting Network wrestled rights to the program away from NBC, ABC and CBS through a tough campaign and the lure of big bucks, so big, in fact, that the brand new network has retained rights to broadcast the Emmys until 1989.

Locally, the annual cavalcade of stars was aired on WTAF (Channel 29) at 8 p.m. on Sept. 20. As usual, the show was scheduled to run three hours and proceeded to run late. David Letterman hosted the program in his standard satiric style, and served as a genuinely welcome addition to the otherwise dull, long and drawn-out program.

There are always attempts made by the producers of the Emmys to offer some unusual, new aspect to the presentation, and this year was no different. To many a viewers' dissatisfaction, the "new" idea was the instant backstage interview.

Other highlights of the mediocre evening were a pseudo-Saturday Night Live newscast by actress Jane Curtin, who now collects her own Emmys as the star of CBS' "Kate and Allie," and intermittent scenes of this past summer's congressional testimony of Oliver North.

On the positive side, salutes were made to the now cancelled "Hill Street Blues," and the recently deceased Fred Astaire and Jackie Gleason. The special Governor's Award was received graciously by Grant Tinker, the former chairman and chief executive of NBC.

And now to the winners. In the category of outstanding mini-series, the now full-time series "A Year in the Life" came up with top honors. For outstanding variety, music or comedy program, "The 1987 Tony Awards" won. "The Golden Girls" came away once again with honors, with Rue McClahanan cited as best lead actress in a comedy series.

Also receiving a repeat award was the ever-popular "Family Ties," whose impish oldest son Alex, played by Michael J. Fox, walked onstage to receive his second Emmy as best lead actor in a comedy series.

It seemed as if all the names on this year's ballots were familiar, for the most part because few pilots from last fall managed to make it to a second season. For lead actress in a drama series, Sharon Gless of "Cagney and Lacey" was honored, and Bruce Willis of "Moonlighting" came up on top as best actor in the same division.

In the supporting actress/actor categories, NBC came up on top with Jackee, of "227" fame, and the oh-so-sarcastic John Larroquette, from the moderately popular "Night Court." In the drama series, Bonnie Bartlett of "St. Elsewhere" won the best supporting actress, and John Hillerman of "Magnum, P.I." walked off with supporting actor honors.

Out of 20 nominations, the brand new drama series "L.A. Law" won only two awards, but they were impressive ones. Both the writing of Steven Bochco and Terry Louise Fisher, as well as the directing of Gregory Hoblit were awarded top honors in the drama categories. And once again, both "Family Ties" and "The Golden Girls" came away respectively with the best writing and directing in a comedy series.

These are only a fraction of the awards granted to television on Sunday evening, but they are by far the most popular and earnestly sought after. All in all, the program was well-run, but, as usual, failed to escape the corny traps that so many of today's large-scale programs fall into. Television never preaches to be perfect, but surely someone can do better than this.

Michael Jackson's long-awaited follow-up to the chart busting Thriller album is a disappointment even to diehard Jackson fans. In an attempt to expand his musical horizons, Jackson's latest project, Bad, deviates from the style that made him a superstar.

The album's opening song, "Bad," is clearly an effort to change the feminine image often associated with Jackson and his music. In doing so, he takes away from his natural talent by attempting to adopt a "tough guy" image. Jackson's attempt to add strength to his voice, combined with a techno-pop approach often results in repetitive, mediocre songs.

The album does contain some solid Jackson songs such as "Just Good Friends" and "I Just Can't Stop Loving You." Both songs display Jackson's singing abilities and have a good beat. Because of these songs, his album is not a complete failure.

On the first side of the album, Jackson shows few of his strengths and many of his weaknesses. For example, the song "Speed Demon" contains repetitive lyrics and annoying sound effects and exhibits a lack of musical quality which is evident throughout the album.

On "Bad" and "The Way You Make Me Feel," Jackson's voice simply does not carry the way he intends it. Unfortunately, this causes the upbeat music to totally drown out most of the words and ruin the songs. Part of this is because of Jackson's employment of too many musicians on each song.

"Dirty Diana" tries to rock but merely rolls over and plays dead. Weak music and poor lyrics make this song one of the worst on the album. However, the worst song on the album, and possibly to date is "Smooth Criminal." The song clearly seems to be a last-minute effort to take up space on the album. The singing is incomprehensible and the music just does not flow.

Mediocrity is the trademark of the rest of the album. Songs such as "Liberian Girl," "Another Part Of Me" and "Man In The Mirror" show some of Jackson's strong points but are dragged down by an over-use of special effects and a lack of variety in the music. The songs often resemble those of other musicians. For example, "The Way You Make Me Feel" sounds like an attempt at the Four Tops' style and "Liberian Girl" would fit right in on a Lionel Richie album.

The long layoff before Bad caused Jackson to lose touch with his audience and his musical focus. Perhaps Jackson would have fared better had he continued the style that catapulted Thriller to the top of the charts.

Overall, Bad is just that. It fails to capture the audience with any consistent format. Jackson is fortunate to already be rich and famous because this album would certainly have not hit the charts without Jackson's reputation to push it. Simply put, the average music fan is not likely to be impressed by Jackson's new album or his new image.

Triple metal bill explodes at Pulsations

By RUSS CECCOLA

Pulsations Night Club, in nearby Glen Mills, continued what was supposed to be a summer-only concert series last Monday night. The incredibly popular "Metal Mondays," which showcases the best in metal acts, tore into the school season with a triple bill guaranteed to give the audience headbanging brain damage. Helloween (with an "e"), Armored Saint and Grim Reaper brought their unique version of loud and fast music to Pulsations. They were on tour for their new albums, all released within the past month or two, with Armored Saint's Raising Fear released last week. All three bands were incredible and the wild audience inspired them to push themselves even harder.

Helloween played a selection of songs from their newest album, Keeper of the Seven Keys Part I, but, because there were three bands on the bill, they did not perform any numbers from their Judas EP or first album, Walls of Jericho. Ripping into "I'm Alive," Helloween went on to play for almost an hour, stopping only at one point for lead singer Michael Kiske to announce that it was bassist Markus Grosskopf's birthday and to have the crowd sing "Happy Birthday" to him.

Helloween hails from Sweden and also includes Kai Hansen (lead guitar and former lead vocalist), Michael Weikath (lead guitar) and Ingo Schwichtenberg (drums). The other songs that the quintet played were "Twilight of the Gods," "Future World," "A Tale That Wasn't Right" and the 13-minute masterpiece, "Halloween."

It was my first time seeing Helloween live and I was strongly impressed with their energy and intensity. I would recommend seeing this band when the triple bill goes on to The Satellite in New Jersey soon. Get there early and do not miss the Swedish metalheads. Even more importantly, do not spell their name with an "a."

If Helloween was not enough, Armored Saint jumped onto stage to "March of the Saint" to keep the crowd moving. There were no signs warning against stage diving and the audience noticed this as bodies flew through the air and the omnipresent on-stage bouncers threw them back into the crowd. Armored Saint is currently on tour for their latest opus, Raising Fear, and performed five songs from that album: "Underdogs," "Human Vulture," "Raising Fear," "Chemical Euphoria" and "Saturday Night Special," a remake of the Lynyrd Skynyrd song that beats the original to death.

Armored Saint has not played in this area for over three years and the audience and this reviewer expected nothing less than an excellent show. Consisting of John Bush (vocals), Joey Vera (bass), Dave Prichard (guitars) and Gonzo (drums), Saint met these expectations, with such classics as "Nervous Man," "Can U Deliver" and "Mad House," saved for the encore. The energy that Saint put into the songs never stopped; everybody in the band kept moving and Bush found his way to the stop of the speaker stacks a few times. Even after the show, the band partied hard and their stage show left nothing to be desired except a longer set.

Grim Reaper tore right into the title track and popular MTV video of their latest album, Rock You To Hell. Reaper's presence is dominated mostly by lead vocalist Stephen Grimmett and guitarist Nick Bowcott, but skinsman Mark Simon and bassist Geoff Curtis provide the strong backbeat to their loud and heavy brand of music. The newer songs performed were "Lust For Freedom," "When Heaven Comes Down" and "Rock Me 'Till I Die." Rock You To Hell is an awesome album and these songs, coincidentally, are the best on the album.

Reaper went on to do all of their classics, including "Fear No Evil," "Dead On Arrival" and "See You In Hell," the band's encore. Although their set dominated the stage, I would not consider Reaper as the headliner. The three bands at Pulsations put on an excellent show; no band was any better than the others. This show just confirmed by support of "Metal Mondays," and metalheads should make their way there for the next show — Ace Frehley and White Lion on Oct. 5.

The letters DNR, "Do Not Resuscitate," take on great significance after you have read this book. Malcolm also enters into the shadowy world of arranged deaths, the underground network that finally brought peace to Bauer.

This Far and No More is one of the finest books to confront "the American way of death" and to destroy the walls which have kept not only the dying from the living but also the living, the mourning survivors, from one another.

Now that modern medicine can do so much more, we must decide when not to take the extra steps. Such decisions cannot be made without a full understanding of the situation, an understanding that too many of us lack. "It was," said one woman Malcolm quotes, "so much easier when God made all the decisions."

This book should be read by all because decisions about death and dying are ones we all must face, no matter how long we avoid them.

Psychological pole pushed up by Downey

By DINA INNELLA

"The Pick-up Artist" directed by James Toback

Meet Jack Jericho (Robert Downey). He is a Manhattan grade school gym teacher, who lives with his grandmother. He is the pick-up artist. He tries to pick up every pretty woman he sees with the line, "Did anyone ever tell you that you have the face of a Botticelli and the body of a Degas?" When he gets the poor woman's name and phone number, he writes it on a piece of paper that he keeps safely in his pocket.

Meet Randy Jensen (Molly Ringwald). She works at the Museum of Natural History and lives with her father, (Dennis Hopper). She is a comeback artist, who has an answer to every one of Jericho's pick-up lines. She is a street-smart girl who has no need for any of Jericho's come-ons to make her feel good. Jericho cannot cope with the fact that Jensen will not add her phone number to his list, even after their short tryst in the back seat of Jericho's red Camaro.

Jericho, in an effort to find out all about Jensen, finds out that her father owes a huge gambling debt to a man you would not let your child meet. So he and Jensen run off to Atlantic City to gamble their life savings and try to win big, although this is what got them into trouble in the first place.

Ringwald is witty, bright and charming as always. She is again the doting daughter as in "Pretty in Pink." Ringwald is again as poor as in "Pretty in Pink." She is the same character she has always been, except older. For Ringwald, who is playing her own age, 19, "The Pick-Up Artist" should have made her appear different, losing the "brat pack" image. "The Pick-Up Artist" is not a teen movie. It has no such worries as whether Ringwald is going to the prom or not. Jensen has big problems. The question is, can Ringwald handle a character that is a mature, consenting adult? Yes, she can, but not even Ringwald can save this movie, which is destined for cable television within the year.

Downey plays his part well. For a character that should be hated by all women, one grows to love him and his con-artist ways. Downey is a fast talking pick-up artist. He is completely plausible, especially to those women who have been handed lines from shmoozers like him. This movie is a good stepping stone for Downey, and hopefully he will be going on to bigger and better things.

Other characters included Saturday Night Life's Victoria Jackson, as Lulu, one of Jericho's conquests. Jackson was as enjoyable as her dumb blond image could carry her. Randy's father, played by Dennis Hopper, was intoxicated throughout the whole movie. Hopper could not give much insight to his part.

It was an excellent cast and most of the actors and actresses played their parts to the fullest, but the story line could have been better. "The Pick-Up Artist" was something that we have all seen before and was extremely predictable. There were too many coincidences and reliances on chance.

The film offered no twists, no surprises and no suspense whatsoever. Not every flick has these qualities, but it might have saved "The Pick-Up Artist."

Bad Animals gets to the heart of rock music

By VICKI DiSTEFANO

Bad Animals
Heart

The soul of Heart is the Wilson sisters, singing songstresses from Seattle. Ann and Nancy Wilson, 36 and 32 respectively, share vocals and lyric inspiration. Nancy Wilson also takes credit for keyboards and guitar wizardry. Drummer Denny Carmassi, Mark Andes, bassist, and Howard Leese, guitar-key-boardist, complete the group's lineup.

Heart's 1985 release, Heart, was immensely successful. Extensive touring followed but sold-out concerts and nonstop performing took a toll on the band. "Animals!" was how the members referred to each other on the road after they reached the advanced stages of hard living. This state of debauchery inspired the song "Bad Animals."

In order to exemplify the evolution of Heart, the Wilsons chose Bad Animals to title the album. While the last record took the band's name, the sisters feel that Bad Animals also names the group, depicting their latest incarnation.

Bad Animals is Heart's 10th album in their 12th year together. Currently No. 9 on the U.S. album charts, Bad Animals has been on the top 50 album list for 10 weeks. In Britain, the record presently holds position number seven.

Bad Animals has yet to achieve the status of Heart, which accounts for over 5 million of the 20 million plus albums the band has sold to date.

While creating Bad Animals, the group felt pressure to duplicate their last album. Instead of recording a sequel to Heart, the new release spins a selection of soft to spontaneous rock. Bad Animals compiles cuts by a total of 15 combined composers, including collaborations with Ann and Nancy Wilson.

"Who Will You Run To," side one's opener, and "Easy Target" are fast tracks which get the adrenalin flowing with sock-it-to-'em rock. As defiant as its title, "You Ain't So Tough" kicks energetically despite its inevitable pop music implications. Compared to high voltage, vintage Heart ("Barracuda," "Sleep Alone") these tunes sound tame, yet they are the heaviest tunes on the record. Heavy Heart fans, beware.

Countering the knockout rock, "Alone" is an operatic anthem of solitude. Alternate electric riffs and orchestral piano stanzas are reminiscent of Heart's 1985 No. 1 single, "What About Love." Fans of archaic Heart will find the single version collectible. The B side of the 45 has a live cut of "Barracuda," recorded last summer at the NHK Hall in Tokyo.

Another notable ballad, "I Want You So Bad," is a haunting, blues-influenced composition. Harmonious intonations emit an aural hypnotic affect.

"Wait for an Answer," a song in six different keys, and the title track each innovatively mix metal and ethereal rhythms. Carmassi steals the show on both cuts with his driving drum introduction and percussion presence.

In the delicate genre, "Strangers of the Heart" and "RSVP" are romantic songs, heavy with sentimentality. "There's the Girl" subtly conveys a moody, retro-Fleetwood Mac mysticism.

Bad Animals emotes energy, although the intensity which characterized previous Heart albums is conspicuously absent. The myriad of songwriters affectively impart musical diversity; each cut has a distinct sound. Impressive instrumental abilities of the group complement Ann's incredible vocal range. The 10 resulting tracks, all about hazardous relationships, bring forth an innovative, entertaining album.

Philadelphia will welcome Heart to the Spectrum on Oct. 25.

TV offers shows

By ROBERT DUGGAN

As much a part of fall as looming football strikes and raking leaves is the ushering in of new television shows into the video fold. Both new and old faces fill these new shows which generally fall into the basic categories of comedy, cop shows and drama. Here is a review of the new programs which have already aired.

"Private Eye" (NBC, Fridays 10-11 p.m.)

Michael Woods stars as Jack Cleary in this Anthony Yerkovich creation. Yerkovich is best known for his work on "Miami Vice" and he brings much of this style to the show. Cleary is an ex-cop in Los Angeles during the '50s who lost his badge in a frame up. His brother is later killed. Cleary takes over his brother's detective agency to avenge his death and decides to take up the business afterward. Josh Brolin plays a duck-tailed rocker who worked with Cleary's brother and eventually becomes Cleary's partner, too.

"Private Eye" is an interesting mix of the old detective cliches (the ditzy secretary, the beautiful client strolling into the office) and the new ones (stubble, music video scenes and interesting cinematography). Woods is Don Johnson trying to be Humphrey Bogart in "The Big Sleep." This show is worth watching for Woods and the great Joe Jackson score alone.

"Frank's Place" (CBS, Saturdays 8-8:30 p.m.)

This show reunites Hugh Wilson and Tim Reid, the director and actor who played Venus Fly Trap, respectively, of "WKRP in Cincinnati." Tim Reid plays Frank Parrish, a Boston professor who inherits a New Orleans restaurant and decides to run the place.

The restaurant is filled with characters who are actually interesting as people instead of as one-liner machines. Wilson relies heavily on the New Orleans locale and does a great job. The humor is very subtle, such as the fact that the beautiful woman Parrish falls for (played by Daphne Reid, Tim's wife) makes her living as an embalmer. This subtlety and the deafening absence of a laugh track make this an acquired taste, but one definitely worth acquiring.

"The Oldest Rookie" (CBS, Wednesdays 8-9 p.m.)

Paul Sorvino plays Ike Porter, an over-the-hill public affairs man for the police department. When a close friend is killed on the beat (the obligatory friend/brother death in all cop stories) he finds his job unsatisfying and decides to become a real cop on the streets. He is paired with D.W. Moffett, who plays a young wisecracking cop who takes Ike under his wing.

This show alternates between fat jokes aimed at Sorvino's girth and some truly good jokes like Ike's trying to arrange a John McEnroe-Sean Penn tennis match for charity. These quality jokes, however, are much too few and far between.

"Wiseguy" (CBS, Thursdays 9-10 p.m.)

As an undercover agent working for the Organized Crime Bureau, Vinnie Terranova (played by Ken Wahl) infiltrates the organized crime families of New Jersey and tries to fight them from the inside. Wahl is convincing in this pretty lame vehicle. The show, however, must rely on the strength of its villians, like Ray Sharkey's great baddy in the premiere to succeed, which is just too much of a question mark from week to week.

"Once a Hero" (ABC, Saturdays 8-9 p.m.)

A fading comic book hero named Captain Justice (Jeff Lester) enters the real world to resurrect the values that made up the realm of superheroes but have been lost by today's generation, hoping to thereby regain his lost popularity. Surprising moments of actually deep thought and scenes of "Batman" style camp make this show better than its premise sounds. Could it possibly be worse?

"My Two Dads" (NBC, Sundays 8:30-9 p.m.)

New Pink Floyd album

mour singing, along with a voice synthesizer, about the mortifying boredom of a routine existence. The two sections are separated by "Terminal Frost." This instrumental has an uncharacteristic progressive jazz sound made up of a piano and multiple saxophones, with only light drums and guitar.

The album closes with "Sorrow." Gilmour launches the tune by playing a mournful, distortion solo. The vocals are hidden beneath the keyboards and drums, but the lyrics — which speak of the dying of a child's dream world at the hand of adult fears — are once again brilliant. The song fades out with another fine guitar and drum duo.

The album breaks the Floyd mold in one obvious respect by not being a concept album. This is probably an advantage in that the band has concentrated on making good, self-supporting songs without worrying about a central theme to tie everything together.

Nevertheless, the album has been criticized as being a calculated attempt to duplicate old Pink Floyd. However, like most Floyd albums, A Momentary Lapse Of Reason requires one to listen a few times to grasp the lyrics and musical intricacies. Upon doing so, one realizes its originality and breadth that hold up to old Pink Floyd and recapture the band's power and mystery.

The Smiths have become 'Louder than Bombs'

By ANDREW MATHIS

Louder than Bombs
The Smiths
Sire Records

The British new wave band The Smiths are continuing their four-year tradition of great music with Louder Than Bombs, their latest release. The album is a combination of new, formerly unreleased songs, as well as old favorites from the band's previous albums, excluding 1985's Meat is Murder (which is also strongly recommended). This makes Louder Than Bombs an excellent opportunity for people still unfamiliar with The Smiths to get a real taste of what their music is all about.

Louder Than Bombs is a double album. The first album is a collection of strong rock-and-roll songs, while the second album is more on the mellow side.

The next two songs, "Shoplifters Of The World Unite" and "Sweet and Tender Hooligan," are equally powerful, but lean more toward the subject of the injustices of life. "Half a Person" is a sad recounting of youth and obsessive love. "London," which closes the first side, is a hard-driving tune that asks the subject of the song what he is leaving behind when he leaves London.

The best of the new songs, however, is not found on the first side with the rest of the new releases. "You Just Haven't Found It Yet, Baby" has a memorable melody and catchy drumming, supplied by rhythm man Mike Joyce. This song is worthy of standing with the best of The Smiths' old material.

The rest of the album, including the third and fourth sides are all previously released material, including the favorites "Girl Afraid," "William, It Was Really Northing," and "Please, Please, Please Let Me Get What I Want." The diversity of the selections included on this album give the new listener a sufficient overview of the band's history through its material.

Among the previously released songs is one called "Oscillate Wildly," an instrumental which proves that The Smiths' talents extend beyond that of their prolific lead singer, Morrissey. This song clearly shows the talents of guitarist Johny Marr and rhythm section members Andy Rourke and Mike Joyce.

For the new fans as well as the old, Louder Than Bombs is one of the finest albums to date by The Smiths. It truly shows the talents of this British group through its diversity of selections, both old and new, and is highly recommended to all types of listeners.

'Untouchable's' Kevin Costner has 'No Way Out'

By MEGAN GUIDERA

Once again this summer's 32-year-old heart throb, Kevin Costner, takes the breath away from anxious movie goers. Costner and co-stars Gene Hackman and Sean Young did a smashing job in the steamy late summer hit "No Way Out."

Costner, whom critics have compared to Gary Cooper, Clark Gable and Jimmy Stewart, gained superior popularity in his early summer portrayal of Elliott Ness in "The Untouchables."

Time magazine reports that Costner is a college graduate who, after studying marketing and finance, decided to pursue his calling to acting. Costner's big break came when he played the cameo role of the corpse in Lawrence Kasdan's "The Big Chill." This performance allowed Costner to break into the field and led him to his next role of Jake in "Silverado."

In his latest success, "No Way Out," Costner plays a handsome and honest military hero, Tom Farrell, who would put Ollie North to shame — or would he? "No Way Out" is an exciting adventure tale that holds the viewer's undivided attention.

"No Way Out" covers all of the bases: comedy, espionage, murder, political corruption, violence, confusion, jealousy, homosexuality, oh, and yes, a highly explicit and somewhat embarrassing, sizzling sex scene in the back of a black limousine as it drives through the night life of Washington, D.C. Well, if that is not enough to hold your attention for two hours, I do not know what is.

"No Way Out" follows a spry naval hero (Costner) into a steamy love affair with the free spirited mistress (Young) of the Secretary of Defense (Hackman). The plot becomes tangled when an accidental murder transpires and officials attempt to cover it up by using the national security system.

The film and the viewer grow more tense as the allegedly innocent Costner finds himself in a sticky trap in which he has "no way out." "No Way Out" and its plot of political scandal, shaming the military and exploiting chief officials has perfect timing amid the wrap up of Oliver North and the Iran-Contra hearings.

Costner does an excellent job in his portrayal of Farrell. His honest face and his 6-foot 1-inch tall superiority add to the characterization of Farrell. Costner's summer success will certainly have him bucking for an Oscar come March.

The attractive Sean Young was energetic as the spoiled political mistress. Although her part was short, Young displayed much talent and flair.

If you are sick of hearing "La Bamba" every time you turn on the radio, not in the mood to see people dance dirty and not up for "another James Bond movie," why not go see something with excitement and adventure? "No Way Out" has an abundance of both characteristics. Although it may be a bit complex and a little far-fetched, "No Way Out" is a fun and entertaining film that is well worth $5.

Put your degree to work where it can do a world of good.

Your first job after graduation should offer more than just a paycheck.

Big East Tennis

Men take second

By DOUG SCANCARELLA

The Villanova men's tennis team placed second in the Big East tournament held Sept. 18-20 at the Weekapaug Tennis Club in Rhode Island. The stunning performance marked the 'Cats finest finish in the Big East tournament ever.

The Wildcats, who registered 24 points, were far behind the first place finishers Boston College, who accounted for 50 points, but did manage to defeat powerful teams such as St. John's and Georgetown.

Paving the way for the 'Cats was freshman Mike Loughman. Loughman, Villanova's No. 6 player, clinched the second place finish for the 'Cats when he downed Boston College's Mike Rafferty 3-6, 6-4, 6-1 in the championship.

Earlier, Loughman beat Joe Bozoyan of Providence and St. John's Rod Stang. Loughman said later, "I didn't know what to expect, being that it was my first time there, but the guys on the team helped me — they told me I could win."

The fact that Loughman did so well is all the more surprising when you consider that he joined the team as a walk-on. He never talked to the coach over the summer; he merely showed up on the first day of practice and ended up as the sixth man for the 'Cats.

Although Loughman played tremendously, he refers to the tournament as "a total team effort" — and a team effort it was.

Junior Greg Ackerman, Villanova's No. 5 player, stormed past Pittsburgh and St. John's players before being beaten by Boston College's Gilbert Dailey in the championship round. Ackerman also teamed with sophomore John O'Dwyer and advanced to the championship in third doubles before being beaten by B.C.

Other key contributors were Mike Freedman, Pete Leonard and Taylor Teresi.

The total effort by the squad left Coach Robert Langran both pleased and optimistic. "I know we have a good team. We are always close in the Big East, but never second, so it was a pleasant surprise."

Junior Greg Ackerman advanced to the championship round in both number five singles and number three doubles in last weekend's Big East Championships.

Golf team seventh in F&M Tournament

By JIM BOWMAN

After an opening round of struggling with an unfamiliar course and deceptive green conditions, the Wildcat golf team rebounded well to capture seventh place in the Franklin and Marshall Invitational, held at the par 72 Host Farm Resort in Lancaster, Pa., last Sunday and Monday.

Freshman Kevin Rogerson led the Wildcat recovery, with a second round score of one over par 73, and a two day total of 152, just six strokes off the winning pace.

"We really played bad the first day," explained Rogerson, "partly because we were rushed through our practice round Saturday and we only made it through 12 or 13 holes. On the second day, we did much better."

Also finishing strong for the 'Cats was sophomore Jim Clarke, who shook off a case of bad putting and five straight bogeys to post a final round 74 and 154 tournament total.

"I hit the ball as well as I could Sunday, but I really struggled with the greens. They were cut short, but the rain and moisture slowed them down. I didn't adjust and I ended up bogeying the last five holes," lamented Clarke.

The scoring system for the Invitational was based on a metal play format. Five players competed each day, and the four lowest scores gave the team their score for the day. Villanova posted scores of 322 and 309 for a final of 631, 36 strokes off the pace of winner and Big Five rival Temple.

Last weekend's squad consisted of two freshmen, two sophomores and one senior, making it a very young and inexperienced team. Clarke described the scenario, "We have a really talented team, but we're very young. Eventually, we are going to be excellent, but now we're struggling to establish ourselves.

"We have the Big East championships in a week and the ECAC finals down the road in October. Those will be the highlights of the fall schedule, so we have to get ready now."

grounds and high grass from the rain which saturated the course the night before.

"The meet itself was not important," explained Coach Marty Stern. "It was more of a tune up to give me an idea of what kind of team I have talent-wise." The talents of Huber and Franey, who finished first and third respectively in the women's mile at the 1987 Penn Relays, speak for themselves, but it was the outstanding efforts of the third through fifth runners that stood out in the mind of Stern.

"Rahn came on strong at the end and and made a major contribution to help us win. She ran a gutty race, Stern said.

"Haux and Brekhus should also be commended for excellent efforts in their first college competition. They both ran consistently in practice and did a magnificent job coming through for us."

The efforts of the fourth and fifth runners cannot be stressed enough. Quite often the fourth and fifth runner can make or break a team. It is possible for a team to have four of its runners place very highly in a race, but still lose the meet because of the poor performance by the fifth runner.

Depth, however, should not be a problem for the Wildcats, who, according to Stern, had an excellent recruiting year. Graduation resulted in the loss of Gina Procaccio and Lauren Searby, but there are six talented newcomers to capably fill their shoes.

"The team is healthy, and for the first meet of the season, met my expections," Stern continued. "Vicky and Kathy looked better than last year, and the way we look right now I think we'll break top 20, although we still have a long way to go."

Tennis off slowly

By STEVE ELLIS

The women's tennis team opened their season Sept. 10 against an overpowering Rutgers squad made up primarily of scholarship players.

The Lady Knights did not drop a single set in the match, defeating the Wildcats 9-0.

Following rainouts with Washington College and Mt. St. Mary's the women netters travelled to Temple Sept. 15, where the Owls captured a 6-2 victory. The Wildcats' wins were registered by freshman Katie O'Brien and sophomore Stacey Hall, who both won by identical 6-4, 6-3 scores in singles play.

The following day, Villanova registered what Coach Robert Langran hopes to be the first of many wins, with a hard fought 5-4 victory over the Franklin and Marshall Diplomats.

Senior Beth Lemon captured her first singles win of the young season over the Diplomats' Jen Galambos, 6-2, 4-6, 6-1.

In doubles play, Lemon teamed with Hall in registering a straight sets 6-3, 6-4 win over Franklin and Marshall's Martin and Toepfer.

Freshman Katie O'Brien is one of the newcomers who hopes to contribute to the women's tennis team.

The 'Cats stand at 1-2 and are looking forward to the return of a healthy Laura Smelas, who suffered a sprained wrist in the Temple match. Smelas usually teams with Lemon to form Langran's No. 1 doubles team. Smelas' return, coupled with cooperation from the weatherman, will be a real boost to the team, which will be playing 11 matches over a two-week span.

have liked to have played a better match against Penn. I thought that we were a better team than Delaware, but I felt that our play against Virginia was consistent, aggressive volleyball. The team played as well as I've ever seen any Villanova team play."

Referring to the Virginia game, McGinnis lauded the efforts of sophomore Yvonne Gerstberger, whom he said "served well and played spectacular defense."

He was also quick to mention that Reiter, the team's outstanding setter, and Hnat, the 'Cats primary outsider hitter, seem to "set the tempo for the team. Whenever they're on, the team's on." (Hnat tallied an impressive 14 kills against Virginia.)

Although inconsistency has plagued Villanova so far, it is still too early to predict how the 'Cats will fare in the next few months.

McGinnis feels that as the season progresses, the team seems to progress and claims that "maturity" is their biggest asset.

The Cats major weakness is their size. McGinnis admits, "We're not a really tall team, but good teams face whatever challenges there are, and we want to become a good team."

Speaking on a higher level, McGinnis professes, "I'm more concerned with teaching my players than I am with wins and losses. My goal is to make sure that the athletes graduate on time and that they are productive citizens. Those are the real facets of collegiate life."

Judging by McGinnis' philosophy and his team's unlimited ability, women's volleyball is headed for a fine season.

Field hockey off to strong start

By AMY C. SPENCER

Encouraged by back-to-back, 1-0 victories over Lehigh and the University of Pennsylvania on Sept. 15 and 17, Villanova's field hockey team charged ahead to victories on Sept. 19 and 20. The Wildcats defeated Purdue 14-2 on Sept. 19 and outscored Boston College 2-1 on Sept. 20.

Villanova is playing surprisingly well in what was considered to be a rebuilding year. The team graduated seven seniors last year, and with seven freshmen on the team this year, inexperience was threatening to impair the team's performance.

However, with the victories over Penn, the defending Ivy League champions; Lehigh, last year's ECC champions; Purdue, second in the Big Ten last year and Boston College, defending Big Four champions, as well as a 0-0 tie with Lafayette, the Wildcats seem to be on their way to an outstanding season.

Head Coach Cheryl Massaro is pleased with the way the team's performance came together this week. She stated that the players are really maturing as a team, and that they are becoming accustomed to each other's style of play on the field.

"Teamwork is really pulling the whole thing together," Massaro said after the Purdue game.

When asked if one particular player stands out from the rest, the coach answered without hesitation that Ann Rosato would be the one. Massaro said of her player, "Ann, a senior defensive back, is playing solid, very consistent field hockey." Consistency is high on the list of priorities of this year's team.

The defense, led by Rosato and junior Peggy Dunleavy, team captain, played a major role in the victories this weekend. The defense excelled at keeping the ball in an offensive position for Villanova. Also, the few shots on goal made by the opposing teams were successfully blocked by the defenders on most occasions.

The offense also held up their end. Led by senior Anita D'Ascenzo, team captain, they scored four goals against Purdue and two against Boston College.

Massaro said that consistency is what the team is really striving to achieve at this point. The team is coming together now, but there are many adjustments for the freshmen to make, and it may be a while before more consistent play is reached.

One reason for this is that the game is so different at the collegiate level as opposed to the high school game. Not only is there more pressure, but facing teams from well-known schools may overwhelm the new players.

Another adjustment that has to be made is the one from grass fields to the turf of Goodreau Field. The game is a lot faster on the turf and the players have to change their game to suit the new surface.

Athlete of the Week

MIKE LOUGHMAN

This week's Saco East athlete of the week is freshman Mike Loughman. Loughman, the men's tennis team's sixth man, led the 'Cats to a second place finish in the Big East Tournament.

After coasting through the first two rounds of the tournament, Loughman faced Mike Rafferty of Boston College in the championship round and won.

Loughman is a freshman and presently is in the College of Arts and Sciences.

Cross country women run wild

By MICHAEL E. JONES

On Sept. 19, while many were nursing their Friday-night hangovers, the Villanova women's cross country team was hard at work. Villanova won its first outing of the 1987 season by defeating three other rivals, and has high hopes of defending its Big East title of 1986 and becoming a major national contender. These are ambitious goals by any standards, but well within the capabilities of this talented squad.

The team waged battle on the soggy grounds and high grass of the University of Maryland against fellow Big East rival Georgetown and prominent powers Maryland and George Mason.

Villanova emerged victorious for the third straight year, netting a score of 36 points, while runner-up Maryland was close behind with 41. George Mason finished with 69 points, and Georgetown closed out with the scoring with 83 points.

Georgetown did not fare well because of the absence of several of its top-notch runners and will be hot on the heels of the Wildcats when the Big East Championships roll around on Oct. 24.

Cross country meets are scored by adding the first five places of each respective team together. The team with the lowest score wins.

For Villanova, juniors Vicky Huber and Kathy Franey finished the five-kilometer course first and second respectively (17:27; 17:29), senior Jenny Rahn finished eighth (18:38), freshman Carol Haux finished 12th (18:47) and junior Jenny Breklus came in 13th (also 18:47) to give the 'Cats 36 points. The times were slower than anticipated because of the wet

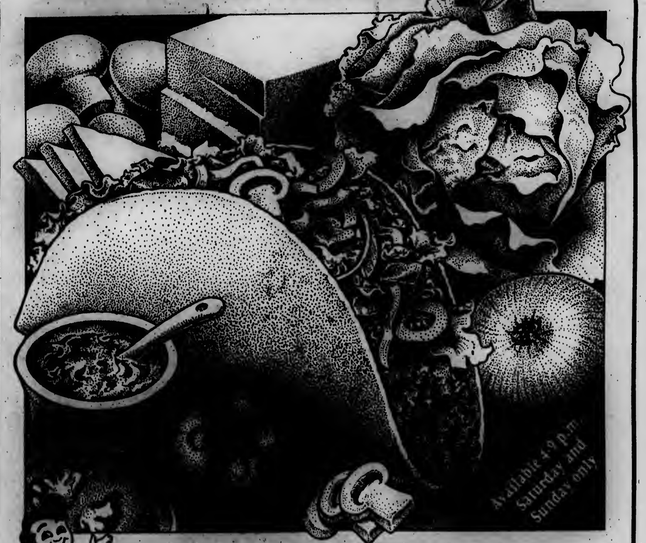
Volleyball goes 3-2

By MONICA BYRNE

Volleyball season is upon us once again and the Wildcats are off to a 3-2 start. The lady spikers, captained by seniors Lori Reiter, Helen Hnat and Karen Fraser, are "relatively young but very aggressive" according to sixth year coach Dennis McGinnis.

McGinnis feels that his team "has the talent to do very well this year" and will strive to be no. 1 in the Big East Conference.



The Wildcats ended their 1986-87 campaign on a positive note, posting a 25-17 record and ranking fifth in the Big East. This year, McGinnis feels that the league has "a little more parity" and dubbed his team as a "legitimate contender" for the Big East title. Pittsburgh will be, as always, Villanova's arch rival and toughest competitor.

Villanova opened its 1987-88 season at home on Sept. 12, against East Carolina. The Wildcats beat the Pirates, 3-0, but then traveled to Delaware where they split games in tournament play, losing to Delaware, 3-1, while defeating Loyola, 3-0.

Commenting on the recent games, McGinnis said, "I would

Wildcats extinguish Flames; looking forward to Mercyhurst

By JAY TALBOTT

"The most important thing is we won," said football Coach Andy Talley. "We did not play well, but we worked together as a team for the win." The Wildcats (1-0) held on to a 24-20 victory over Liberty University (1-2) in Lynchburg, Va., on Sept. 19. The ability of the squad to work together as a team was an important factor in their season opener win against the Flames.

Villanova started the game by scoring two touchdowns in the initial four minutes. Joe Allen caused a fumble which Scott Rushton recovered. This recovery led to a Kirk Schulz pass to Ron Sency from six yards out. Then, on the ensuing kickoff, Pete Lombardi forced a second fumble which Art Condodina landed on. This turnover quickly allowed the offense to score a second touchdown behind the excellent running and receiving of Gary Pascoe.

The Liberty Flames were able to catch up with a Willie Larkin's run from the four-yard line after a Villanova fumble. The Flames also scored with time running out in the first half when Charles Dorsey was able to plunge into the end zone from the one-yard line.

The scoring difference in the first half, and maybe the game, was in the middle of the second quarter whe Liberty was offsides on a Wildcat punt. With the addition of the five-yard penalty, freshman Tom Withka was able to capitalize by hitting a 47-yard field goal to give the Wildcats a three-point margin going into halftime.

Leading 17-14 at the half, Lou Ferry, defensive coordinator, was able to increase the pressure on the Flames offense, limiting them to only 80 yards in the second half.

Offensively, quarterback Kirk Schulz admittedly had an off day, throwing an untimely interception on the Liberty goal line. The 'Cats also suffered by failing to complete on two-key fourth down situations.

The offense was finally able to complete a long drive when Bobby Brady split the Flame's cornerbacks Donald Smith and Richard Shelton for a 30-yard touchdown pass to give Villanova a 24-14 lead.

Then with one minute remaining in the contest, Liberty's quarterback Paul Johnson threw a 49-yard bomb to Scott Queen at the one-yard line to set up a Nick Lowry touchdown on the next play. After a missed two-point conversion attempt, Villanova's Pascoe was able to put the game on ice after smothering an onside kickoff by Liberty to leave the score at 24-20.

Having the offense, defense and special teams work together when the going got tough resulted in the 14th win in 15 games. Talley knew the team would have their backs against the wall coming into Liberty's third game as opposed to Villanova's first. Talley was especially happy to get the win against what he referred to as the "toughest team we have gone against."

Tailback Ron Sency was on the receiving end of a six-yard touchdown pass from Kirk Schulz. The score, which came early in the first quarter, gave the 'Cats a 7-0 lead and started them on the way to their first win.

Women's soccer suffers loss

By ED DEMSKI

For the past two weeks, the Villanova women's soccer team has been plagued with rain and some very tough breaks on the playing field.

On Sept. 19, this wholesome squad of athletes hosted the Adelphi Panthers on their home turf under overcast skies with falling rain. The Panthers took a big bite out of the 'Cats morale in the first period when they pounced for three unanswered goals. Just before the halftime break, however, Lauren Anderer assisted Jean Hajjar with a well-executed pass from midfield for the first Villanova goal of the game.

Head Coach Don Paxon reflected on the first half of the match, "The girls played much too much defense in the first half. We were trying to figure out Adelphi's strategy and consequently we were always behind them on the field. I think had we opened our offensive sooner we would have beaten Adelphi."

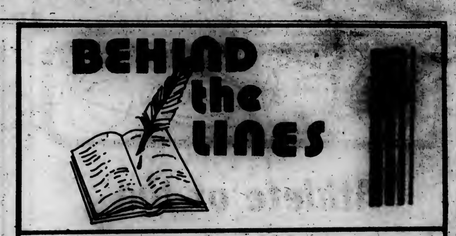
Paxon knew his squad was going to have a tough second half, playing with a two goal deficit, but his team regrouped and took to the field like Olympic champions. By the 29.02 mark in the second half, junior Ann Bierne scored two solo goals for Villanova, one on a penalty kick and the other off a free direct kick on a drive upfield to tie the game at 3-3.

Paxon said, "The team that played Adelphia so well in the second half of this game did not look like the team that played them in the first half."

Villanova's spirited team displayed a new vivaciousness during the second half. They played an extremely tactful and forceful offensive game, but Adelphi managed to slip one ball past Villanova's goal line from a hard deflection off the post which senior goalie Lynn McHale just could not handle. The final outcome was a heartbreaking 4-3 loss for Villanova.

Paxon remarked on his midfield, "The girls in the midfield are not as strong as they should be as a whole. They should be scoring much more than they are. Some of our deepest defensive players like Bierne are scoring most of our goals. Ann has already scored eight on the season.

"We have a very tough schedule coming up after our next two games (LaSalle, N. Carolina), and I want my team to be mentally ready, I don't want them to play under false illusions."



Other scoring leaders were Hajjar, three goals, and Anderer, two goals.

Notably, the women's soccer team is very young and has the potential to blossom into a championship team. There is one starting freshman, five starting sophomores, three starting juniors and two starting seniors.

For those of us with whom basketball is not just a sport, but an expression of art in the most personal sense possible, the basketball season is just within our grasp.

Those of us who are described above have already begun our pre-season training. We have scoured the tidbits of sports information in our papers to find the smallest speck of recruiting news. We have already watched the team practice, studied their movements and conjured in our minds thoughts of heroic plays mirrored with the resounding cries of the fanatic followers in the rafters.

With these thoughts raging through our minds, we purchase our pre-season scouting reports hoping and praying for a positive outlook on our season.

However, even with all of this activity, we as armchair coaches are not satiated. We need more.

What could possibly fill the time between preseason scouting reports and the opening buzzer?

Other schools have incorporated a midnight practice into their schedules.

The midnight practice takes place, you guessed it, at midnight, on the first official day that a NCAA team can practice.

This year that would be 12 midnight, Oct. 15.

What better way to spend a Thursday night than to pack a gymnasium with thousands of screaming fans and watch the Villanova Wildcats twist and weave, sky up into the rafters and forcefully throw a basketball through the iron.

One Thursday night could give us, as fans, the shimmering hope that the magic of 1985 still lingers on the courts of the duPont Pavilion.

Thus, I, as a fan, petition the athletic department and Coach Roland V. Massimino, to allow us this one request:

Let us have a midnight practice.

Students favor coed dorms

By SHARON A. WATERS

MAUREEN STAPLETON

Over 90 percent of students surveyed in a Student Government poll last semester stated that they were "interested" or "highly interested" in having coed dorms, according to recently-announced results.

Phil Brach, Student Government president, said that students are "overwhelmingly for the option of coed dorms" and that the issuing of the survey was "taking the steps to confirm this."

The poll, conducted by telephone, surveyed 401 students. When conducting the survey, Student Government defined coed dorms as coed by floor and established that there would always be the option of living in single-sex dorms.

The results of the survey are:

1. Do you live on or off campus?

45.9 percent On campus
53.9 percent Off campus

2. If you live off campus, for what reason do you live off?

23.7 percent Off by own choice
20.4 percent was not offered University housing
10.2 percent Live with family

3. If you were offered on-campus housing, to what degree would you be interested in living in a coeducational residence hall?

58.9 percent Highly interested in having coed dorms
32.7 percent Interested
8.2 percent Slightly interested
.2 percent Not interested

4. How would you rate your parents' feelings concerning coed dorms?

21.7 percent Strongly for coed dorms
26.9 percent For coed dorms
40.9 percent Do not care
7.0 percent Against
3.5 percent Strongly against

5. What is your present class status?

27.7 percent Freshmen
25.4 percent Sophomores
25.2 percent Juniors
23.7 percent Seniors

Brach also commented that, "no one can question the legitimacy of the survey because Student Government worked with the political science department on developing the survey to make it a fair survey." Brach also feels that coed dorms are "inevitable" and "just a matter of time."

Drug and alcohol center receives grant

By SABINA PIERCE

The newly-established Drug and Alcohol Intervention Center, designed to provide information and counseling to students, recently received a two-year $100,140 grant from the U.S. Department of Education, Janice Janosik, director of the center, said this week.

"The grant will enable us to expand and offer more services quicker," stated Janosik.

The secretary of education solicited a total of 536 proposals for grant funding. Villanova's proposal, written by Janosik, was one of only 90 proposals that were finally accepted.

The money, according to Janosik, will be used to purchase pamphlets, books, brochures and resource materials for a resource library, and to create training pamphlets.

The Drug and Alcohol Intervention Center was established in an effort to curb alcohol and drug abuse on campus. "The Univer-

Parents will not hear Valli

By PAM COYLE

Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons violated a contract with the University when they canceled their appearance for Saturday's Parents' Weekend concert, Lucyna J. Gorski, director of Student Activities said this week.

According to Gorski, a University official contacted Frankie Valli Aug. 10 through an agency in New York which normally provides entertainers for University activities. The contract, signed Aug. 19, stated that no cancellation could be made less than 30 days prior to the date of the concert, barring special circumstances, such as a television appearance, stated Gorski.

On Sept. 8, 24 days before the scheduled Oct. 3 concert, the University received notification that the group would not perform, reported Gorski.

"He [Valli] had a child this summer and decided that this would be a good weekend for the christening," said Gorski.

As of yet, no legal action is being taken by the University. "Villanova and Frankie Valli will try to reach a settlement between themselves which is acceptable to both parties," Gorski commented.

Some compensation is being sought by the University for expenses incurred in finding a replacement act. In addition, Villanova seeks to recover the cost of printing and postage for the second mailing informing parents of the change, the difference in cost between the two groups and an allowance for damage to the University's reputation, according to Gorski.

When asked if Villanova would ever consider booking Valli again, Gorski said, "probably not. It's tough to go back to somebody that has done that much damage. Parents would want us to guarantee having them [Valli and the Four Seasons]. I would be really hesitant in that situation."

The group replacing Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons is the Golden Boys. (Chubby Checker, Bobby Rydell and Fabian), according to Gorski. She thinks the concert will be a success. Two of the members, Bobby Rydell and Fabian, are originally from Philadelphia.

According to Gorski, finding a replacement act was not easy. "Most people don't understand how hard it is to book concerts for Villanova University," said Gorski. "Acts don't want to play here because more money is earned performing in Philadelphia. Some acts will [perform] on the stipulation that we won't advertise outside the University."

The University itself has certain considerations regarding concerts, said Gorski. For instance, Villanova has to get performers it can afford. Big acts like Bill Cosby and Billy Joel are in the neighborhood of $100,000, according to Gorski.

Also, during basketball season, concert dates are subject to the availability of the duPont Pavilion.

In addition, the entertainment has to fit the occasion. For Parents' Weekend, Villanova looked for an act that would appeal both

Students punished for Stanford party

By NOEL E. FALCO

Thirteen Stanford Hall third-floor B-wing residents who, after being written up for holding an "around-the-world" party were to be kicked off campus, were awarded their appeal to leniency this week, according to Stephen McWilliams, Judicial Affairs officer.

Although the initial sanction involved two weeks off campus, a fine of $100 per room and a probation period of one semester, McWilliams said the students are instead "being placed on probation for the rest of the year and fined, and [they] have to do community service.

"They have to police the grounds outside of Stanford Hall . . . [they have been assigned] one week each," said McWilliams.

He refused to state the amount of the fine.

According to McWilliams, the students were fined for having "violated alcohol policy and for having unruly gatherings."

He said that these violations were found under points No. 7 and 17 under student conduct in the Blue Book.

McWilliams stated that after they received the original sanction, the students made an appeal for leniency to Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, first through a letter and then through individual interviews.

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, declined to comment. He said it is not his policy to comment on individual student conduct violations.

Jim Eismeier, one of the students involved, referred to a letter each student received from Neville

College Republicans

On Oct. 7 at 3:30 p.m. in the Bryn Mawr Room of the Connelly Center, the College Republicans will hold a meeting. Anyone interested in becoming a member, concerned with an issue, or merely interested in keeping abreast of the pertinent issues is strongly urged and cordially invited to attend. We will discuss plans for our tentative trip to Washington, D.C., on Nov. 7. Come and be part of the new Republican generation.

Chapel Series

Music activities and the Villanova Student Union present the Philadelphia Baroque Ensemble Oct. 4 at 3 p.m. in the Corr Chapel. Admission is free. All are welcome.

Parents' Mass

For Parents' Weekend there will be a special Parents' Mass at 11 a.m. in the duPont Pavilion. The regularly scheduled masses at 4, 6, and 8 and 10 p.m. in the Main Chapel will also take place that day.

Attention All Girls

Lambda Chi Alpha is sponsoring a Slave Auctioin that will be held on Oct. 6 at Rosemont College, McShane Hall. All girls interested in buying a Lambda Chi brother for three hours of unlimited service should attend. The auction will begin at 8 p.m. and there will be a 50 cent charge at the door. There will be approximately 17-20 talent acts. For more information, see Mike Delforno or Jim McGuire in Room 146 Sullivan or call Jim Walker at 527-0294.

Political Science Club

The Political Science Club will present the Honorable Judge Cirillo on Oct. 6 at 3:30 p.m. in the North Lounge. He will be speaking about "the prison system: punishment or reform?" Also do not forget to look for a sign-up sheet outside of the political science office about our Washington, D.C., trip in November.

Traveling Abroad

Have you ever been interested in traveling abroad? Come to a free slide show on German-speaking countries with commentary by a student who lived in Australia for a semester. On Oct. 7 at 4 p.m., the show will be open to everyone and free coffee and cake will be served. A German Club meeting will follow the presentation in the St. Thomas Foreign Languages Dept.

Italian Club

We are having our first meeting on Oct. 6, Tolentine, Room 316 at 12:45 p.m. This is a mandatory meeting for old members. New members are welcome.

Marketing Society and International Business Society

Joint meeting for all members of both the Marketing Sociey and the International Business Society on Oct. 8 in Bartley 110 at 12:45 p.m.

To All Seniors

If you have a cum of 3.0 or better and have not received a letter concerning Who's Who, please contact the Dean of Students Office, 213 Dougherty Hall.

Leaders

Motivated, dynamic, creative, enthusiastic, exciting — People wanted for this year's Student Government.

Gospel Ensemble

The Villanova Gosple Ensemble welcomes Evangelist Brenda Pinkney of Deliverance Evaangelist Church on Oct. 4 at 3 p.m. in St. Rita's Chapel.

Hawk migration

The Biology Club is sponsoring a trip to Hawk Mountain to observe the seasonal hawk and eagle migration. The trip will be on Oct. 3. We will meet in Mendel parking lot, behind Mendel Hall, at 9 a.m. We must leave shortly after in order to catch peak migration time. Bring binoculars and a lunch. Hawk Mountain also has beautiful trails to hike on. This spectacular event only happens once a year. Don't miss it!

VCACA

Villanovans Concerned About Central America (VCACA) will be holding its meetings this semester every Tuesday at 4:15 p.m. in the Peace and Justice Center. The center is located on the basement floor of Sullivan Hall. Anyone interested in the Central American crises, regardless of his/her political outlook, is invited to attend VCACA meetings, films and presentations.

Blue Key Society

It is hot, it is happening, it is outrageous and it is finally here! Well, you say, what is it? It is the biggest and most fun-filled tailgate Villanova has ever seen. It is a freebie and it is sponsored by Blue Key. Our tailgate is for all parents of students. So, come by and join us on Saturday.

Consumer Affairs Club

The Consumer Affairs Club is designed to increase student awareness about industry's abuses concerning product and service quality and safety. Does the high cost of automobile insurance hinder you from owning a car of your own, or deprive you of needed cash for other expenditures? Do you find it difficult to gain good credit rating; or is there any other consumer issue that you feel needs to be brought to the attention of the Villanova student body? If so, the Consumer Affairs Club has been formed to address these issues. All graduate and undergraduate students sharing these interests are requested to attend an organizational meeting on Oct. 6 at 12:45 p.m. in Bartley 216.

Knights of Columbus

There will be a general meeting of Villanova's council of the Knights of Columbus on Oct. 7, at 6:30 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty. All interested men are welcome to attend.

Hunger Awareness Week

There will be a general meeting on Oct. 7 at 7 p.m.

Blood Drive

NROTC blood drive will be held on Oct. 7 and 8 from 10 a.m. — 3 p.m. in the John Barry Wardroom.

Chess Club

The Chess Club will play its first games on Oct. 7 in Bartley room, 105 B at 3:30 p.m. All new members are welcome.

Scripture Reflection

Scripture Reflection is an informal time to prayerfully reflect with others on the Gospel message and its application to our lives. It is sponsored by Campus Ministry on Mondays at 8 p.m. in St. Rita's Chapel.

Balloon Day 1988

Balloon Day this year is scheduled for April 19. Chairpeople for this event are Melissa Esposito (527-2827) and Jim Leone (525-5795). If you have any questions or suggestions, please contact Melissa or Jim.

Alpha Epsilon Delta

On Oct. 6, at 12:30 p.m. in Mendel Hall, Room 117, AED will be hosting Dr. Mark Panneton, a recent graduate of Creighton University School of Dentistry. Panneton will be giving a slide presentation to anyone who might be interested in dentistry as a career.

Help locate artwork

The Rev. Anthony Gasparo, O.S.A., is trying to locate artwork which he presented to the Augustinian Order some time ago. A photocopy representing some of his pieces is available for reviewing at the Villanovan office in Dougherty Hall. If you recognize any of the artwork, please report the information to Mary Ann Griffin, director of Falvey Memorial Library at x4291. The name "Anthony A. Gasparro" appears in the lower right hand corner of the artwork. Any information that can be provided will be greatly appreciated.

Accounting Society

Our next Accounting Society meeting is Oct. 8 at 12:45 p.m. in Bartley 209. A representative of Coopers and Lybrand will be on hand to speak about auditing. Also, we will be having a tailgate this week before the Boston University game.

WKVU receives $60,000 grant

By KARLA BECKNER

Villanova University has released a $60,000 budget to reconstruct the Villanova radio station, WKVU, which is now in the process of switching from its current AM frequency to the FM dial, said Dan Loughran, station general manager, this week.

According to Lucyna J. Gorski, director of Student Activities, the station has been hoping to go FM for the past 10 years, but it has only been in the past two-and-one-half years that the serious efforts have begun.

Under the present AM carrier current system, the signals are transmitted over the telephone lines and can only be picked up in buildings that have a receiver, thus limiting the audience. The FM frequency would broaden the range of listeners, according to Gorski.

The station applied for its FM license when the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) lifted protective blanket from Channel 6, in effect opening new frequencies. Efforts were delayed when Channel 6 filed a countersuit to keep those frequencies closed, fearing a new station would adversely affect their transmission, Loughran said.

When the FCC decided against Channel 6, WKVU had to reapply for its license, starting the process again, stated Loughran.

The WKVU frequency is to be split with the Cabrini College station on a time-share basis. The terms of the agreement are still under negotiation, but it will most likely be on a 24- or 48-hour cycle, Loughran said.

According to Gorski, the University originally tried to find a new location to rebuild the station, but when one was not readily available, they decided to reconstruct the studio in Dougherty Hall.

The latest delay in the changeover has occurred since the University of Pennsylvania put in a request with Villanova to swap FM frequencies. Loughran said the station felt this would be beneficial since the frequency held by the University of Pennsylvania is a well-established station.

"Right now we are trying to develop and expand our listenership," Loughran said. "The Penn station is a more stable frequency, and it is closer to the commercial stations."

In order to swap frequencies, a new engineering study must be completed. Loughran stated that this is currently underway.

WKVU recently received a $60,000 grant in the hope of converting to FM. Pictured here is a WKVU disc jockey.

Loughran noted that even after the switch to FM occurs, WKVU will still maintain their AM station. "We are thinking of requiring all new disc jockeys to spend one year on the carrier current system, then move our best DJs to the FM station."

Loughran said the actual date of the changeover is indefinite. It could occur anytime within the next three months to three years, depending on how long the second engineering study takes and on the length of the construction time.

Truck collides with Ithan overpass

A GMC truck carrying cargo had its top sheared off as the driver of the truck attempted to pass under the Norristown High Speed Line overpass on Ithan Avenue the afternoon of Sept. 23.

According to the Radnor Township Police Department, the driver of the truck sustained minor injuries. He was issued three citations for the accident. No one else was injured and traffic flow was not seriously impaired.

A representative of SEPTA (Southeastern Pennsylvania Transit Authority) said that the bridge has been inspected since the accident and that it incurred no damage as a result of the collision. D.A.C

Special Olympics set for Oct. 11

Villanova University will be the site of Special Olympics, an athletic competition for developmentally-disabled athletes, on Oct. 11 from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

For the past eight years, Villanova has hosted the competition with athletic events by student volunteers. More than 300 competitors are expected.

The featured event will be the Eastern State Soccer Tournament. Winners will compete nationally.

According to Elia DaTaddeo, administrative vice chairperson of special Olympics at Villanova, athletes will attend educational clinics to refine their skills. Activities planned for the participants by the Special Olympics committee include movies in Connelly Center and game booths sponsored by campus organizations.

Mandatory meetings for volunteer huggers, who escort the athletes, will be held Oct. 5-6 at 7:30 p.m. in the Villanova Room in Connelly Center. V.M.D.

Parking permit hang tags issued

Mirror hang tags, instead of rear-bumper stickers, have been issued to all those who have bought parking permits for the 1987-88 academic year. The Rev. Patrick J. Rice, O.S.A., vice president for Administration, and Chief Rowan Kelly, director of Security, decided to make the change this past summer.

According to Kelly, one of the purposes in issuing the mirror hang tags was the elimination of two abuses: the habit of many students to fail to adhere the parking stickers to their rear bumpers and the illegal selling of permits.

"Students selling stickers deprive entitled students of their right to park ... the problem of borrowing, illegal selling and stealing of stickers only hurts their own peers," Kelly said.

"If the results of using the hanging stickers [permits] are not as expected, the 'paste-ons' will be reinstated," said Kelly. P.L.M.

Humanities seminars begin

By KEVIN HEIL

With the beginning of the fall semester, Villanova University introduced the freshman humanities seminar into its curriculum for all freshmen in the College of Arts and Sciences.

"The humanities address the fundamental questions of human existence, such as 'what does it mean to be human?' Drawing from philosophy, history, literature and other disciplines, the humanities form an interrelated and integrated field of study," said Dr. Helen K. Lafferty, assistant to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

According to Lafferty, people are recognizing the importance of studying the humanities. Since the freshman class is an exceptional one academically, it was agreed to implement the seminar into the course of studies this fall, said Lafferty.

Initial planning for the program began in 1982. It was then proposed that freshmen have a more active participation as they begin their classes.

Classes of 15 students were decided upon, so students could write more and have a closer relationship with their teachers, according to Lafferty.

This idea was set up but was not explained to the faculty until 1986, when the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., became the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

"We went back to the original intention of the seminar," said Lafferty. "We organized a steering committee and have held workshops for the faculty involved in the seminar. We are also in the process of having the seminars evaluated to see that our objectives are being met."

The steering committee developed several guidelines for the program. Intensive writing will play a significant part in the seminar, since written expression is an essential component, said Lafferty.

Professors will also confer regularly with individual students to provide an opportunity for closer working relationships, she said.

The committee agreed that the seminar format should lend itself to creative and innovative ways of teaching and learning. Therefore, there will not be a reliance on formal lectures as the primary mode of instruction. A substantial amount of reading will also be required, said Lafferty.

"The seminar should stimulate intellectual wonder, broaden cultural awareness and really deepend our understanding of a just and humane society," said Lafferty. "Hopefully, the skills they [the students] learn will be applied to their other courses so they become active learners."

Lafferty stated that the program hopes to receive possible funding from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

She hopes the program will eventually be open to freshmen in other colleges of the University, giving them an opportunity to experience the atmosphere of a humanities seminar.

Thefts in dorms reported

By K DILLENSCHNEIDER

A Minolta Maximum 7000 camera valued at $600 and $8 in cash were reported stolen from an Alumni Hall resident Sept. 4, according to a Security incident report.

Radnor Township Police Officer Prentice Howe reported evidence of tampering with the door. Howe said the jam and lock mechanism appeared to be defective.

Other robberies have been reported on campus this month. Deidre Dickson, a resident assistant in Alumni Hall, confirmed that a resident's purse was stolen during the first week of classes.

The resident went down the hall to the bathroom and left her door open a crack. She was gone for less than five minutes, according to Dickson, and, when she returned, the purse was gone. The purse was later discovered empty in the Bryn Mawr train station.

Dickson said, "It's getting bad here. We have a crime watch set up, and we're watching out for each other." She added, "It's scary that you have to lock your door all the time, even if you just run down to the bathroom."

Another purse was stolen from a Sheehan Hall resident and a Panasonic Cam Corder valued at $1,400 was taken from the Career Development Center.

Lt. John Harrity of Security said that in both cases there was no forced entry. Harrity concluded, "This means the door was unlocked or a key was used."

Commenting on the dorm thefts, Harrity added, "They [students] simply do not lock their doors."

Alumni and Corr to remain open

By DEBBIE GROSS

Alumni and Corr halls will remain open in the near future despite prior statements suggesting they would be closed, stated Dr.Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, this week.

In the Sept. 12, 1986 issue of the Villanovan. Neville said that old dorms like Corr Hall could be converted into offices since the fire codes for offices are not as strict as for dormitories. Alumni and Corr halls required significant fire safety overhauls. He said that it might be more efficient to build new dorms instead of upgrading old dorms.

However, this is only a concept being developed by the president's office, stated Neville this week.

According to Neville, the president's office is now in the beginning stages of creating a master plan for land usage. Rough ideas, such as an extension of Mendel Hall or the creation of a new academic building, are some future possibilities, he said.

The main concern right now, however, is with the development of more campus dormitories, Neville stated. The construction of 240 additional beds on south campus is scheduled to begin this winter for completion in 1989.

Alumni Hall, pictured here, will remain open in the future, Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, said this week. There was speculation last year that Alumni and Corr halls would be converted into faculty offices because of strict fire codes for dormitories.

Stanford residents reprimanded for dorm party which stated that the new penalty was "$100 fine . . . probation for the remainder of the academic year until May 20, 1988" and community service consisting of picking up all the trash around Stanford Hall each morning before 9 a.m. for one week. Eismeier was not certain if the fine was per room or per person.

Another student, Chris Sword, said that McWilliams stated the $100 fine was per room.

Nick Magalio, another student involved, said, "The administration wanted us to feel lucky with the $100 room fine, probation for a semester and two weeks off campus. They wanted to kick us off campus for good.

"None of them were there. No one saw anything. No one got our side of the story. No one wanted to listen," he said.

But Eismeier added, "Dr. Neville listened."

According to involved students, 16 students were originally written up, but three were absolved since they were not involved.

Magalio recalled, "We had an around-the-world party on Sept. 18 with B-wing. It was only a couple of rooms — six or so. Our party was going pretty nice . . . it was quiet and orderly.

"The R.A., whoever was on duty, walked up and down the halls. Then he went down to break up the C-wing party. They [R.A.s] wrote up a lot of people for open containers. Only one room [in C-wing] got written up," he continued.

He added, "As soon as they broke it up, all those people congregated down our hall. It was totally out of hand. That's why we got written up."

Rich Dolche, a fourth student involved, said, "We got written up because there was a whole bunch of people in the hallway, and we had a party and the two got connected. We were victims of circumstances.

"The crowd just got dispersed. We're taking their rap. Blame the crowd. Put the whole campus on probation," he said.

Sword said, "All I got written up for was the fact that I had a sign on my door indicating a country, like all the other rooms. I wasn't even in my room. Other people told me that they saw the R.A. write my room number down because there was a sign on my door. They never saw alcohol in my room, never saw people in my room.

"It said in the incident report that they [R.A.s and Security] took a few names in the hallway . . . They wouldn't let anyone into the wing," Sword added.

"I was in a room with quite a few people. The door was closed, but a Security guard opened up the door to a private room and told everyone to leave who didn't live there. There's no rule about people who don't live there being in a room," he said.

Sword stated, "There were no kegs and no grain alcohol."

Jeaneen Riley, south campus coordinator, refused to comment on the incident.

Labs to be letter-graded

By SHARON A. WATERS

In response to student requests and faculty recommendations, the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, recently approved changing all laboratories for liberal arts students from a pass/fail basis to a letter-grade system, according to members of academic departments.

The incorporation of letter grades beginning this semester will affect the 596 students who are currently enrolled in core science labs, according to Dr. Jamews J. Markham, associate dean for Sciences.

The core science program was originally designed approximately 20 years ago, according to Dr. Alain J. Phares, physics department chairperson. Phares stated that, in the past, most students entering college had little or no prior knowledge of physics.

Because the quality of students has improved over the years and students are having more experience with labs in high school, "a more rigorous college level of laboratory is now associated with the lecture," explained Phares.

A petition from the students taking the core physics lab last year requested that the labs should be graded.

According to Phares, since the labs have become more challenging, "The vast majority of students in the past years were in favor of having a regular grading system as opposed to the pass/fail system . . . to get credit for their work on the lab."

Markham said that the science department "was glad to do" the grading change since "Grades are a more accurate reflection of the work the student did."

The request, which according to Markham was approved unanimously by the science departments' chairpersons, was proposed to Ellis, who gave the final approval.

Security awareness rises

By LYNN PERDEK

An awareness about security on college campuses has arisen recently in light of murders at many nearby campuses, such as Lehigh University, Drexel University and the University of Pennsylvania.

The parents of Jeanne Ann Clery, the student murdered last year at Lehigh University, stated recently in the Philadelphia Inquirer that they are turning their grief over their daughter's death into a cause.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Clery have started a campaign to make parents and students more aware of the dangers on college campuses. According to the Clerys, most colleges are afraid to publish statistics about the number of violent crimes on campuses because that would damage the schools' recruitment.

Villanova's campus is considered to be very safe by most of the students, according to Chief Rowan Kelly, director of Security. Kelly stated that Villanova has had its share of burglaries and that problems always arise wherever students live together in dormitories.

Kelly added that Villanova does not have a problem with violent crimes, but there could always be a first time, and students should always be careful.

A senior off-campus resident stated, "Although usually students do not even consider the safety factor, there are times when I personally have felt unsafe. On more than one occasion I have seen strange men hanging around the trolley station late at night with no one from Security in sight."

According to a former Villanova student, an elderly man was once found lurking around the basement lounge in Sheehan Hall but disappeared before Security officers could arrive on the scene.

According to Kelly, Villanova's security officers are well-trained and are on an even level with those on any college campus in the state. The Security officers make rounds of the campus regularly and can be contacted at any time.

Kelly noted that he would like to see a security desk manned by students in each of the dorms for added protection. Kelly said that this matter has been brought up with school officials, but they felt that it would be unnecessary.

Luci Jankowski, a resident assistant in Sheehan Hall, stated that there is quality security in every building on campus. She said that safety is a matter of common sense, such as bolting doors and not walking alone late at night.

"Students, especially women, have to take it upon themselves to insure safety. In instances where a stranger is seen in or around the residence halls, it is the duty of students to report it to Security," said Jankowski.

Margaret McMahan, a junior engineering major living in St. Rita's Hall, said that students do not even think about the potential of crime occurring on the campus because of the type of neighborhood in which the school is located.

According to Sandy Holloway, a junior Sheehan Hall resident, living in the dorms is safe as long as the doors are kept locked. "On weekends of football games, there are a lot of people around in front of Sheehan, and it is easy for people to steal things if doors aren't double-locked."

Sophomore residents Kimberly Howze and Arnita DeShields expressed that there are many areas of campus that are not well-lit and are good areas for strangers to hide, such as the path to south campus near the trolley station.

Kelly said that most problems occur when student drink or break visitation hours, which exist for the safety and welfare of the students.

sity started the program because they felt there was a concern about alcohol and drug abuse on campus," Janosik said.

If any athlete tests positive during University drug testing, the athlete will be sent to Janosik for counseling. In addition, any student who has a disciplinary problem related to drugs or alcohol will be required to be involved in counseling at the center.

If Janosik finds that the student is at risk of becoming an alcoholic or drug addict, she will counsel him or refer him to either Alcoholics Anonymous or Narcotics Anonymous.

In addition, the center has introduced a peer assistant program where students will be trained to help work with their peers who need assistance with alcohol or drug abuse. A "one-on-one" buddy system will be implemented and all counseling and assistance will be strictly confidential, according to Janosik.

Janosik has spoken to Villanova's Greek community and athletic teams and she hopes after Fall Break there will be a greater awareness of the program.

The University hopes to hire a secretary and a part-time counselor to work at the center. Currently, however, Janosik is working alone. She hopes for a good turnout of students willing to volunteer.

Janosik has her master's degree in counseling and has been involved with an addiction study program at Alvernia College and other studies with the Rutgeres University Center for Alcohol and Drugs.

to students and their parents, said Gorski.

Anna Marie N. Kelly, program director for the Villanova Student Union, commented, "The Union as a whole is disappointed because we thought it [the Valli and the Four Seasons concert] was going to be a good show. We're equally excited about The Golden Boys, who put on a very professional show."

According to Kelly, nothing can be done to prevent this from happening in the future. "There was a verbal agreement between Frankie Valli and the University. The decision to break the contract was Valli's, and [therefore is] out of our hands," said Kelly.

Tickets for Saturday's concert are still available in the Student Activities office

National News Notes

Homosexuality at Yale denied

The president of Yale University recently refuted an assertion that Yale was becoming an increasingly homosexual school, according to a recent article in The New York Times.

The accusations arose in an article which had appeared in The Wall Street Journal on Aug. 4. The article, entitled "Lipsticks and Lords: Yale's New Look," was a first-person article by a former Yale student, Julie V. Iovine. It stated, "Suddenly, Yale has a reputation as a gay school."

Yale President Benno C. Schmidt Jr. wrote a four-page letter in response to this article to 2,000 alumni and potential donors. Schmidt said the article presented "an extremely misleading picture of the student body." Also, students and officials found fault with Iovine for only conducting three interviews on campus and for not checking the statements of those interviewed.

The University has attempted to develop a gay-lesbian study center and it has previously conducted a gay and lesbian awareness day. However, Schmidt stated in his letter, "I know of no one except Ms. Iovine here or outside the University who considers Yale a 'gay school.' " M.S.

Four professors from the New England School of Law claimed last week that they were fired for being associated with a leftist legal group. The professors have all filed complaints with the American Bar Association.

The professors believe they were dismissed because of their involvement in the Critical Legal Studies movement, a leftist organization that views the law as a tool of the rich and powerful. The professors are also accusing the school of a McCarthy-like purge.

The school contends that the professors were dismissed for failing to meet the standards of the school and that a fair procedure was followed in their dismissal. E.H.M.

Colleges will not end yoga classes

A group of six Christian ministers asked Morton College and Triton College, two Illinois schools, to stop offering non-credit courses in yoga, claiming that the schools are endorsing Eastern religion.

The ministers claimed that by offering classes in yoga, parapsychology, astrology and Eastern mysticism, the schools are, in fact, teaching forms of worship and the occult.

Morton College, which is keeping the courses on the schedule despite the protests, has called the classes "hobby or leisure-time courses." E.H.M.

Make Security 'a part of the campus'

The University Senate, amidst a variety of complaints concerning Security from all levels of the University including students, faculty and administrators, recently created a fact-finding committee to study the Security department and parking policies. Certainly necessary, the committee provides a long overdue opportunity to implement a security system which functions homogeneously with the rest of the University instead of against it.

"Students believe the Security officers are out to 'get' them," stated Dr. Arthur Shriberg in his report evaluating Villanova's student life program. Although those words may not apply to all security guards or students, they prove that the majority of students feel they cannot trust the very people who are here to protect them. Shriberg further pronounced that point, reporting that, "Security is a most distressing situation. People have very little faith in the security system and consider it arbitrary and capricious."

The fact-finding committee, in addition to uncovering the positives and negatives of the Security system, must find a way to change the student opinions that Shriberg described. Shriberg's suggestions offer a good starting point: educate Security officers "to become a part of the campus" with the aid of Student Life; stress "linkages, listening skills and communications;" hire students for Security jobs.

However, the committee should not stop with those changes. The committee must see to it that students, faculty and administrators, as well as Security officers, have a hand in developing campus rules and regulations which work toward the greatest good for the greatest number. One major problem, the parking policies, should be analyzed one by one until a consensus is reached, establishing fair, efficient and consistent rules.

Of course, these changes will not come overnight, but with cooperation and hardwork by al of us — students, faculty, administrators and visitors — we can be safe and secure.

Require humanities seminar for all

As part of a new program, Villanova's College of Arts freshmen are required to take two semesters of a humanities seminar as part of their first-year curriculum. A program that emphasizes liberal arts is worthy of high accolades — and it is also worthy of being integrated into the course of study for all freshmen.

Villanova's mission statement, the guiding philosophy of the University, says that, "The University . . . is committed to a liberal arts component in each of its undergraduate programs." But all too often in this day of profession-oriented majors, liberal arts courses take a back seat to technical courses, leading to a one-sided education. For a better rounded education, more courses like the humanities seminars are needed.

The seminar format itself offers many benefits to students. First, the small class size allows greater interaction between professors and students. Second, the seminars' Socratic method of teaching demands a give-and-take brand of discussion that encourages thinking and active, instead of passive, learning. Additionally, the seminars stress writing, a vital skill that is sometimes neglected in education today.

With so many benefits offered by these seminars and the need for a liberal arts emphasis in technical and professional education at Villanova, why shouldn't humanities seminars become a part of every Villanova student's course of study?

The formulators of curriculum of this University ought to reaffirm Villanova's commitment to liberal arts in education by instructing a humanities seminar requirement for all majors as soon as possible. Remember the University's mission — and educate the whole person.

Greeks treated unfairly

To the Editor:

As a member of the Villanova greek community, I am disturbed by the recent events involving the greeks and the administration. The administration has decided to ignore that fraternities and sororities are an integral part of campus life, with one in every three students belonging to a greek organization. I do not wish to belabor the debate over the suspension of Delta Kappa Epsilon; however, it appears to be the point at which the trouble began.

Problems are only beginning; we must stop them before they become unmanageable.

Apparently, DKE did violate some regulations, and some punishment is therefore proper. However, a three-year suspension is not a punishment; it is a death sentence.

Regardless of what they may have done, and what example the administration wishes to make for the other fraternities and sororities, Villanova has lost DKE unless their alumni put forth a herculean effort in 1990.

More recently, the administration has promised to crack down on pledge activities and supervise this program. This may be a result of the DKE incident, but now the University wishes to regulate a purely internal function of each organization, a process which, for national groups, is largely governed by national policy and widespread tradition.

Finally, greeks have been banned from meeting in Bartley Hall because of the irresponsibility of one fraternity. The action of one group can in no way be generalized to punish the entire community.

The University obviously feels the need to send a message to the greeks. Let them tell us directly.

Problems are only beginning; we must stop them before they become unmanageable. The greeks must communicate with the school so that both can benefit from the greek system.

Clean up V.U.'s campus

By DR. R.L. CUMMINGS

In front of the Connelly Center there is a sculpture entitled "Awakening" by Jay Dugan. Whatever the "Awakening" is attesting to, it is not, as it is almost daily adorned, attesting to school pride or any kind of aesthetic appreciation. Covered as its base is by trash, littered as its surroundings are by cups, papers, plastic spoons, paper plates and an occasional can, the area appears to be "awakening" in the aftermath of a sloppy picnic, a picnic not confined to that strategic location but one which spilled into the environs of Vasey Hall (most noticeably the front) and obtruded into the space between the Connelly Center and Kennedy Hall. It has become an embarrassment to bring guests and conferences to the main campus, especially to the Connelly Center.

I have visited many universities throughout the country. Villanova's campus is the dirtiest one I have seen. The contrast with the University of Pennsylvania campus is particularly striking. Here you have an urban campus in a section of the city that is partially dilapidated; you have a far, far more heterogeneous student population than Villanova's — one might expect litter. It is not there. At the University of Pennsylvania, in good weather, students often eat their lunches while sitting on the benches and lawns in front of Van Pelt Library. I have yet to see anybody throw anything on the ground or leave anything on the benches. There are attractive trash cans around which are actually used.

If making the trash cans on Villanova's Campus more attractive would promote greater use of them, let us launch a campaign to paint or replace them. They are there, but often ignored, even when located nearby and not filled.

Perhaps those responsible for keeping the campus clean are partly to blame for the dirty conditions. However, it is difficult to believe that they are completely at fault. It would take an exceptionally vigilant cleaning squad to pick up after the number of people who seem routinely to consider the "Awakening," and the ground in general, a designated trash disposal site.

I urge student body leaders, the students themselves and Maintenance to give thought to ways to improve a situation which diminishes regard for the University by those who visit it. However impressed they may be by Villanova's basketball team, they cannot help but form an unfavorable opinion of the Villanova community's respect for itself and for others. Graffiti scars the face of many cities; trash is besmirching ours.

Since I am very positive about our university and its students, I would prefer writing a less negative op-ed but I believe the criticism is in order and hope that it may do some good.

Peer counselors assist students

By MEGAN GUIDERA

As the effects of the ever tedious academic calendar swing into full force, many students begin to wonder — why am I muddling through this collegic rat race to begin with? It is certainly not a rarity to find college students undecided about their majors and career goals, as early as first semester freshman year and as late as second semester senior year.

Many undecided and confused students simply do not know where to turn or begin, as far as career decisions go. Many of those that are aware of the resources available to them in the Career Development Center are intimidated by thoughts of speaking to a career counselor.

Many of those that are aware of the resources available to them in the Career Development Center are intimidated by thoughts of speaking to a career counselor.

As a result of this student confusion and intimidation, Villanova's Career Development Center has instituted a new program this year called Peer Counseling.

The peer counselors are 10 undergraduate students who were selected through an interview process last spring by David Leibig and Judy Madsen, both career counselors for Career Development. The peer counselors include four seniors: Mark Cary, Chris Cooney, Mia Donnell and Theresa Pasik; three juniors: Patty Brown, Patty Hayek and Trudi Maniaci; and three sophomores: John Guaragna, Megan Guidera and Arline Kerrigan.

From Aug. 26-31, the peer counselors went through an intensive six-day training program organized and run by Leibig. In this time period, the students became familiarized with the literature, organization and purpose of the Career Development Center. The students learned basic counseling skills, heard speakers and assessed public speaking skills.

The purpose of the peer counselors is to serve as an outreach for Career Development. Peer counselors will be giving presentations about the Career Development Center to residence halls, different classes and student organizations. The peer counselors will also be working in the Career Development Center helping students find literature, fill out Villanova Interview Forms and prepare for major selection, as well as answering basic questions about the center.

Hopefully, the Peer Counselor Program will alleviate some of the mounting tension and pressure on both the frantic students and the small but skilled Career Development Center staff.

As college students, one of the major focuses while in college is the quest for a career. The Career Development Center offers assistance to those not sure of how to attain their respective career goals.

Amid sorted workshops, the VALUE Program (Villanova Alumni Lending Undergraduate Experience) On Campus Recruiting and personal counseling, the Peer Counseling Program is another of the generous and abundant opportunities offered from the center that students should take immediate advantage of.

Catholics: Do not sit back and wait for change

By DANTE J. SCALA

Joseph McGowan implicitly stated one of the basic rules of conservative thought last week in his article, "Catholics portrayed inaccurately": There are people who follow the rules, and there are people who are wrong.

Or, to use McGowan's words, they are "ignorant," "conceited" and "appear to be spoiled brats." Priests who question their traditional rules are "idiots." The right thing to do is to sit back and let the keepers of tradition in the Vatican take care of the rules, wrote McGowan.

The fact that a 20th century American, raised in the liberal, democratic tradition, still holds to this view reflects the enduring power of the conservative philosophy, which is based on order, tradition and following the rules.

But McGowan, despite his conservative mindset, still grapples with a question which many liberal Catholics are considering: How can change come about in the Church?

In answering this question, McGowan states that the Church "is open to necessary changes." To strengthen his point, he states that all-Latin Masses have been discontinued over the last 25 years.

In all, there are no easy answers for conservatives or liberals. This makes it all the more important to keep channels of debates and communication open between Rome's hierarchy and the American laity.

What McGowan neglects to mention is that Mass had been celebrated in Latin since the middle of the fourth century. Clearly, the strict hierarchical structure of the Church does not allow for easy change; landmark events such as Vatican II are exceptions to the rules of conservative thought.

This conservative philosophy does have merit. It serves to protect the Church dogma, the sacred rules that provide the framework for the Catholic faith. As McGowan said, Church policy should not be determined by popular vote. The danger of liberalizing the Church is creating a "pick-and-choose" Christianity, in which the faithful would decide which rules to follow, and the essence of faith would be lost.

However, this does not mean that American Catholics' questions should be ignored. Their questions are important, they raise important issues such as how flexible Church rules can be within the framework of dogma. And after all, the laity is the Church; the Church officals have a duty to at least listen to what the faithful are saying.

In addition, conservative institutions face the problem of stagnancy, of becoming too set in their ways and being unable to adapt to a changing world. The vitality of American Catholics, combined with their enthusiasm for democratic change, could serve to help the Church with this problem.

In all, there are no easy answers, for conservatives or liberals. This makes it all the more important to keep channels of debate and communication open between Rome's hierarchy and the American laity. It is not time to sit back and wait for the Vatican to make changes. Instead, American Catholics should play an active role in shaping the future of the Church.

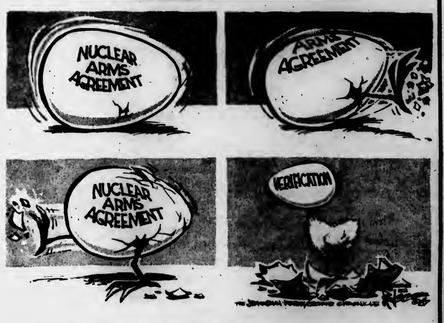
Act responsibly during tailgates

To the Editor:

Tailgates are a special and festive privilege of autumn at Villanova. Most likely, the majority of students attended last week's tailgate and had a blast. It concerns me, however, that people might just be overdoing it a bit. By now, students should be mature enough to know their own limits and not go quite so far overboard.



There really is no need to chug the three extra kegs 10 minutes before game time, drink until the point of falling down, urinate in public places (bathrooms are available) and make fools out of ourselves.

Students should realize that tailgating is a privilege and misconduct such as smoking substances other than tobacco and carrying the party to extremes could jeopardize this social event.

May I suggest that people bring more food and stay sober enough to attend the game? Our parents are coming this weekend. Let us have fun, but try to show them that we all have indeed grown up and can behave like responsible adults.

May I suggest that people bring more food and stay sober enough to attend the game.

DKE's punishment used as an example

To the Editor:

I would like to direct this letter toward the administration. I feel, as do many other greeks, that the administration is treating fraternities and sororities unfairly. They seem to be avoiding the fact that we, the greek organizations, are a significant part of Villanova's student body.

The recent disciplinary action against Delta Kappa Epsilon (DKE) and the expulsion of the greeks from Bartley Hall are token demonstrations of the administration's attitude. As far as DKE is concerned, three years on probation is unnecessarily extreme.

I realize that DKE violated campus policy and some penalty is warranted, but three years of probation is a death sentence. DKE is being used as an example to the entire greek community.

As a further example, the administration has prohibited greeks from meeting in Bartley Hall. Admittedly, one fraternity caused a disturbance, but this is not reason enough to hold the entire greek system responsible.

The administration seems to be using extreme punishment as its only policy toward greek society. Perhaps instead of punishment, the administration should try communicating with the greeks, so that both parties can benefit.

Parents Weekend previewed

By KAREN L. IOVINO

The weekend of Oct. 2-4 marks a special event here at Villanova University — Parents' Weekend.

Following the same pattern as previous Parents' Weekends, Villanova has planned many special events to entertain the students and their parents.

On Oct. 2 a reception with live music and dancing will be held in the duPont Pavilion. The dance will continue from 9 p.m. until midnight.

The events on Saturday begin at 9:30 a.m. with a welcoming address by University President the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A.

At 10 a.m., presentations will be offered by the academic deans of the various colleges within the University. Continuing throughout the day receptions will be held by several dormitories for the parents of their residents.

A new addition to this year's Parents' Weekend is the tailgate open to parents and students, sponsored by the Blue Key Society.

Karen Chiappone, treasurer of Blue Key, said that the tailgate is "mainly for freshmen. Since we give the campus tours, Blue Key members are often the first people at Villanova that new students see. The tailgate will be sort of a 'tour follow-up' — and a chance for the society to see the new students and their parents again."

John Stadtler, president of the Blue Key Society, stated that, "As a freshman, I was looking for someone to associate with. The tailgate will give freshmen who are not yet affiliated with an organization a place to go."

The Blue Key Society will occupy the first tailgate table in front of Sheehan Hall.

Following the tailgate, the Villanova Wildcats will play Boston University in football. The game will begin at 1:30 p.m.

Other sports events taking place during the day include volleyball game against Pittsburgh at 1 p.m., a J.V. soccer game against Northeastern Christian at 1:30 p.m., field hockey game with La Salle at 5:30 p.m. and another volleyball game with Yale at 6 p.m.

The day's events will be capped off with a concert in the duPont Pavilion. Appearing live will be "The Golden Boys of Rock-n-Roll:" Bobby Rydell, Chubby Checker and Fabian. The show begins at 8 p.m., with seating on a first come, first served basis.

On Sunday, a Parents' Mass will be offered at 11 a.m. in the duPont Pavilion. The Mass provides a perfect way to end this family weekend.

After Mass, a champagne brunch will be held in the Connelly Center. Brunch will also be offered in Dougherty Hall.

As an end to the weekend, the women's tennis team will play Georgetown. The match will begin at noon on the St. Mary's tennis courts.

With all of the special events and presentations being offered, Parents' Weekend 1987 promises to be not only a happy reunion for students and their parents, but also an exciting and fun-filled weekend for all.

Arrival of "Olympics"

By ANDRE CALIHANNA

There are very few experiences that are truly honest, bordering mystical, so when you happen upon one, it practically beckons you to pursue it. Special Olympics at Villanova remains one of the best examples of such an experience that our school has to offer.

Realizing it may seem a bit unjustified to label Special Olympics a mystical experience, it seems necessary to say that the program holds something so intrinsically good that taking part in it not only helps the handicapped athletes achieve their impossible dream, it actually brings one closer to one's self.

It seems the program's inherent value is self-explanatory and is evidenced by the already overwhelming response from freshmen and other first-time contributors.

The support received at this year's first informational meeting far exceeded last year's response, as well as anyone's expectations, and the intense enthusiasm displayed so far can only increase in the weeks and days counting down to Oct. 11, the actual day of the tournament.

Preparation for this year's event began last spring, and everyone in charge appears prepared for what has to be accomplished.

Committees have been formed and selected, and the beginning stages of the ceremonies are under way.

Sept. 16 marked the day of this year's first informational meeting,

Becoming a sports trainer

By JACQUELINE GENTILE

Job description: Fun, demanding, provides invaluable practical knowledge and experience, along with new friends and opportunities to travel and to grow.

Too bad the data entry job you had this summer was not quite as exciting as the job described above. Well, you do not have to wait until summer to look into this opportunity. It is right here on Villanova's campus. And the job? It is the position of student athletic trainer.

Dan Unger, head athletic trainer at Villanova believes that his job could not be done without the help of student trainers. Villanova provides student trainers for all of its intercollegiate sports and most club sports.

Unger stated that the main responsibility of student trainers is to "assist the staff trainers in the total health care of the athlete." This includes the recognition and treatment of injuries.

What type of experience and training is needed for the job? Unger runs a series of informal clinics and seminars for the students. Someone is also brought in to teach CPR. But the majority of the training is "on the job," where students work with other student trainers and staff trainers.

The only restriction Unger places on eligibility for the job of student athletic trainer is his preference for freshmen and sophomores. This is because of the fact that it takes approximately a year until the students are able to give adequate health care to athletes. Otherwise, the job is one that any interested student can consider.

Diversity, therefore, is a characteristic of student trainers. They are not all pre-med or nursing majors. The present student trainers have majors ranging from accounting to engineering.

There are also both male and female student trainers. Does this mean that women are trainers for women's teams only and men for men's teams only? "Absolutely not," said Unger. There are male student trainers for field hockey and female student trainers for football here at Villanova.

When a student first becomes a trainer, he or she looks at the different sports and tells the staff trainers the ones that he or she would be most interested in working with. Also, from year to year, student trainers can change the sports they work with.

It sounds exciting and interesting, but being a student trainer is time-consuming and demanding. Sheila O'Sullivan, a student trainer for football, said the job "takes a lot of time. You're working every single day. You're here before they [the players] are. You're here after they leave."

If the job is so time-consuming, why do students stick with it? Although the job of student trainer is initially volunteer, there is a tuition scholarship which Unger said he breaks into increments. Moreover, a student who qualifies for work study can also consider becoming a student trainer.

There is also no denying the fact

Sports Information center unfolded

By IRENE V. LANGRAN

Unless you are a member of the media, a Villanova coach or athlete, or a part of the Villanovan staff, chances are you probably have never visited the corner of the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse that is the headquarters of the Villanova Sports Information department.

This staff is responsible for much more than the average person may realize. One just has to walk in their office to find they seem to be like any successful team in the sports world — in constant motion yet always working together.

The staff consists of three full time members — Director Craig Miller, Assistant Director Jim DeLorenzo and Assistant to the Director Marc Ryan.

Working with them during the school year are approximately 10 students. These students often train for future positions in sports information, as DeLorenzo did himself.

DeLorenzo discussed some of his and the staff's many responsibilities. He explained that they must keep up to date on each and every Villanova athletic team. They also prepare media guides, posters and all other types of publicity.

They keep records and statistics for many of the Villanova sporting events. They also serve as a liason between the media and the coach or athlete when there is an important story to cover.

During home basketball games the staff is seen running back and forth almost as often as the players themselves.

DeLorenzo describes their game-time activity as being "a type of a situation where you can sit back at home and watch a game on TV saying to yourself, 'those announcers sure know a lot about the game.'

"Well, the reason most of those announcers know what's going on is because someone ... is handing it to them over their heads." It is a state DeLorenzo has described as "constant bombardment."

How does the office handle all this work and more? As Miller states, they are a staff which must often work 12 hours a day, seven days a week.

The evolution of Villanova athletics parallels the evolution of the Sports Information department. As the teams themselves became more recognized and developed, more people were needed to cover the growing demands of the media.

DeLorenzo claims that the department has grown tremendously ever since the men's basketball team won the 1985 NCAA Championship. He further says that the department was run by a single person in the late 1950s and one more person was added by the mid 1960s. A decade later, it was made up of two full-time employees and a secretary.

Perhaps what is most important is the very way these hard-working people approach their jobs. Each member of the staff is eager to express the pride and excitement they have in their work.

DeLorenzo expresses the personal level of their work when he describes, "you get to see them [the athletes] come in as freshman and watch their skills develop. At the same time, you see their personalities grow."

The basic attitude and goal of this department is perhaps best expressed by Miller when he explains that the staff tries "in a positive way to project an image of the student athlete.

"The thing that we've taken pride in here at Villanova is the fact that we've been able to have so many athletes named Academic All-Americans, which shows that they succeed in athletics without sacrificing academics.

"I think that we've shown a positive image of Villanova athletes being articulate and well-educated, which is what college athletics are about."

Special Olympics: Creating an atmosphere of friendship and laughter

as Corrine Kohl, Special Olympic event director, and Brian Vezina, head of the Volunteers Committee, invited committee heads to outline their specific duties and goals for the event.

As the committee heads finished, attention was turned to what became the highlight of the evening, a slideshow that vividly showed what Special Olympics has accomplished and meant in the past. More than 350 people who attended the meeting were moved and inspired enough to sing along with the soundtrack accompanying the show.

As expected, the majority of those interested in helping out intend to be "huggers," those people who escort and support individual athletes throughout the day. This is by far the most personal, and in many ways the most rewarding position of the Special Olympics program.

Committees include those involved with athletic skill, such as soccer skills; those involved with information and first aid stations; VIP and parent welcoming committees; as well as security and a host of others that work on the day of, the days preceding, and the days after the actual ceremonies.

This year's hugger training meetings, scheduled for Oct. 5 and Oct. 6, are mandatory for those interested in being huggers. Those who would like to be huggers must attend one of the meetings in order to confirm their interest, as well as to have questions answered.

Those involved with this year's Special Olympic's program hope this will be the most eventful, and the smoothest to date; and judging by the enthusiasm and dedication displayed thus far, it appears that everyone's hopes will be realized.

Pavilion hosts events

By DANA RAO

The duPont Pavilion, the main sports complex for Villanova, is the latest addition to the Villanova campus. Opened in February 1986, the stadium can accommodate 6,500 screaming Villanova students.

This new complex was commissioned to be built by the administration of Villanova. A committee decided 10 years ago that the two biggest concerns for a growing student body were a student center and a new sports complex. First they built the widely praised Connelly Center. Then they set their sights on the pavilion.

Financing was the first problem, but to the administration's aid came John E. duPont, who donated the majority of the $15 million needed to complete the project.

Further funds were provided by Villanova alumni.

The pavilion contains a maximum of six basketball courts, or four basketball and two tennis courts. It has an indoor track, a pool, the Attra Sports Training Clinic and the regular weight room. To use the facilities you need your student I.D.

Connected to the pavilion is the Butler Annex, which has additional courts, mainly used by the wrestling team. The Jake Nevin Fieldhouse is no longer the basketball center, but other sports teams, like the volleyball team, still use it.

Villanova is a Division I school. A modern basketball facility is a must, not only to house the fans, but to help recruitment and provide the team with an excellent arena in which to play. So for the next basketball game, go out and support your team and experience the sensation that is the duPont Pavilion.

Student athletic trainers gain useful skills that the job is a fantastic experience for anyone interested in medical school, nursing, physical therapy, sports medicine or even anyone who may someday be a little league parent.

Being a student trainer gives one the benefit of getting involved with a sport you are interested in. Unger said, "If you can't be an athlete and really participate in a sport, it's a good way to still be active in it."

Because they are in such close contact with the sport, student trainers have a bird's eye view of the game. O'Sullivan stated that being an athletic trainer "brings another aspect into watching sports."

The opportunity to travel is another benefit for a student trainer. According to Unger, student trainers are able to travel with the sports teams all over the East Coast.

The whole experience, however, goes far beyond the athletic and medical aspects of the job. Patty Harr, also a student trainer for football, feels she has gained confidence in her work, and the job has helped her with interpersonal and communication skills.

Mark Anderson, a student trainer for football, added that he enjoys being able to share in both the good and bad times of the athletes.

Student trainers have the unique and special experience of being a trainer for the athletes, working with them on a student-to-student basis.

Because the student trainers and athletes are the same age, they can relate well to each other. Anderson stated that athletes "trust some of the students a little more differently than they do the staff."

If you are interested in becoming a student trainer, applications are now being accepted. Contact Unger in the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse.

Programs offer high-tech jobs

By PROF. KARL ZIMMER

Mary Natalie Tulski, now a junior chemical engineering student, just returned from a summer work assignment at Air Products and Chemicals in Allentown. Her eyes light up as she recalls the experiences and events of the summer.

"It was just fantastic. They treated me like a professional, and it was a most wonderful and exciting experience," she said.

Mary is just one of the many Villanova engineering and science students who get interesting and good-paying jobs in industry during the summer by participating in the Summer Technical Experience Program (STEP) and the Extended Intern Program (EIP).

These programs are a cooperative effort by the studewnts, Dr. Robert Stokes, director of the Career Development Center, and Professor Karl Zimmer, the College of Engineering's program coordinator.

The STEP program is geared toward getting summer jobs for undergraduate students near their own hometown. Resumes of participating students are sent to companies known to be interested in hiring Villanova undergraduate students in January.

Each company then reviews the resumes and contacts the students directly to get either additional information or to set up an interview.

The EIP program, on the other hand, is primarily for students who have successfully completed their junior year and are interested in working for a 12-to 15-month period before their senior year.

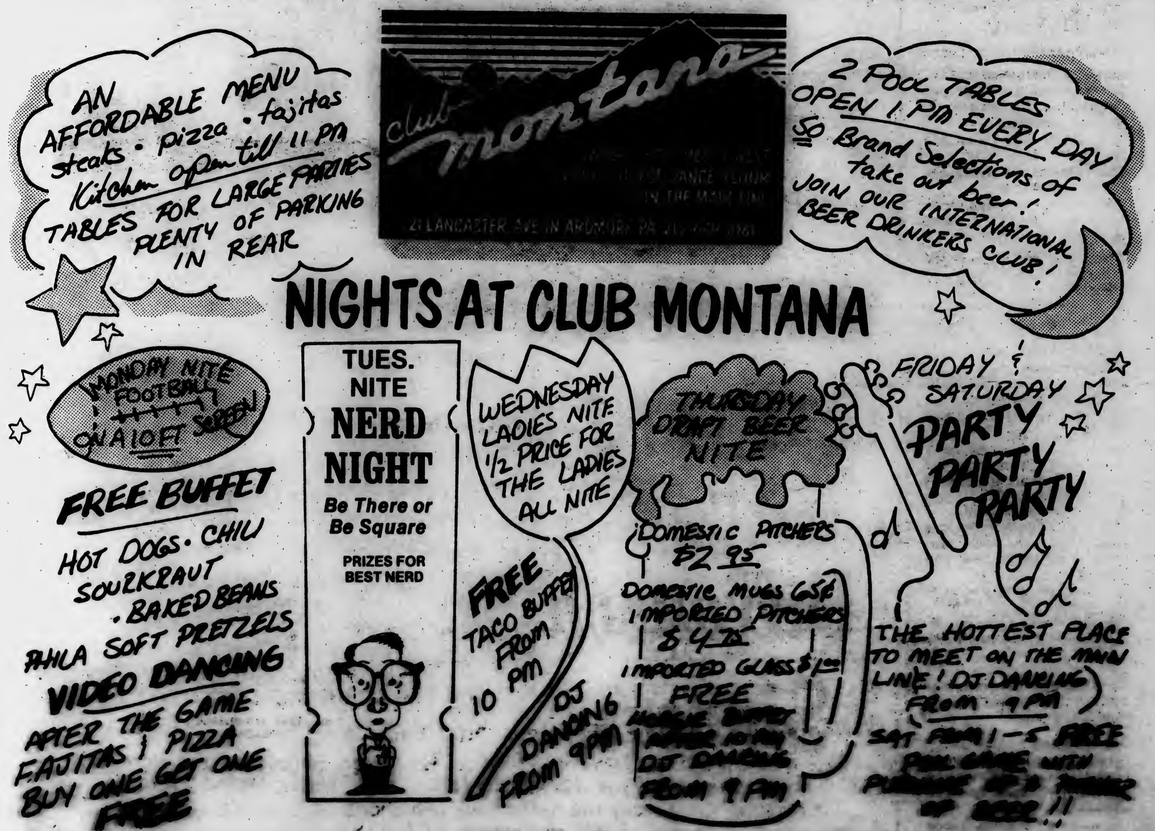
These students are eager to get some real, "hands-on" work experience in their particular field and to experience first hand the challenges faced by real employees. Others, for financial reasons, find it necessary to work to help pay for their tuition expenses.

The jobs are all technically interesting, pay well, and give students an opportunity to apply the theories and skills they learned in school.

In October of each school year, interested students enlist for the STEP and EIP programs and are required to attend a series of three one-hour seminars. Here they are guided in preparing their resumes and are taught the strategies of planning their own job search as well as how to conduct themselves during job interviews.

In return, students identify at least five companies where they would like to work, preferably in or near their own hometown. Last year, over 70 students qualified for the program.

During the last few years, the Engineering College's coordinator and the director of the Career Development Center have visited or contacted over 500 engineering or scientific companies to determine their interest in hiring Villanova staudents. The results have been most gratifying.



The collected list of company names and their needs are summarized for students on the VAX in the Engineering Computation Center. Each company entry gives the address, name of the employment manager, telephone number, type of work they do, the particular disciplines they are seeking, and whether they are seeking upcoming sophomores, juniors or seniors.

This year the STEP and EIP seminars are scheduled to be given in two series. To qualify for participation in the program, students must attend one of each of the three talks available on different days.

If for some reason students find it impossible to attend any one of these talks, they can still qualify by watching the video tapes in the Instructional Media Services (IMS) section of the library. Here they can also get copies of the informational handouts.

Families provide strength and support

By REV. RAY JACKSON

"I complained because I had no shoes, until I met a man who had no feet."

We sometimes complain about our parents: they are too strict; they worry too much about where we are, or who we are with; they pressure us with questions about school work, drugs and drinking, going to church, or if we are getting enough sleep. In a word, they care.

This is in contrast to many other children and young adults in our society whose parents do not care about them, or who, perhaps, have never known a mother or father.

Statistically in the U.S. more than 30 percent of children under 15 live in one-parent families. Thus, we need to count our blessings as we celebrate Parents' Weekend at Villanova. Although some parents may not be physically present, they will be here in mind and spirit.

Parents' Weekend allows us the opportunity to reflect on the value of family roots. Whatever our nationality or racial heritage, every ethic group finds strength and support within the context of family life.

We should appreciate the bonding, friendship, solidarity and love that flows between ourselves and our parents. It is a first step on our journey toward a fuller appreciation of our membership in God's family.

This membership in God's family in no way diminishes our ties with our biological family. Indeed, it may well strengthen them. It broadens our vision to include more people whom we can call sisters and brothers.

Jesus taught His followers to pray, "Our Father," implying that God is a life-giver for everyone. It was a way of drawing all humanity into a community of faith with all people bonded in love and caring for one another. This is the Kingdom of God for which Jesus prayed and for which he asked us to seek.

Parents' Weekend provides us with a fresh chance to heal old wounds within our family, forgive each other our faults and stretch our minds to a new awareness that we are part of God's family.

At Villanova we are blessed with more than feet and shoes, we are blessed with the knowledge of a gracious and loving God who constantly invites us to love one another in both our personal and societal families.

New rules for fraternity football

By STEVE DELDUCO

Many of the fraternity teams in the intramural football league were displeased with the implementation of new rules in what has been probably the most popular and competitive fraternity sport. Discussion was held at the Inter Fraternity council meeting and a motion was passed to send a delegate to the director of intramural sports to voice the desires of the fraternity league.

In his meeting with intramural director, Andy McGovern, delegate Glenn Cunningham of Zeta Psi requested that the fraternity league be allowed to play under the old flag football rules. Under the old rules, play was similar to traditional football. Three players on offense were required to block, and blocking was done with contact.

The new rules make every offensive player eligible for a pass. Blocking is to be done without contact or by screening the opposing player.

In the meeting, McGovern cited injuries, liability, violence as the reasons for changing the program.

Greeks have begun another season of fraternity flag football. Pictured above are Zeta Psi and Pi Kappa Alpha.

Cunningham argued that, under the new rules, running plays would be impossible. McGovern suggested that the fraternities play a few games and get a feel for the game. He added that he would make a video cassette of the national tournament available to teams desiring to see some creative ways of playing the game.

With the new rules firmly in place in the fraternity league, many teams have decided to stay with it. As of Sept. 29, four out of 12 teams had quit the fraternity league. Representatives from the four teams that left the league were not available for comment.

LXA receives award

By PAUL PASCARELLA

Lambda Chi Alpha held an international leadership convention at Memphis State University Aug. 16. Lambda Chi Alpha currently has over 200 respected chapters spread throughout the United States and Canada.

The Beta-Iota chapter at Villanova University was the recipient of the Outstanding Achievement in Membership Recruitment Award for 1987. This prestigious award is not only based on the quantity of members but on the total development program.

The brothers of Lambda Chi Alpha are very proud of this accomplishment and attribute their success to their well-rounded associate member program. This achievement is due in a large part to Charles Murphy and Buck Reitmeyer who were in charge of the Rush program over the last two years.

The brothers realize that they must continue to strive for excellence and expect their Associate Member Program to continue nurturing quality members.

AOTT co-sponsors benefit

By MONICA BOSCIA

The sisters of Alpha Omicron Pi are co-sponsoring a benefit concert Oct. 4 at noon.

The concert, which features Tommy Conwell and the Young Rumblers, will also be highlighted with performances by several of the area's most popular bands. The line-up includes The Flamin' Caucasians, Bricklin' and Dynagroove, as well as a special guest appearance by Andy King of the Hooters.

All proceeds are to benefit George Butera and Jimmy Brown, two young men from this area who are quadriplegics as the result of auto accidents.

The concert is being held at Mermaid Lake in Blue Bell, Pa. Mermaid Lake is located on Jolly Road, off Route 202, 7 miles past King of Prussia Plaza. Tickets are $12 at the door.

The sisters of AOII would like to encourage all Villanova students to attend this enjoyable and worthwhile event.

Pledging has many benefits

By RICK BERGAN

The decision to pledge a fraternity or sorority is an excellent way to become involved with campus life. It is also one of the most important decisions one will make during the college years. Through greek life, one is provided with new experiences, valuable lifelong friendships and knowledge not available through a purely academic curriculum.

Pledgeship is the learning process by which each fraternity and sorority educates the men and women wishing to become members. The purpose of pledgeship is not to demean the individual, but rather to enhance his fraternal and collegiate experiences. Greek life emphasizes academics as well as the chance for leadership, competitive sports and an increasingly active social life.

While specific activities and rituals vary among fraternities and sororities, the responsibilities of each pledge are similar. The primary responsibility is for the pledge to familiarize himself/herself with every aspect of the fraternity or sorority. The pledge must get to know each of the brothers or sisters, as well as the pledge class as much as possible.

Pledge unity is the bond which brings pledges together and makes them a class of brothers or sisters. It is important that the strong feeling of unity begin as a pledge and continue into brotherhood or sisterhood.

One should remember that pledging is not an end in itself, but a means to enhance the college experience. If you think pledging might be a good experience, check out fraternity or sorority rush in the spring, and get involved!

Mellencamp comes into his own

By KEVIN HECHT

The Lonesome Jubilee
John Mellencamp
Mercury Records

I guess it don't matter how old you are or how old one lives to be; I guess it boils down to what we did with our lives and how we deal with our own destinies.
John Mellencamp

There may be no better chronicle of personal or artistic maturity than the music of John Mellencamp. The man who once proclaimed himself an "American Fool" and lived by the philosophy that "nothing really matters and so what if it did," has grown up to see that things really do matter, there are problems in this world and it is up to us to do something about them.

The 1985 release of Scarecrow established Mellencamp as one of the nation's most important artists when he captured the mood of the country's rural and suburban working class and the plight of the American farmer. He polished his previously rough-edged music to tell a story through his songs, and he has made people take a long, serious look at the talent of a man whose music has been thought of as anything but serious before.

The question raised by Mellencamp's breakthrough album was whether the Midwestern bred musician could keep up his newly discovered sense of social consciousness. His latest release, The Lonesome Jubilee, answers this question with an unequivocal yes. Mellencamp is here to stay, and the down to earth, gritty guitarist has a great deal to say about life, living, caring and the introspective examination of one's soul, especially when one realizes, as Mellencamp does in "The Real Life," "That there's less days in front of the horse than riding in the back of the cart."

The Lonesome Jubilee showcases a man content with himself, and a man inspired by his inner drive to express what he feels is right.

If Scarecrow was spawned by his concern for the American farmer, then the genesis for The Lonesome Jubilee was clearly Mellencamp's realization of the onset of middle age, and how he has dealt with his own destiny. The album reveals a sensitive artist delving into his past and trying to learn from his mistakes. In the process, past sins of omission and commission are examined as well. His conscience reflects that there is always time to ask for forgiveness, to be forgiven and to change ourselves and the world for the better.

"Check it Out" expresses the thoughts of a man who has "questioned his own behavior," and "Hotdogs and Hamburgers" questions the past behavior of an entire nation and its dealings with the American Indian. We all must choose a path to take in life, and just like making a choice between hotdogs and hamburgers, "Everyone of us has got to choose between right and wrong, and giving up or holding on."

According to Mellencamp in "We Are The People," we choose in our lifetime whether we hold a man's color of his skin against him, and whether we turn our backs on the homeless. "Down and Out In Paradise," and "Empty Hands" examines the suffering of people who can no longer make ends meet.

The Lonesome Jubilee showcases a man content with himself and a man inspired by his inner drive to express what he feels is right. The album does more than highlight the artist's new found lyrical maturity. It captures the listener with catchy riffs that are played simply and layered beautifully with the acoustic sounds of banjos, mandolins, harmonica, accordion and numerous steel guitars. The music and lyrics possess a genuine feeling of sincerity and healthily examine that state of our nation without preaching or giving little hope for a better future.

Mellencamp shows that we all make mistakes, but we all have the ability to do a lot of good as well. It is up to us to seek out that good, and work toward a brighter future. A quote Mellencamp uses from Ecclesiastes on the inside cover of the album perhaps sums up the mood of its music, expressing that, "There is nothing better for men that they should be happy in their work, for that is what they are here for, and no one can bring them back to life to enjoy what will be in the future, so let them enjoy it now."

Mellencamp is a man who enjoys his work and who has come into his own to do his job very well. The "American Fool" is a fool no more, and he truly deserves to enjoy his success.

With the release of The Lonesome Jubilee, John Mellencamp has firmly established himself as one of rock-and-roll's top artists.

Local stars shine for two handicapped youths

By KATHRYN QUIGLEY

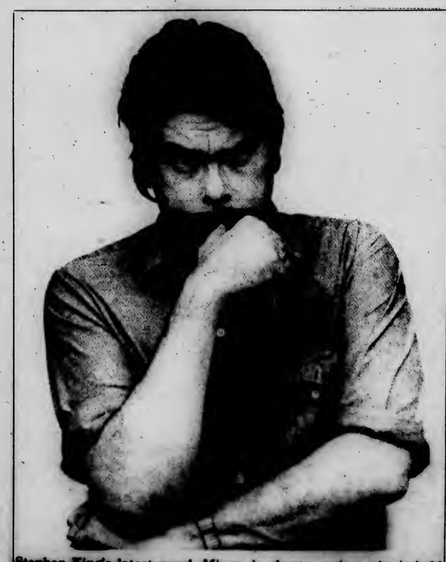
What do Tommy Conwell and the Young Rumblers, Bricklin, Dynagroove, the Flamin' Caucasions, Big Daddy Graham and Hooter Andy King have in common? They are all examples of the finest in Philadelphia talent and they are all performing at a benefit concert at Mermaid Lake in nearby Blue Bell on Oct. 4 at noon.

The WMMR-hosted concert is a benefit for two area youths who have been paralyzed in accidents.

Jimmy Brown of Narberth and George Butera of Ambler are both 20. They are also both quadriplegics. Butera was vacationing at the New Jersey shore last summer with his friends, when he dove into a wave and fractured vertebrae in his back. Butera is now a quadriplegic for life.

Brown was drag racing with friends on Montgomery Ave. last April. The car he was in crashed into a steel utility pole. Brown is paralyzed from the neck down. He will never walk or talk again.

It is hard to imagine what it is like to be 20 years old and a quadriplegic. Imagine being confined to a wheelchair because you can't move your arms and legs. Imagine reaching the end of your teen years, finally achieving that long sought after independence, and it is meaningless because you are dependent on others for even your most basic needs. Imagine your family going into debt because of your hospital bills. Brown and Butera do not have to image it — they live it every day.



Brown and Butera have a lot of friends, though, and those friends have organized a benefit concert for them. Mermaid Lake, the site of the concert, is four miles north of King of Prussia mall. It is approximately half-a-mile off Route 202.

One hundred percent of the profits will go to help Butera and Brown. Doors open at 11:30 a.m. on Oct. 4. The concert is from noon til 6 p.m. Tickets are available through Ticketron, Oreleans Restaurant and Mardi Gras Cabaret in Paoli, Plastic Fantastic in Bryn Mawr and Mads Records in Ardmore.

Horror King strikes again

Misery
by Stephen King
Viking Publishing
½

Stephen King's latest novel, Misery, is about a writer who is held hostage by a psychotic nurse.

In Stephen King's latest novel, Misery, famous writer Paul Sheldon is held hostage by psychotic ex-nurse Annie Wilkes. He is forced to endure many gruesome tortures during his 10-month stay in her secluded farmhouse in Colorado and faces the possibility of death every day. Wilkes goes through very sudden mood swings whenever anyone disagrees with her and does not hesitate to act when angry.

At the beginning of the novel, Sheldon wakes up in a great deal of pain and is completely unaware of where he is or how he got there. Wilkes, his "No. 1 fan," begins to tell him exactly what has happened and why he is hurt (broken legs, crushed pelvis). After completing Fast Cars, his latest novel, Sheldon became very drunk, went for a drive and crashed on the side of the road.

Wilkes happened to drive by and see him lying unconscious in his overturned car, so she pulled him out of the wreckage and took him to her home. Wilkes took care of Sheldon for the next two weeks, keeping him alive by feeding him intravenously and giving him painkillers.

Once again, Stephen King thrills his audience with a suspense-filled, psychological masterpiece. Misery is sure to keep you on the edge of your seat until the last page is turned.

After speaking to Wilkes for this short period of time, Sheldon senses that something is seriously wrong with her mental state of mind. Sheldon feels as if he is in trouble from the start and realizes that his life is in jeopardy. He learns that he must humor Wilkes and tell her what she wants to hear if he ever wants to escape with his life.

Sheldon has become a very famous writer because of the character, Misery Chastain. He wrote a series of novels about her that were very popular, especially with Wilkes. The problem was that Sheldon's latest Misery novel, Misery's Child, had Misery Chastain die because of complications while giving birth. When Wilkes finished reading the novel, she went insane and told Sheldon that he must write a new novel and bring her back to life.

During the next few months, Sheldon starts writing the new novel and Wilkes becomes more and more dominant over him. For example, she chops off his right foot for trying to escape and his left thumb for complaining about the quality of the typewriter. This section of the novel contains some scenes that are as gory and horrifying as any novel King has ever written.

Sheldon experiences more physical and mental pain than any other character in King's numer-

Two horrifying films explore the macabre

By RUSS CECCOLA

"Hellraiser"
directed by Clive Barker
New World Pictures
*½

"Dolls"
directed by Ed Naha Empire International Pictures
½

"Hellraiser" is the slickest, most intense horror film to be shown in theaters since "Evil Dead 2" and "A Nightmare on Elm Street Part 3: Dream Warriors."

This past week has seen the release of two excellent films from independent movie companies: "Hellraiser" from New World Pictures and "Dolls" from Empire International Pictures. Both combine a good story line with the top-of-the-line effects and camera work to give the most horror for your money. Before either of these films disappear from the theaters, which will inevitably happen, run out and see these masterpieces of the macabre.

"Hellraiser" is the slickest, most intense horror film to be shown in theaters since "Evil Dead 2" and "A Nightmare on Elm Street Part 3: Dream Warriors." Both written and directed by the newest master of horror fiction, Clive Barker, "Hellraiser" takes Barker's visions and puts them into some of the most disturbing and chaotic scenes since the shower scene of "Psycho" Barker is giving Stephen King a run for the money and is already the most popular horror novelist in Britain, thanks to the success of his six-volume Books of Blood.

The story behind "Hellraiser" is bizarre, but I will make my best attempt to explain it. Larry Cotton (Andrew Robinson) and his wife Julia (Clare Higgins) have just moved into Larry's mother's house, which had been uninhabited for a while. Through flashbacks, we see that Larry's brother, Frank (Sean Chapman), came to the house, shortly before the couple moved in, with a strange Chinese puzzle box made of wood and metal. By playing with the box in an upstairs room, Frank Cotton opens up a door to another dimension ruled by Cenobites, a foursome of demons who advocate reaching the ultimate pleasure through the ultimate pain.

Frank Cotton is pulled into the Cenobites' dimension and is tortured. When Larry Cotton gashes his hand with a nail and bleeds on the floor of the same upstairs room, Frank is brought back to life slowly and his body is formed from the blood. Julia Cotton had an affair with Frank Cotton and is the only one who knows that Frank Cotton has escaped the Cenobites' dimension. She kills more men in the same room to bring Frank Cotton back to a full existence so that she can make love to him once more.

Matters are complicated as the Cenobites return into the earthly dimension when Larry Cotton's daughter, Kirsty, reopens the puzzle box after stealing it from Frank Cotton's forming body. "Hellraiser" takes this story to the limits of grotesqueness and leaves the audience with an ending that can spawn an sequel.

The effects in "Hellraiser" are incredible and only strengthen Barker's excellent directing and story. This film has already been deemed a sleeper hit and rightfully so. Only upon seeing it can you fully appreciate Barker's incredible talent as an author and portrayer of the darker side of human nature and the supernatural.

"Dolls," on the other hand, takes a particularly simple story and expands it into a full length motion picture, with more of the plot revealed every other minute. Guy Rolfe and Hilary Mason star as Gabriel and Hilary Hartwick, an old couple who own a house far in the countryside. When a young girl named Judy (Carrie Lorraine), her parents David and Rosemary, Ralph Morris and a couple of punkers named Isabel and Enid arrive at the house during a strong thunderstorm, the story begins.

The Hartwicks put the people up for the night and throughout the seemingly endless night, the bad-tempered members of the group are killed by unseen creatures, which we later find out are dolls. The Hartwicks are dollmakers and each doll is an original, with no other like it. The dolls come alive at night and only Judy and Ralph understand what they are and how they are made. I will leave the Hartwicks' secret up to you to find out when you see the film.

"Dolls" is the work of the same team that brought the classic "Reanimator" to movie audiences. The effects of John Beuchler are incredible, with the title characters coming to life almost unbelievably. The house in which the story takes place beats out every other scary house I have seen in the movies, and the part of the movie that revolves around Judy's story of seeing "elves" and everyone else's disbelief gives "Dolls" an extra substance. Race to the theaters and see this great film before its run in the area ends.

PHM PEGASUS **
ELECTRONIC ARTS
C64/128, AP

If you are sick of plain games that involve ships and airplanes, then PHM Pegasus should be your next purchase. In it, you control a Patrol Hydrofoil Missilecraft, the long name for a hydrofoil. This vessel speeds along the water on a layer of air and can achieve incredible speeds with which it can easily surprise enemies. You command one of three NATO ally hydrofoils in PHM Pegasus in one of eight missions.

There are two modes in which you operate your hydrofoil — from the bridge and on an operations map. Most of your time will be spent on the bridge, but you have to look to the map to find out your mission's location as well as the place of yourself and your enemy.

You initially choose one of the eight missions, from navigating the Yucatan straits to escorting a supply ship out of the Persian Gulf. In all of the missions, your score depends on whether you achieve your main objective, how many enemies are destroyed, how many enemies are damaged, how much time is left and whether you survive.

There are relatively few controls that you have to learn and the weapons you can use are: a 76 millimeter cannon, chaff rocket, Harpoon missiles, Gabriel missiles and Exocet missiles. PHM Pegasus comes with a complete manual as well as cards that depict the various ships for easier recognition. This simulation will keep you busy on the seas of the world for a long time.

EOS: EARTH ORBIT STATIONS * 12
ELECTRONIC ARTS C64/128, AP

I hate to call this release a game, but that is how EOS is referred to by its designer. The detail incorporated in this program of space colonization is incredible. The basic premise in EOS is that you must build from scratch a space station suited for a mission that you select. The station can be any combination of 39 modules, with only six of these 39 absolutely necessary.

You must first choose to commit your station design to one of seven missions. These missions range from building a hospital near Mars to searching for life in the Solar System. Once selected, the real challenge begins.

You must keep track of all money supplied for the project as well as every other possibility and problem. In doing this, you have a vast selection of commands at your disposal. From reading information about a planet or moon to piloting a shuttle, everything you need is in your hands.

Based on NASA's plans for the next 50 years of space exploration, EOS includes details and facts about every planet and moon in the Solar System. EOS takes two disks to capture all of this information, as well as the missions and game itself. The manual that comes with the game includes tips on completing the missions and a full explanation of the program.

EOS is almost a tutorial of the future. You can take as long as you want to experiment with the game (two to 40 hours) and design advanced stations such as cargoliners, space hospitals, dry docks and settlements. EOS will keep you occupied in the present with deciding the future.

THE ADVANCED OCP ART STUDIO  FIREBIRD SOFTWARE C64/128, ST

Most art programs are fairly simplistic in their commands, graphics and detail. However, this recent release from Firebird puts most other graphics programs to shame. With two manuals, two disks and a multitude of options in your hands, you can draw or create almost anything that your mind can formulate. All commands are chosen from menus, and the program can be used with joystick, keyboard, mouse or Koala Pad.

The two disks that come with The OCP Art Studio are almost like two different programs. One contains The OCP Art Studio and the other contains The Advanced OCP Art Studio. The difference lies in the features that each contains. The OCP Art Studio is primarily for basic drawings, whereas The Advanced OCP Art Studio allows the use of multiple colors and a whole new set of options to accommodate these colors.

The best way to show the intense power in the package is to describe the features available. The OCP Art Studio disk is run completely by windows, icons and pull-down menus. The pictures can be rotated, cut, stretched and transformed into any shape desired. There are three levels of magnification, 16 pens, 16 user-definable brushes and 8 random sprays. Text can be entered, and many geometric shapes can instantly be drawn. The program even includes an undo option to eliminate the last command.

The Advanced OCP Art Studio offers many options for multiple colors, including the ability to use 48 shades of gray-scale. The user can select areas to cut and paste, eliminating certain colors and including others. The main point of The Advanced OCP Art Studio disk is to be able to have full creative control over your picture by drawing in more than one color at the same time. The program succeeds in this goal and the package as a whole works well in translating the ideas in your head to a printer.

THE OFFICIAL AMERICA'S CUP SAILING SIMULATION  ELECTRONIC ARTS C64/128

With the popularity of the America's Cup race last January came a lot of media coverage and attention. Fortunately for the computer gamer, the race received all this hype, because this new simulation from Electronic Arts takes all the elements that make the race so popular and puts them onto one disk.

The exellence with which America's Cup presents itself can be seen in the size and content of the manual alone, without even booting the disk. The first part includes a complete guide to playing the computer game. The other half of the manual consists of a discussion of yachts, a glossary of nautical terms, the history of the America's Cup races and a synopsis of the 1987 race. All of this information should be enough for you to begin to play the game.

America's Cup duplicates the real course exactly. From the buoys to the committee boats, everything in the real race is included. You have to be very careful in sailing the course because variables have been built into the game, such as mechanical failures, crew failures and constantly changing wind, weather and water conditions.

America's Cup should keep the avid yachting/computer game enthusiast busy for a while. If the game does not prepare you for the real race, at the very leat you will understand the famous race and its history more. So go out and pick up America's Cup and begin to learn that famous 24.3-mile course.

SARACEN *
DATASOFT C64/128, AP, AT

In the Middle Ages, during the Crusades, Christian adventurers travelled to the Holy Land to drive out the infidel Saracens. In Saracen, you are one of these adventurers who has stumbled upon a huge Saracen fortress. You must make your way through this fortress of walls to the center in order to destroy the Saracen Chief.

The hard part of the game is that you are armed only with a bow and arrows. You must shoot guards and gather more arrows throughout the walled mazes of the fortress. There are a few things that you have to watch out for in the fortress that make the game a challenge. Guards and cannonballs will kill your character, so shoot them quickly. Also, do not run into any bombs. They will explode when you touch them.

Ultimately, you should be looking for keys, arrows and grenades. Keys will open the locked doors and arrows will be used to open magic doors and destroy enemies. The grenades that you find are reserved for the Saracen Chief. By saving as many of these items as possible, you should have no problem in meeting your goal in this graphic adventure.

AGE OF ADVENTURE
ELECTRONIC ARTS C64/128, AT, AP

Age of Adventure is a collection of two software classics on a single disk in the Software Classics series from Electronic Arts. Ali Baba and the Forty Theives and The Return of Heracles both include high-resolution graphics, the ability to create a band of characters, random generation of events and interesting sound effects and music.

In Ali Baba, you must wander through 62 rooms to find a trapped princess and many treasures. In the adventure, there are 110 different underworld monsters that you can encounter, so plan strategy well and fight hard.

The Return of Heracles pits you against Zeus in finishing the 12 deadly tasks. Use your mind and prepare to travel to 61 places, including Mt. Olympus and Troy. In the end, with all the tasks completed, the taste of victory will make all your efforts worthwhile.

On the Scene . . . Entertainment tidbits

By MARYJO YANNACONE

As we enter into the Indian summer month of October, the television industry is putting itself into high gear for a new fall season. From the looks of things, though, few new shows will enter onto the scene in the following weeks. As usual, the three major networks have flooded their schedules with private detective series, as well as the standard law and order/cops and robbers show.

The latest trend is the family-oriented situation comedy program, in which sarcastic children deal with adults who serve as parents, uncles, cousins, etc. For the most part, however, this fall's viewing offers a wide variety of programs, with something of interest to just about everyone.

Each network seems to have a theme, and ABC's theme is by far the least appealing. Aside from a very few shows, the majority of programs on this station are truly ludicrous. There are the new programs, eight in all, which do not seem to offer much hope for their own survival. The best and brightest ABC has to offer includes one variety show, four hero-oriented dramas/slapsticks, two light-hearted (and light-minded) sitcoms and one welcome surprise.

That surprise is the hour-long comedy/drama "Thirtysomething," a story about a young couple's dealing with mid-life, each other and a new baby. Set to air on Tuesdays at 10 p.m., "Thirtysomething" should be off to a good start by closing out the blockbuster lineup of "Who's the Boss," "Growing Pains" and "Moonlighting."

As for the remainder of ABC's schedule, there is not an abundance of good news. Sundays and Mondays send us pseudo-adventure and weak plots with "Spenser: For Hire" and "MacGyver," while Wednesdays and Saturdays are smothered in the soap operas "Dynasty" and "Hotel."

Thursdays and Fridays are the typical throw away nights for ABC, offering a string of inane sitcoms. ("The Charmings" for instance, tells the tale of a storybook family that comes to live in a quiet suburb.) The exception for Friday night is the international program "20/20," which will always shine as one of ABC's few true accomplishments of the '80s.

By far the most redundant network in television this fall is CBS, which has scheduled more dramas than ABC and NBC combined. Of 10 new shows, eight are dramas dealing with some branch of the law, while just two sitcoms managed to squeeze past the chairman of the board.

The only one of the CBS dramas sure to at least make a dent in the Nielsen's is "Tour of Duty," a series dealing with life after the Vietnam War for its many victims. Of the two sitcoms, my best bet would be the family-oriented "Everything's Relative," primarily because it falls on Monday nights between "Kate and Allie" and Newhart," both of which are highly successful, not only in ratings, but also in quality.

Other than the previously mentioned shows, only two series from last year offer any consolation to this viewer, and they finish up the Monday night lineup. Both "Designing Women" and "Cagney and Lacey" are first-rate programs, perhaps the only ones of their kind on the CBS network.

Clearly, the most successful network last season was NBC as evidenced by the fact that only four new shows are premiering this fall. Among these are two sitcoms, one drama and one adventure series, the best-known being the "Cosby Show" spinoff about Lisa Bonet's life at college entitled "A Different World." Also promising is "A Year in the Life," airing on Wednesdays at 9 p.m. Preceding "St. Elsewhere," this series may turn out to be a success primarily because of the human aspect of the show.

NBC should have no problems with the Nielsens this season, at least not while "Family Ties," "The Cosby Show," "Cheers," "Night Court" and "L.A. Law," as well as critically acclaimed "Golden Girls" are being broadcast.

In conclusion, the pickings are wide in style and slim in quality, though there are a few shinning stars on each network. This is not all that bad.

The new fall television season is underway

By ROBERT DUGGAN

As we move deeper into the new fall television season, more and more new programs are emerging as the three major networks begin to finally kick their fall lineups into full gear. Here are views of some of the latest new shows to hit the tube:

"Full House (ABC, Fridays 8-8:30 p.m.) Bog Saget plays a sportscaster who enlists two friends, played by John Stamos and David Coulier, to help raise his three daughters after his wife's death.

Cheap sight gags (which consist mainly on the torturing of the youngest girl), poor dialogue, and Coulier's pathetic impressions make this a poor show for viewers and a living hell for the genuinely talented Saget.

"Hooperman" (ABC, Wednesdays 9-9:30 p.m.) The creators of "L.A. Law," Steven Bochco and Terry Fisher, present John Ritter is Harry Hooperman. Hooperman is a hip San Francisco detective who has inherited a run-down apartment building.

Ritter is perfectly suited for the relaxed, natural comedy style the creators have brought to the show, but he falters considerably in the dramatic scenes. "Hooperman," however, looks like the best new show this season by far, even when taking Ritter's dramatic lackings into consideration.

"The 'Slap' Maxwell Story" (ABC, Wednesdays 9:30-10 p.m.) Dabney ("Buffalo Bill") Coleman stars as "Slap" Maxwell, a disillusioned sports writer for a small newspaper in the Southwest. Coleman is great as the highly opinionated, cliche-spewing "Slapper."

The show features dialogue teeming with great lines presented in machine gun fashion. Don't laugh during the show or you will miss most of the jokes. This show is second only to "Hooperman" in the lineup of new fall shows.

"I Married Dora" (ABC, Fridays 8:30-9 p.m.) A widower with two children (played by Daniel Hugh-Kelly) marries his Latin housekeeper (played by Elizabeth Pena) to keep her from being deported.

Pena is pretty good as the tactless housekeeper who is forever getting into problems. Kelly and the two kids play little more than stock sit-com family characters.

"Tour of Duty" (CBS, Thursdays 8-9 p.m.) This is the most ambitious of the new shows, trying to bring the growing wave of Vietnam awareness to the small screen. "Tour of Duty" follows the exploits of a platoon as they try to survive the year that makes up their tour of duty.

Sgt. Zeke Anderson, played by Terence Knox, is the main character. He is the super-soldier/survivor who will be the lone constant in the show as the rest of the characters are introduced and die. This show comes off as a sterilized "Platoon" because of television's violence and profanity standards but it is a noble attempt nonetheless.

"A Different World" (NBC, Thursdays 8:30-9 p.m.) Bill Cosby tries to bring his Midas touch to this poor vehicle for Lisa Bonet. Denise Huxtable goes off to college for her sophomore year and encounters the "different world" that is the land of college dorms. Instead of presenting an accurate picture of what dorm life is in reality, this show is merely another picture-perfect snapshot of a sit-com.

New term and new music create confusion

By JOE McGOWAN

What is generally thought of as "New Age" music is the prepackaged background music directed toward the yuppie market. Most of this music is, though melodious, exceedingly tedious. But the term "New Age" has suffered prodigious misuse by music critics, for it really covers a spectrum of music that is remarkably broad.

The Windham Hill label has, since its inception, been associated with the term "New Age." Although some might scoff at the label "New Age" as cryptically signifying "neo-liberal" or "neo-hippie," the term simply denotes an attempt to break away from the "music for money" scene of the big business record industry.

Windham Hill, started by guitarist Will Ackerman some years ago (He is now its chief executive officer), is a community of musicians who earn their living from record sales and the collective shows put on by this family of musicians. The sole aim of the company was, and still is, to make available the highest quality music regardless of its marketability.

Windham Hill has been at the forefront in promoting "New Age" music and, not surprisingly, many of this genre's best talents are signed to the label. Other record labels have tried to enter this market with their offerings, including the Life Style label and Living Music, Inc., the releases of which are, however, distributed by Windham Hill.

The only way to describe just what "New Age" music is, is to put forward what it is not, to set up some sort of boundaries for a working definition.

NEO-PSYCHEDELIA

Neo-psychedelia, the so-called "revival" in the "acid" or "psychedelic" rock of the '70s began in England, some would say, with the formation of the Sisters of Mercy. Excepting Uli Jon Roth's Electric Sun project, most of the groups at times associated with this movement were only minimally influenced by psychedelic rock. Groups often attached to this label include The Damned, The Cult, The Mission U.K. (an outfit formed from the now defunct Sisters of Mercy), The Cure and The Cocteau Twins.

ART ROCK

Although a term now rarely used, art rock was once years ago applied to virtually any group that produced songs whose length was in excess of five minutes. The "Art Rock" movement was really the early years of Progressive Rock and featured such acts as Atomic Rooster (with Carl Palmer on drums), The Crazy World of Arthur Brown, Soft Machine, Colisseum I and II and The Nice (which featured a young Keith Emerson).

PROGRESSIVE ROCK

The progressive rock period occurred during the heyday of Yes, Genesis, U.K., ELP, Jethro Tull and King Crimson and, like art rock, was a form of rock music tempered by the influence of classical music.

PROGRESSIVE ROCK'S NEW WAVE

Begun in 1982 by Marillion, hailed as the "new Genesis," progressive rock's new wave movement enjoyed roughly three billiant years with such acts as IQ, Pendragon, Pallas, Twelfth Night and Daga Band. This "new wave" came about when the kids who had grown up as fanatical followers of Yes, Genesis and ELP formed bands of their own.

ELECTRONIC MUSIC

The electronic music field of the rock music world is often lumped in the "New Age" category since many "New Age" artists have been influenced by the works of such pioneering electronic musicians as Vangelis, Isao Tomita, Tangerine Dream, Synergy and William Carlos.

ELECTRIC JAZZ

Windham Hill is often thought of as a jazz label since many record shops place their releases in this section, but there is nevertheless a slight, but noticeable distinction between certain "New Age" artists and a Chick Corea or an Al Di Meola.

When the category of "folk music" is brought up, classification of what is "New Age" is made enormously difficult. Much of "New Age" music is at least based upon "traditional" or "folk" musical styles and compositions. Examples of this are the solo piano rendition of "Greensleeves" by Liz Story (a pianist formerly with Windham Hill), "St. Basil's Hymn" by Malcolm Dalglish (a reworking, on solo hammer dulcimer, of a traditional song sung by Greek school children at the New Year), and "Moondance" by Puck Fair (a rendition of the Van Morrison song on panpipes, bodhran and other Celtic instruments).

Each of these beautiful pieces in some way borrows from either traditional melodies or instruments — and in that way "New Age" is a form of folk music. But what makes each of these "New Age" is the form of presentation — each has in some way been reinterpreted for a new appreciation of older music values.

While a great deal of "New Age" music has to do with folk influences, much draws on other sources for inspiration, such as the electronic instruments that often figure prominently in "New Age" recordings.

The rest of "New Age" music covers such a broad field of musical styles and influences that only a brief, selective and annotated discography can do justice:

Philip Aaberg
High Plains
Windham Hill (1985)
(a solo piano album)

William Ackerman
Windham Hill
(The founder of Windham Hill has several acoustic guitar albums including Turtle's Navel, It Takes A Year, Childhood and Memory, Passage and Past Light.)

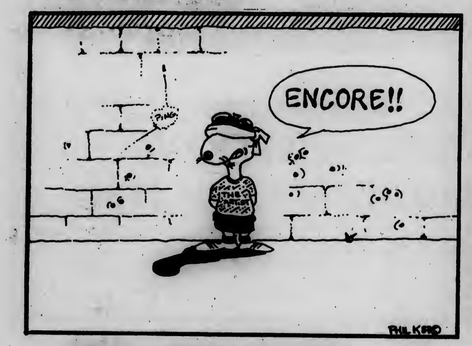
The Music of Cosmos
RCA (1981)
(This is the soundtrack to Carl Sagan's PBS series "Cosmos" and features electronic works by Vangelis, Isao Tomita and Synergy.)

Scott Cossu
She Describes Infinity
Windham Hill (1987)
(an album of primarily electric guitar and acoustic and electronic keyboards featuring Carribean, African and Latin influences)

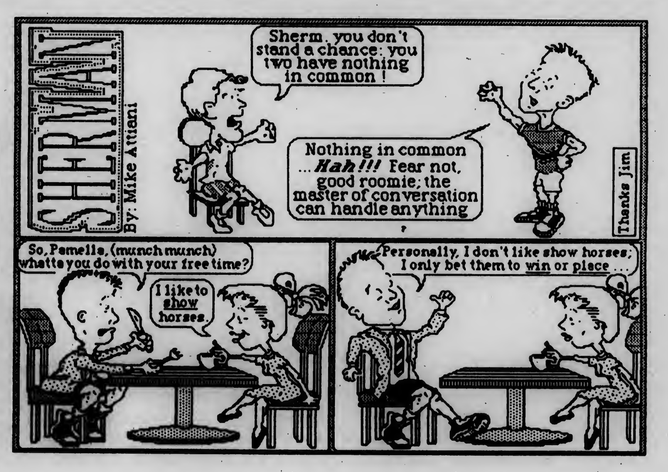
Scott Cossu and Eugene Friesen
Reunion
Windham Hill (1986)
(a more classically influenced album from Cossu with the help of cellist Eugene Friesen)

Malcolm Dalglish
Jogging the Memory
Windham Hill (1985)
(features mostly traditional pieces on solo hammer dulcimer)

Mark Egan
Mosaic
Hip Pocket Records (1985)
(instrumental pieces centered around Egan's electric bass)



Eugene Friesen
New Friend
Living Music (1986)
(more classically influenced material from cellist Friesen)



Paul Halley
Pianosong
Living Music (1986)
(solo piano and organ compositions by Halley, who is the organist and choirmaster of New York's Cathedral of St. John the Divine)

New band claws its way to top

By DINA INNELLA

Keep Your Distance
Curiosity Killed the Cat
Mercury
½

If you are interested in following newly rising bands, consider following Curiosity Killed the Cat. Curiosity Killed the Cat is one of England's hottest bands. England has enjoyed their talent for a few years; finally they have been introduced to America. Curiosity Killed the Cat's debut album Keep Your Distance is an excellent start.

Members of the band include singer Ben Volpeliere-Pierrot, 22, drummer Miguel Drummond, 23, bassist Nick Thorpe, 22, and guitarist Julian Brookhouse, 24. They are all young, gorgeous and British. Their notoriety in England led to four sold-out shows in London and swarms of young girls fainting at the sight of members of the band.

But cuteness does not mean everything. Their looks did not get them where they are today. In May, Keep Your Distance debuted at No. 1 in England. Curiosity Killed the Cat has been on the charts in England ever since. Just released in America, the record will have to work its way up the charts. Keep Your Distance debuted low here, though it was on the Top 50 album chart.

"Misfits," the first track on the album was previously released as a 12-inch single. It is a bright, danceable tune about those who do not fit into the symmetry of the world, with lyrics like: "Crazy sheep noir the odd one out/ Crazy freak let them know what your all about." The video tor the single is getting a lot of airplay on MTV. The "Misfits" video was directed by the late Andy Warhol, in which he makes an appearance.

"Down to Earth," a big hit in England, is a song about bringing someone who is living in a fantasy world to reality. "Curiosity Killed the Cat," the song that the band named themselves after, is a light, thrilling song. It is about living an exciting life and winding it down.

Another dance track, "Ordinary Day," was also a chart topper in England. It is about wanting to stop time and keeping life always the same. "Ordinary Day" is an upbeat tune with good lyrics.

Volpeliere-Pierrot's singing is crisp, clear and identifiable. Their lyrics are straightforward and understandable. The songs hit home, and one can identify with them.

There is a good mixture of both dance tracks and ballads, although the dance tracks are prominent throughout. The songs on Keep Your Distance do have a sameness about them and there is a need for diversification, but that will come with time. Curiosity Killed the Cat does not keep all of their best songs, nor their worst, on one side of the album, which makes for easy listening. The album is 36 minutes long with a total of nine songs, that leaves you wanting more.

For a first effort, Curiosity did a first-rate job. Some debut albums are not produced well, but Curiosity strove to attain the best producers possible. For example, Sting's producer Pete Smith, and Simply Red's Stewart Levine, were both employed.

Curiosity Killed the Cat are new to America and will be treated as such. They have been together as a band since 1984, playing London's hottest clubs. Now that they are here, let them stay. I am anxiously awaiting their next album.

Aerosmith, the bad boys of Boston, return to their old guitar-screaming style with the release of their new album, Permanent Vacation. The album is Aerosmith's second studio release since the return of guitarist/songwriter Joe Perry, who had left because of differences with singer Steven Tyler.

The band seems to have found its unity once again, a quality lacking on the last album, Done With Mirrors. With Perry and Tyler pulling out all the stops, Permanent Vacation proves to be classic Aerosmith.

The album opens with Perry's guitar wailing away, leading into an ear-piercing Tyler scream. "Heart's Done Time" continues to rock solidly as Joey Kramer begins to pound away on the drums, providing the backbone of the music. Tyler's vocals are strong and he sounds better than ever.

"Magic Touch" keeps up with the fast pace set by "Heart's Done Time" and once again Perry showcases his talents with some amazing guitar work and a dazzling solo.

"Rag Doll" marks the return of the song-writing style of "Walk This Way" and "Sweet Emotion." Although the song is not as rapid-fire as most of the tracks on the first side, "Rag Doll" has a hard-edged sound with a high level of energy.

The album kicks in again with "Simoriah," another scorcher with a heavy metal beat. Tyler and Perry harmonize to make the song one of the album's highlights.

At this point on the album, one becomes increasingly aware of the obsession with sex in the lyrics. There are sexual connotations in just about every song. This becomes crystal clear in songs such as "Dude (Looks Like A Lady)" and "Girls Keeps Coming Apart."

"Dude (Looks Like A Lady)," the album's first single, is about a transvestite, and is slightly different from the guitar-based sound of the album. However, "Dude" rocks in its own style, which should land radio airplay and attract the attention of MTV.

"St. John" maintains the Aerosmith tradition of having one song on every album that makes absolutely no sense. Somehow, telling a saint to "be cool" does not constitute quality song-writing. The song has a Stray Cats beat that makes it interesting.

Side Two opens with a rhythm and blues tune called "Hangman Jury," with lyrics about a man who shoots his wife because she complains too much. This song is reminiscent of Aerosmith's version of "Train Kept A Rollin' " on Get Your Wings.

The record also contains a "Dream On" style ballad called "Angel." Well-written and packing a hard, steady beat, "Angel" displays the talents of the entire band. It is definitely one of the best tracks on the album.

Perry and Tyler then rip into the title track, "Permanent Vacation," another hard-rocking tune. Tyler sings about needing to get away from it all and takes an anti-drug, pro-sex approach.

Permanent Vacation ends with a cover of the Beatles' "I'm Down," followed by a Pink Floyd style instrumental. Titled "The Movie," the instrumental displays some of Perry's finest work to date.

Aerosmith is as strong as ever and alive with energy. Although the lyrics are vulgar at times, Permanent Vacation is an excellent, hard-rocking album. Aerosmith has proven that they still have what it takes to bring the house down. This record is meant to be played loud, be prepared for a glass or two to shatter when you listen to Permanent Vacation.

Aerosmith, the bad boys of Boston, have found unity in their latest album, Permanent Vacation.

Rejuvenated Dead return to Philadelphia

By TIM DANIELS

The Grateful Dead besieged the Spectrum for three sold-out shows last week. The Dead came to town after a historic week in New York City, in which they accepted their first platinum record for In the Dark and, after five sold-out concerts, Madison Square Garden's Gold Ticket Award for the sale of 100,000 tickets. The most loyal of rock fans were rewarded for their support with top-rated performances.

The band has played with a tightness that has not been seen in years. Since lead guitarist Jerry Garcia's health has improved, he has been uncharacteristically animated, acknowledging the crowd with raised fists.

Garcia's vocals rang loud and clear, even if his range has deteriorated. His playing has been precise and moving. Rhythm guitarist Bob Weir has taken much of the pressure off Garcia with his stand-out vocals and emotional leadership.

The first set Sept. 22, consisted mainly of the Dead's rhythm and blues selections. "Little Red Rooster" featured excellent solos by keyboardist Brent Mydland, Garcia and Weir. Garcia indicated that he was particularly into the show, singing "When Push Comes to Shove" and "Ramble On Rose."

The opening of the second set delivered an extra-special treat as Spencer Davis led the band into "Gimme Some Lovin'," with Brent's boogie on the piano. The multi-faceted "Terrapin Station" ascended to its tremendous summit.

Bill Kreutzmann and Mickey Hart's nightly drum set followed with an improvisational ambush. Phil Lesh was "Truckin' " with especially good bass playing. Garcia guided the group through the mournful "Stella Blue." A great version of "Sugar Magnolia" set the tone for what would blossom for the Sept. 23 show.

The Dead unleashed a splendid show on Sept. 23. Settled into the Philadelphia scene, they pulled out "Franklin's Tower" and "Friend of the Devil." Words cannot do justice to the second set. The crowd really got to move to "Bertha." "Playing in the Band," "Mr. Fantasy" and "Uncle John's Band" were simply hypnotic.

"I Need a Miracle" had everyone singing as the spotlights panned into the audience. A crowd favorite, "Good Lovin'," contained "La Bamba," with Garcia vocalizing. "U.S. Blues" was a well-received encore.

The Dead had everyone dancing from the start of the Sept. 24 show with "Touch Of Grey." Lesh rewarded the great Philadelphia following with a "Box Of Rain," that was needed to douse the "Fire on the Mountain."

Additionally, from the new album, Bob sent the audience to "Hell in a Bucket," but they did enjoy the ride. He also piloted the band into "Throwing Stones," which evolved, with the help of the clapping crowd, into the classic drumbeat of Kreutzmen and Hart to Buddy Holly's "Not Fade Away." Garcia closed out their visit singing with Bob Dylan's emotional power, "Knocking on Heaven's Door."

The three great Spectrum shows were a spectacular end to the East Coast fall tour, which included extended stops at Providence, R.I., Landover, Md., and New York, N.Y. Rock's most enthusiastic fans urged the Dead on to possibly their best shows ever. The Grateful Dead, who have reached the pinnacle of commercial success, have reaffirmed that they are the premier touring band of all time.

The inexhaustible Grateful Dead brought their popular show to the Spectrum on Sept. 22, 23 and 24, performing old songs, as well as tunes from their new release, In The Dark.

TV Shows

Cardboard characters surround the overtasked Bonet. This show is little more than a showcase of her many lackings. Expect the Cosby touch to rake in the ratings but do not believe the numbers reflect anything resembling quality.

"Beauty and the Beast" (CBS, Fridays 8-9 p.m.) Linda Hamilton stars in this modernized fairy tale as a corporate lawyer whois viciously attacked. Vincent, the beast, (played by Ron Perlman) finds her and takes her to his underground lair beneath the subway system of Manhattan. He saves her life and a bond is formed.

This show struck me as being on the sappy side, trying to play up the heart of gold behind the face of the beast to a sickly sweet degree. The total absence of humor added to the stifling seriousness of the show makes this an unbelievably boring entry.

Before you choose a long distance service, take a close look.

You may be thinking about choosing one of the newer carriers over AT&T in order to save money.

Think again.

Since January 1987, AT&T's rates have dropped more than 15% for direct-dialed out-of-state calls. So they're lower than you probably realize. For information on specific rates, you can call us at 1 800 222-0300.

And AT&T offers clear long distance connections, operator assistance, 24-hour customer service, and immediate credit for wrong numbers. Plus, you can use AT&T to call from anywhere to anywhere, all over the United States and to over 250 countries.

You might be surprised at how good a value AT&T really is. So before you choose a long distance company, pick up the phone.

Babylon and On disappoints old Squeeze fans

By THERESA JONES

Babylon and On, the latest album from the U.K. band Squeeze, has its own sound, that may disappoint some old Squeeze fans. The album, however, does testify to the talents of band vocalists and lyricists; Chris Difford and Glenn Tilbrook. The album is far from being a failure, though, because it has a few songs that are good for dancing or simply enjoying the beat.

Compared to early Squeeze hits such as "Bang Bang" and "Slap and Tickle," Babylon and On carries a much mellower tone. The mellow tone of the album in and of itself is not necessarily a drawback, except that there is not the dynamism or variety found on ArgyBargy, and there are not likely to be as many hit singles as there were from Cool for Cats.

"Hourglass," the lead song on side one, was recently released as a single. One may be surprised at the opening of this song, which features Tilbrook on horns, somewhat of a different sound for the band, but certainly a positive development. "Hourglass" maintains a good steady beat, and should prove to be a successful single, though it may be the only one.

"Footprints" follows the lead, and is rather mellow but catchy nonetheless. Unfortunately, the songs following "Footprints" do not fill the shoes — so to speak — of the two previous songs.

"Tough Love" features an accordion which conjures up visions of a Polish wedding party waltzing its way through beer and sausage. The lyrics, however, are of a much less festive nature — the topic is a devoted lover dealing with physical abuse.

Babylon and On is somewhat of a development album for Squeeze. Compared to early albums, there is a noticeable tendency toward the mellow.

"The Prisoner" is lyrically an appropriate follow-up to "Tough Love," as our heroine decides she wants more from life than her "general" can give. "She reads the stars he reads the sun/no wonder his I.Q. is below 21." You may find your feet tapping along to the beat of this tune as well.

"In Today's Room" and "853-5937" become a bit mellower again and round out the first sid. By this point, one may have heard enough to decide how the new sound of Squeeze compares with old favorites such as "Goodbye Girl" and "Take Me I'm Yours." I think the oldies might win.

The opener on side two creates hope for something different, but quickly falls into the album's general pattern of play. Luckily "Striking Matches" offers a reprieve. While it is very typical Squeeze, it is of the old Squeeze, and therefore a welcome regression. Difford has his chance at the lead vocal, performing superbly with help from other band members and "mob vocals" in a rather soulful piece.

"Cigarette of a single man," "Who are you?" and "Waiting game" continue the stream of Babylon and On, bringing us finally to "Some Americans," which may be the most interesting of the 12 selections. If my first impression of the lyrics is anywhere near what Difford and Tilbrook are getting at, it is quite a statement, presented in one of the album's best tunes.

While musically Babylon and On may not be as noteworthy as its predecessors, at least Difford and Tilbrook have lyrically carried on the tradition. They paint vivid pictures as they sing, and although it may seem a bit trite at first, it is really quite expressive. The other band members, Julian Holland, Gilson Lavis, Keith Wilson and Andy Metcalfe consistently — and perhaps a bit too much — contribute their musical talents and back-up vocals, which are particularly good in "In today's room."

Babylon and On is somewhat of a development album for Squeeze. Compared to early albums, there is a noticeable tendency toward the mellow. The new sound gets to be a bit old after 12 songs. Babylon and On does have its good selections, my favorites being "Striking Matches," "Who are you," and "Some Americans," but for the true Squeeze fanatic, these few among the many may not be enough to merit this album a position among the great original hit of Squeeze.

Canadian power trio disappoints eager fans

By ANDREW MATHIS

Hold Your Fire
Rush
Mercury
★★½

Hold Your Fire, the latest release from Rush, the Canadian power trio, is musically characteristic of the material that they have been releasing since 1983's Signals. In other words, it is boring, bloated with keyboards, and a distinct underestimation of this band's true talents.

Hold Your Fire is typical third-stage Rush music. The first stage was their pseudo-heavy metal stage with albums like Caress of Steel and 2112. The second stage, which was highly progressive and argued by many as the best stage, began with 1977's A Farewell to Kings and continued up until their second live effort, Exit . . . Stage Left. Since then, Rush's music has entered the third stage of a seemingly high-tech sound, of which Hold Your Fire is a prime example.

While Hold Your Fire is definitely not a great album by any stretch of the imagination, it does have some good points, specifically the musicianship.

While Hold Your Fire is definitely not a great album by any stretch of the imagination, it does have some good points, specifically the musicianship. Bassist Geddy Lee and drummer Neil Peart, are considered to be today's masters of their respective instruments. This is obvious in songs like "Prime Mover," which is a typically boring Rush song saved by great bass fills. "Lock and Key," which is loaded with the percussions that has made Peart so widely respected.

However, lost in this barrage of musicianship is guitarist Alex Lifeson, who judging upon earlier Rush efforts, is clearly one of the most underrated guitarists of our day. The gross overusage of keyboards on Hold Your Fire leaves Lifeson in the dust.

There are minimal solos and very little acoustic guitar-playing, of which Lifeson is also a master. Lifeson's only half-decent exposure on Hold Your Fire is "Turn The Page," which features a good acoustic introduction by Lifeson, but is otherwise just another typical Rush effort.

Still, there are one or two saving graces on Hold Your Fire. "Force Ten," which opens the album, is a good tune all around, with a hard-driving beat and some decent lyrics supplied by percussionist Peart. Good lyrics are also provided in "Tai Shan," an ode to Eastern lands, reminiscent of Rush's progressive near-masterpiece "Xanadu," from A Farewell to Kings.

Unfortunately, the rest of the album's lyrics are difficult to understand, as Peart's wording usually is. Peart's days of lyric-writing are clearly slipping away.

Rush is a prime example of a band whose able musicians are not exploited well enough by the band's material. It might be dismissed as a case of "too many cooks spoiling the broth," if it were not for Rush's excellent earlier effort.

Rush should realize that progressive music is an idea whose time is not passed and return to the caliber of their former work or else they themselves shall become an idea that has come and gone.

Rush (l.-r., Alex Lifeson, Geddy Lee, Neil Peart) recently released their new album, Hold Your Fire, which continues in the style of their last few albums.

Misery

ous collection of novels. He goes from being an independent, strong-willed man to a little child, afraid of being disciplined.

Beside being psychotic, Wilkes had a very childish sense of right and wrong. Because of this, Sheldon ends up being tortured and abused many times for no apparent reason. The reader never knows when or how Wilkes will fly off the handle and become a destructive maniac. For this reason, Misery is a superior novel and is filled with nail-biting, suspenseful moments.

When Sheldon finally decides to fight back and break Wilkes' reign of terror, the novel turns into a private battle between the two. Because of King's writing skills, the winner of this confrontation is in doubt until the very end.

Once again, King thrills his audience with a suspense-filled, psychological masterpiece. Misery is sure to keep you on the edge of your seat until the last page is turned. Many horror novels are very predictable, but Misery is a rarity in the journalistic world; it is both suspenseful and entertaining.

Women's soccer wins two

By JOHN FAY

After recovering from a heartbreaking loss suffered at the hands of the Adelphi Panthers last Saturday, the Villanova women's soccer team rebounded to go undefeated in three games this past week. With two victories and one tie, the squad's record currently stands at 3-1-2.

On Sept. 24 the Wildcats traveled to La Salle and posted an impressive 5-0 shutout. Leading the way were two sophomores, Jeannine McLees, who registered a hat trick, and Laura Marino, who tallied two goals.

From the opening faceoff, Villanova totally dominated, showing not only more talent than their overmatched opponents, but more spirit as well. The final number of shots on goal clearly depicts this fact, with the 'Cats posting 23 shots while La Salle could manage only three.

Next the team traveled south to play a newly-formed program at the University of North Carolina (Ashville). The women of Villanova absolutely overwhelmed their hosts in cruising to a 10-0 blowout.

Villanova Head Coach Don Paxon commented on Carolina's inexperienced squad, saying, "Ashville is in only its second year of existence, so they were obviously very young.

"Furthermore, they had only one substitute because of a rash of injuries. Because of these two factors, we expected to win, and therefore played many nonstarters so we could rest our regulars for the Radford contest."

The following day, the 'Cats concluded their three-game road trip in what Paxon dubbed "a good effort" that ended in a brutal 1-1 tie at Radford. The extremely rough contest, which saw a total of 46 fouls called, went into two overtimes before concluding in a deadlock.

Even before play began, Paxon knew the game would be extremely hard fought.

"Radford has a good club that had been mentioned in many preseason rankings. Also, they were coming off a successful Southern campaign in which they defeated a host of talented teams."

From that point on, both sides struggled to capture the lead, mostly because of the outstanding defensive efforts at both ends of the field. Paxon was especially pleased with the play of the senior stopper Jodi Ford. "Jodi really controlled a very good forward. In fact the person whom Jodi has guarded has not scored all year."

Paxon also had nothing but praise for the senior goalie Lynn Maltale. "Against Radford, we stayed with our bread and butter simply because Lynn always plays well against good squads."

As the second half transpired, Radford definitely dictated the tempo and had many more scoring opportunities, but did not score. Paxon explained, "I think we were a little intimidated during the second half."

Junior captain Ann Beirne provided just the right medicine. Paxon said, "As we walked off the field at the end of the second half, she [Beirne] started yelling that they had to turn things around. It really picked up the team."

The two extra periods proved to be just as exciting as regulation play, with neither team willing to budge an inch. Finally, as the whistle sounded ending the game, the 'Cats knew they could hold their heads high.

Sophomores standout, Laura Marino, netted two goals for the women's soccer team in a 5-0 trouncing of the Adelphi Panthers.

Men's soccer endures rough going

By MICHAEL GOLDSTEIN

The Villanova men's soccer team took to the road last week, playing Eastern College on Sept. 23, followed by Philadelphia Textile on Sept. 26.

Midfielder Joe Koziol opened the game against Eastern with a goal at 37:46 of the first half on an assist by forward John Bond. The Wildcat's lead was erased almost instantly when Eastern's George Varoutsos evened the score at 1 less than a minute later on a direct kick through the wall of Villanova's defense.

The game remained tied through halftime, and it was not until late in the second half that sophomore Joe Reteneller scored the winning goal on a penalty kick for the Wildcats. Villanova outshot their opponents 11-6 and goalie Ron Klos had four saves for the game.

Coach Chris Jones was pleased with the win, saying, "It was our third game in five days." The 2-1 victory boosted the team's record to 4-3 overall while having no affect on their Big East record of 1-1.

In their next game, the Wildcats met a strong Philadelphia Textile team which provided a highly competitive match. The Wildcats again drew first blood when midfielder Mike Deegan scored a goal 14:20 into the game, assisted by Bond. They held control during most of the game, which was basically a defensive struggle, until David Banks tied the game on a header with less than 10 minutes remaining in regulation.

The game was deadlocked at 1 when regulation time ended, but Textile's Steve Starcevich ended the game with a goal, handing Villanova a 2-1 loss in double overtime.

The defense did a good job of keeping Textile off the scoreboard most of the game, thanks to Klos' nine saves on goal. The Wildcats dropped to 4-4 overall and to 1-2 in the Soccer 7 conference.

Jones had a positive attitude about the game, however, stating, "It shows we're a competitive team."

The Wildcats play at home on Oct. 2 against Rutgers, and again on Oct. 6 against Pennsylvania.

Football and Tailgating in '87

. . . this is only the beginning

Villanova Football

had a little bit off the ball, but not that much.

The Lakers took full advantage of the Wildcat turnover, taking just two plays to drive 92 yards for a score. After a Rostek run of 14 yards, the quarterback hooked up with split end Scott Gorring for a 78-yard touchdown pass.

Fortunately, Mercyhurst's extra point attempt missed wide left, and the 'Cats maintained a slim one-point lead, 21-20.

On Villanova's next offensive series, Schulz showed that he too could throw the long ball by tossing a 50-yard bomb to his own split end Robert Brady. Brady, who caught four passes for 72 yards, was in single coverage for one of the few times all day and burned the defensive back for the score.

Kicker Tom Withka added his fourth straight extra point of the game to give the Wildcats a 28-20 halftime lead.

Cornerback Derek McEwen helped put the game out of reach with six minutes left in the third quarter by picking off a Rostek pass and returning it to the Mercyhurst 18-yard line. Three plays later, Villanova's Lombardi rumbled eight yards for a score, giving Villanova a 35-20 lead.

Head Football Coach Andy Talley

Though the Lakers scored as the third quarter came to a close making it 35-26, the Wildcats would not let them get any closer. On the shoulders of their defense and the hard-nosed running of Lombardi, the 'Cats were able to keep their lead in the fourth quarter and run out the clock.

Talley, though not totally satisfied with his team's play, was glad to get the win. "Overall, I'm happy that we won. They're [Mercyhurst] not the caliber of team we are going to play down the line, but they were tough."

Next up for Villanova is Boston University. The Terriers are 1-2 thus far in 1987, but are a legitimate IAA team and should be the toughest opponent Villanova has faced since reinstating its football program three years ago.

'Nova golf places sixth in weekend tourney

By Jim Bowman

Two weeks ago, the Villanova golf team suffered an awful opening round, but recovered to capture seventh in the Franklin and Marshall Invitational. Last weekend the 'Cats traveled to Long Island to compete in the Walter McLaughlin Memorial Tournament.

Deja vu: Once again the young Wildcat linksters faced opening round difficulties, but managed to recover to the tune of a sixth place finish in the 13-team field, hosted by St. John's. Freshman Kevin Rogerson again paced the 'Cats, with rounds of 77 and 74, good for a 151 total and 13th place overall.

"It was very windy the first day (Saturday) and most of the scores were high, but our scores shouldn't have been that high," explained Rogerson. "We played better Sunday, but not well — not as well as we're capable of playing."

Sophomore Alabama transfer Todd Rongaus, competing in his first match as a Wildcat, also carded a second round 74, for a two day total of 155 and second place team finish. Rounding out the scoring for Villanova were Jim Clarke, 156; Chris Capello, 160; and Tony Corbo, 162.

The team's final score of 621 was a distant 36 strokes off the pace of winner and Big East rival St. John's.

Today, Villanova begins competition in the event that highlights their fall schedule: the Big East Championships. Although a better finish last week would have given the 'Cats additional momentum, the prestige of the Big East should inspire the team to improve.

"We'll be able to put these rough outings behind us and get ready. This is the highlight of the season and we're looking forward to it," commented Rogerson.

Navy runs over Wildcats

By KARLA BECKNER

The Villanova University men's cross country team opened a rebuilding year on Sept. 26 in a double-dual meet against the U.S. Naval Academy and the University of Virginia on the Navy golf course in Annapolis, MD. Villanova dropped both ends of the meet, losing to Navy, 15-50, and Virginia, 15-48.

Coach Jack Pyrah is presently concerned with building the team back up after graduation claimed his top four runners from last season. "We have many freshman this year," Pyrah said, "and it takes them awhile to adjust to the longer college distances."

The top Villanova finisher in the Navy-Virginia meet was junior Curt Koehler, who ended the race in 18th place. Koehler completed the five-mile course with a time of 26.20. Freshman John Casey came in close behind Koehler taking 19th in 26.24, while junior Bruce Harris, primarily an 800-meter runner in track, covered the course in 27.10 to take 22nd position.

"For the first meet we showed good promise. The times were fairly good," Pyrah noted. "Both Navy and Virginia, two of the better cross country teams in the east, have two meets behind them, and this was our first outing. We need a little more work before we can compete with some of the stronger teams."

The Wildcats' top two runners this season, Shane Bilodeau, a freshman recruit, and sophomore Jan Friedli, a recruit from Denmark, were sidelined with injuries during the meet. Bilodeau is recovering from stress fractures and Friedli injured his knee early on and has not yet been able to run. Pyrah is hoping to have both of them back running as soon as possible.

"We wanted to use this meet as an experience to get the younger fellows conditioned to the distance," Pyrah added. "By the end of the season we are looking to have a representative team."

The Wildcats next meet will be the Paul Short Invitational on Oct. 10 at Lehigh University in Bethlehem, Pa.

Wildcats run to title

By TERENCE KELLY

The Wildcats women's cross country team romped to its third consecutive National Catholic Cross Country Championship title Sept. 25 in Indiana. The top five Villanova runners combined to score 40 points, well ahead of second place St. Thomas of Minnesota and third place DePaul, which both had 102 points.

The team was led over the Notre Dame golf course by juniors Vicki Huber and Kathy Franey, who took first and second, respectively, for the second week in a row. Huber covered the 5,000-meter course in an excellent time of 17:24, 45 seconds ahead of teammate Franey. Franey finished with a time of 18:09, 20 seconds ahead of the third place finisher from St. Thomas.

The rest of the Villanova team followed their leaders example by having all five scoring runners in under 20th place, and the whole team in under 50th place. The rest of the team was made up of Jen Brekhus, 6th, 18:46; Jenny Rahn, 14th, 19:05; Meg Moisen, 17th, 19:21; Carol Haux, 36th, 19:53; and Elaine Duck, 48th, 20:04.

Coach Marty Stern, although not worried going into the meet, expected it to be closer. "I thought that this meet would be harder to win than it had been the last two years. We had some of our top people out, and I knew Vicki and Kathy would do well. The question in my mind was about some of the other people," he said afterward.

One of those runners he was worried about was Jen Brekhus, a freshman from San Anselmo, Calif. Later Stern said, "All my fears were unfounded. Jenny Brekhus is a legitimate Division I runner, and Jenny Rahn has established herself as a solid and consistent performer."

The team will have a week off between meets now so that they can get ready for their tough schedule ahead.

Stern said of the team, "Right now, it appears our team could be one of the top 15 in the nation, and we're not 100 percent yet."

Pitt deflates 'Cats

By MONICA BYRNE

On Sept. 25, while most Villanovans were making plans to tailgate the next morning and attend the Villanova-Mercyhurst game in the afternoon, others were busy preparing strategies and psyching themselves up for a big game against arch-rival, Pittsburgh.

The women's volleyball team traveled to Pittsburgh for a tournament last weekend, where they encountered a very competitive Indiana State and of course, the Big East challenger, Pittsburgh. Unfortunately, the lady spikers lost both matches, lowering their overall record to 3-4.

On Saturday afternoon, Villanova met Indiana State in what proved to be a very exciting, but frustrating match. The Wildcats gave Indiana a run for its money, but could not sustain a consistent momentum.

The 'Cats attacked in the first game, but lost 15-17. Regrouping, Villanova copped the second game, 15-12, but fell, 14-16, in the third. Down two games to one, the spikers came together once again to win, 18-16, but could not overcome the 2-2 tie, losing 9-15 in the fifth.

The superb play of Helen Hnat and Lori Reiter paced Villanova, but the fighting force of Indiana State could not be overpowered. Hnat had an incredible 30 kills, averaging .448 attempted spikes, and Reiter had an outstanding 28 digs and an all-around solid game.

On Saturday evening, Villanova lost in three straight games, (2-15, 5-15, 1-15) against Pittsburgh. The 'Cats could not regain the energy they had lost earlier in the day, but are hoping to redeem themselves on Oct. 3, when Pittsburgh visits Villanova.

The Wildcats will be on their own turf Oct. 3, hosting Pitt at 1 p.m. and Yale at 6 p.m.

If Villanova plays with the intensity they had against Indiana State, they just may take some people by surprise.

The key to success for the lady spikers is consistency. Once they attain that, all of their abilities and talents will work to their best possible advantage.

Athlete of the Week

This week's Saco East Athlete of the Week is junior cross country runner Vicki Huber.

Huber's time of 17:24 in the National Catholic Cross Country Championships was good enough for a first finish and helped bring Villanova the title.

The victory marked the third consecutive year the Wildcats have won the event.

'Cats top Lakers in home opener

By JOHN G. RICCO

The Villanova Wildcats capped off a perfect afternoon last Saturday by beating the Mercyhurst Lakers, 35-26. As the 11,215 fans who filled Villanova Stadium for the 'Cats home opener looked on, sophomore quarterback Kirk Schulz led the team to their second win in as many games.

Schulz, who completed 20 of 32 passes for 220 yards, three touchdowns and three interceptions, has admittedly had better games, but Villanova's 35 points are still quite impressive.

The Wildcats broke out early when Schulz hit freshman flanker Scott Thompson with a 24-yard scoring strike just three minutes into the game.

Following the ensuing kickoff, on Mercyhurst's first offensive play, cornerback Art Condodina picked off a Laker pass deep in Mercyhurst territory. Villanova could not capitalize, however, and was forced to punt.

The Lakers, sporting a productive wishbone offense, moved the ball effectively this time, marching up the field with a variety of roll-outs, options and short passes. With 4:54 remaining in the first quarter, they knotted the score at 7-7 on a one-yard plunge by fullback Lou Konya.

Brian Rostek, Mercyhurst's strong-armed quarterback, kept Villanova's defense at bay with his ability to either run with the ball or dump it off to one of his backs.

"We watched their films a lot, but the wishbone is tough to defense," commented Condodina. "It was very frustrating."

Villanova Head Football Coach Andy Talley agreed with Condodina saying, "To the credit of Mercyhurst, you don't see a wishbone offense all year and then you face them. We had to make many adjustments in the second half, which helped us play better."

Villanova quickly regained the lead on their next offensive series, driving 65 yards in five plays.

A 36-yard pass play from Schulz to tight end Jim Cashman put the Wildcats at the Laker 10-yard line. On the following play, tailback Ron Sency sprinted the remaining distance virtually untouched into the end zone.

The Villanova offensive line manhandled the smaller Laker players during the drive, and indeed much of the game. They opened numerous holes for Sency and fullbacks Gary Pascoe and Peter Lombardi while giving Schulz plenty of time to throw.

Sency, who carried the ball 18 times for 111 yards, was full of praise for the big men up front. "The offensive line was tremendous. Sometimes I'd go three or four yards before getting hit. If they keep that up, we'll go a long way."

The Wildcats special teams were responsible for Villanova's next score. With under two minutes left in the first quarter, the 'Cats were forced to punt from deep in their own territory.

The Laker return man called for a fair catch of punter Perry Hodge's kick, but fumbled the ball, and junior Darren Fortin pounced on it for the Wildcats at midfield.

Villanova quickly capitalized on this turnover with a two-yard touchdown pass from Schulz to Cashman. The score, which came with 13:20 left in the half, upped the Wildcat lead to 21-7.

Following a nine-yard touchdown run by Mercyhurst's Rostek, which closed the gap to 21-14 midway through the second quarter, the Villanova offense was poised to strike once again. The Wildcats had driven inside the Laker 30-yard line, and looked ready to score their fourth touchdown of the game, when Schulz threw the first of his three interceptions. Instead of taking a 14-point lead, the 'Cats advantage remained at seven.

This series exemplified one of the many times Villanova, not the Laker's defense, stopped a Wildcat drive. In addition to the three interceptions, Villanova lost a fumble and committed 13 penalties for 100 yards. "We stopped ourselves most of the time," said a concerned Talley. "We had 13 penalties, and that's a joke."

Part of the blame for Schulz's three miscues could be assessed to a shoulder strain the quarterback sustained during the game. "I hurt my shoulder on a roll-out, but it's all right," Schulz said. "I

Field hockey tames Hoyas

By AMY C. SPENCER

Sept. 22, 1987 was a landmark day in the history of Villanova field hockey. On that day, after an impressive 4-0-1 start to their season, the team received word that, for the first time, Villanova's field hockey program ranked nationally, placing 18th.

Unfortunately, the day after the ranking, our team suffered an agonizing 2-1 defeat in overtime to Hofstra University, losing their ranking. The teams were evenly matched, and the first goal was not scored until the game was 15 minutes into the second half. Hofstra led 1-0, but one minute later Villanova brought the ball downfield and Anita D'Ascenzo scored a goal for the Wildcats off a corner hit by Ann Rosato.

The score remained tied until there was less than two minutes left in the overtime period. Hofstra's Edith Gallagher knocked in a goal and there was not enough time for Villanova to score again.

Commenting on the team's play, Head Coach Cheryl Massaro said, "This was our worst game of the season. They just didn't realize how important it was for us to win."

Hofstra was playing strong defensive hockey and the Wildcats had a tough time breaking through to approach the goal. Massaro said, "In this game you need to beat the goalkeeper, and we couldn't today."

Although the young team's large level of inexperience was cited by the coach as the main factor for the loss, there was another factor that might have been as important to the outcome. The team was doubtful about the results of the game even before it started because junior team captain Peggy Dunleavy was not on hand for the contest.

Dunleavy, a nursing major, had a class conflict with the game, and the nursing program refused to release her from her clinical study requirements. Massaro said that this has been the source of many arguments with Villanova's nursing program.

Luckily, the Wildcats were able to put that disappointing day out of their minds and achieved a win over rival Georgetown on Sept. 26. The game was tied 0-0 at the half, but Villanova surged ahead to win by a score of 3-0.

Scoring for the 'Cats were Peggy Kearney, Sharon Seitz, and Rosato. Villanova's defense was in top shape, allowing only one shot on goal the entire game, while the Wildcat offense had 14 shots on goal. The team was very happy to win again after the disappointment of the previous game.

Shortly after Villanova's field hockey team achieved top 20 ranking, they fell to Hofstra, but they rebounded later to beat rival Georgetown.

Behind the lines

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

While meandering through the quad one afternoon, I overheard a conversation in which two persons were discussing their Saturday afternoon plans. The two persons talked at length about tailgating and the plethora of parties following the game, but there was little mention of the football game itself.

The thought arose as to whether or not football games were invented merely to facilitate parties.

In the past, excuses for the lack of attendance have ranged from, "The team never wins," to, "The team always wins, look who they are playing." In my mind, the time for excuses is over.

It is time that the Villanova community started to back the football team rather than back away from them. After all, what is the reason for football?

Football was and is a vital part of the majority of college campuses because it builds spirit and it builds pride. However, the sport itself cannot build spirit and pride. The fans must have spirit and pride in their school and all of its athletic teams in order to receive something back.

Villanova football has now entered a new era. An era filled with exemplary competition, filled with quality football. One thing remains unfilled: the stadium.

A college football game without fans is an empty experience, yielding nothing but numbers on a scoreboard as proof of its existence. But if you add fans, the game expands to an experience to be talked about for days and weeks to come.

Imagine the 1985 basketball championship without fans. Who would talk about what happened? Who would relive the euphoria of being the best?

Without fans, sports become hollow expressions and movements. With fans, sports become art, poetry reflected in a multiplicity of actions and reactions.

In summation, sports becomes real only when reflected in the eyes of a fan.

V.U. student alcohol abuse concerns expressed

By NOEL E. FALCO

"Alcohol is by far the drug on campus that is abused the most," said Janice Janosik, director of the Drug and Alcohol Intervention center, in an interview Oct. 5.

"What I've seen of other drugs is really minimal," Janosik added.

According to Janosik, studies have shown that "the average person who drinks has no more than four times a year that they get drunk ... drunk means they couldn't drive a car, got sick or did or said something embarrassing.

"Look at college students — in the first month of school ... many college students have already passed that statistic," she said.

Janosik said, "Heavy drinking is defined as 14 or more drinks in a week. It's important students realize that [factor]. If someone started drinking in sophomore year of high school every weekend, by the time they get through college, they've had seven years of heavy abusive drinking which has taken a toll on their body and could very well lead to alcoholism.

"The biggest thing about alcohol is when students here are choosing to drink, they are choosing to break the law," she said.

She stated that she had seen heavy drinking but "never to the extent to which some of our students are going.

"Funnelling, shotgunning, beer bongs, chugging hard liquor from the bottle, shots and grain alcohol ... These are all very dangerous abuse practices that our bodies just aren't made to handle," Janosik said.

She added that students were "getting caught up in drinking as the thing to do.

"They put themselves in medical danger. They become semi-conscious ... violently ill, pass out, become incoherent, their eyes don't respond to light, their vital signs are weak," she said.

According to Janosik, it is at this point that students are taken to the hospital and the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, gets involved.

Stack said he had been to the hospital a number of times with students late at night for alcohol poisoning and stomach pumping.

He said this is "just a result of people not caring about one another and encouraging drinking [when a person has already had enough].

Murder-suicide at Radnor House

By JOHANNE C. SHARP

A 50-year-old Delaware County man shot and killed his former wife Monday outside the Radnor House Condominiums, where many Villanova students reside, before taking his own life with the same gun, according to the Radnor Township Police report.

Kathleen O. Goodwin, 35, suffered fatal head wounds and was found dead in the front seat of her car when police responded to a report of shooting at 8:53 a.m. in the rear visitor parking lot of the condominium complex, 1030 E. Lancaster Ave., Rosemont. John E. Goodwin of Ridley Park was found lying dead on the ground next to the vehicle, still clutching his high-powered .30-caliber rifle.

Sources said Kathleen Goodwin had just dropped her 6-year-old son off at a school bus stop and was parking her car at the condominium complex when John Goodwin approached her. The boy lived with his mother at the Radnor House.

John Goodwin wasbriefly imprisoned last week for harassing his former wife. He was released on $100 bail and was scheduled to face a preliminary hearing Wednesday.

Authorities said the couple was married in November 1975 and, according to Delaware County Common Pleas Court records, Kathleen Goodwin filed for divorce in January 1986. A consentual divorce decree was granted five months later.

"He has been following me, standing by my door listening, and following me when I've been 'out' since November 1985," Kathleen Goodwin state in a private criminal complaint she filed against her former husband less than two months ago in Radnor Township District Court, according to sources.

The court's records show that in the complaint, Kathleen Goodwin sought her former husband's arrest on one count each of harassment and criminal trespassing.

In addition, according to court records, Miriam E. Orlow, identified as the mother of Kathleen Goodwin, filed a similar criminal complaint against John Goodwin. Court records show that Orlow lived in the same condominium as her daughter.

Police said a witness saw a man carrying a high-powered rifle and walking toward a woman in a car just prior to the shootings. "After seeing the results, the witness immediately called police," authorities said.

A maintenance man who was working outside when the incident occurred said the bodies did not look like people and described the scene as grim.

Lower Merion zoning altered

By E.H. McELDOWNEY

A new rental ordinance passed Sept. 30 by Lower Merion Township will place greater restrictions on both landlords and those who rent homes in Ardmore and Bryn Mawr.

The ordinance, which deals with single-family dwellings, requires owners leasing properties to register for a license with the township, Bob Duncan, manager of codes, said. The leaser and the tenants will also have to register with the township to assure that the housing codes restricting the number of unrelated people living together are not violated.

Duncan stressed that the ordinance, while affecting students, is directed toward absentee landlords, who are often difficult to contact or locate if there is a problem with the property. He cited examples of landlords renting [illegible] properties or violating [illegible] of improper or non-[illegible] tenants. This ordinance, Duncan said, is designed to [illegible] on those landlords who take advantage of both the students and the town.

However, Duncan mentioned several areas of concern that directly affect students, including repeated complaints about high levels of noise, parking problems and violations of the code limiting the number of residents.

According to Duncan, spot inspections of homes are being made but only on properties that have been the source of complaints.

The parking situation, in areas where multiple-cars-per-student dwellings have to compete with the usual residential parking limits, is a "real problem in family districts," said Duncan. He cited Thomas Avenue in Ardmore as a perfect example. "At 5 p.m. there is just no place to park," Duncan said.

The township has also been working with several University officials to solve the problems with off-campus students. Both Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, and the Local housing laws discussed

By SIOBHAN A. RODER

A number of members of the Villanova community indicated this week that efforts are continuing to alleviate any difficulties encountered by off-campus residents who face local zoning ordinances limiting the number of unrelated persons who may reside in one household.

The townships of Radnor and Upper Merion prohibit more than two unrelated persons from residing together in one household. In Merion and Haverford townships, no more than three unrelated persons may live together in a single household. On Sept. 30, Lower Merion Township passed a rental ordinance which will place greater restrictions on landlords and those who rent homes in Ardmore and Bryn Mawr.

According to an October 1986 article in the Villanovan, Lower Merion passed its zoning measures "to maintain a peaceful atmosphere" in the township, while Haverford was motivated by the desire to prevent overcrowding and parking problems.

The men's volleyball team is holding their annual tryouts tomorrow, Oct. 10. The one-day tryouts will be held in the Jake Nevin Field House. If your last name begins with A—J, be there at noon. If your last name begins with K—Z, be there at 2:30 p.m. All are welcome.

English Club

Is there life after college for English majors? Come find out. Dr. Robert Stokes, director of the Career Development Center, will speak to any interested student about how to find a job after graduation with a degree in English. The meeting will be held on Oct. 13 at 4 p.m. in the Haverford Room of Connelly Center. All are welcome.

Philosophy Club

We will meet on Oct. 12 at 5 p.m. in Vasey 208. During our first meeting, we will discuss our student-organized speakers' program, the formation of an honors society for philosophy, election of officers and upcoming events.

Homeless Committee

The Villanova Committee for the Philadelphia Homeless is sponsoring a Blanket and Shoe Collection. The collection will be Oct. 27-28 from 10 a.m.-3 p.m. in the Campus Ministry Office. While you are at home for Fall Break, please gather your old blankets and shoes to help keep others warm this winter.

Commuters

Do not forget about our weekly free coffee and donuts in the North Lounge. Our next date is Oct. 14, from 8-10 a.m. Also, plan to attend our next general meeting/pizza party, Oct. 15 at 5:30 p.m.

Constitutional Lecture

Come see Professor Jefferson Powell speak on, "The Modern Misunderstanding of Original Intent." His lecture will be held in the Wayne-St. David's Room in Connelly Center on Oct. 15, from 3:30-5:30 p.m. All are welcome to attend!

Work and Family

The second lecture in the series, Work and Family: a changing balance, sponsored by the sociology department and University College will be held on Oct. 14 from 3:30-4:45 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema. The lecture, "Part-time Work for Mothers: Burdens and Benefits," will be given by Dr. Leslie Alexander, associate professor at Bryn Mawr College Graduate School of Social Work and Social Research.

Ukranian Club

There will be another meeting on Oct. 13 at 4:30 p.m. in St. Thomas Hall, Room 201. All Rusins, Carpatho-Rusins, and Lemkos are encouraged to attend.

Accouting Society

The next Accounting Society meeting is Oct. 15 at 12:45 p.m. in Bartley Room 209. Representatives of Johnson & Johnson will be on hand to speak about internal auditing.

Faculty Club

The Villanova Faculty Club Expresses its thanks to Bob Capone, alumni director, for his sponsorship of the reception last Friday for new faculty and old alumni. Any faculty members, especially part-time, who did not receive an invitation to join the club are asked to call the club's moderator, Dr. Oliver Ludwig, at x4873 for information.

Visiting Scholar

Professor John T. Shawcross will be speaking on Milton's poetry in the North Lounge of Doherty Hall on Oct. 14 from 4:30-5:30 p.m. The lecture will be followed by an informal reception with refreshments, in Vasey 201.

Senior Picture

The Belle Air would like to see the Class of 1988 on the bleachers at the Stadium on Oct. 13 at 12:45 p.m. Rain date will be Thursday, Oct. 15 at 12:45 p.m. Greeks, sport your letters. Show that senior spirit.

Admissions office praised

By LYNN PERDEK

The number and quality of student applications to Villanova is rising in part because of the quality of the admissions program, according to an evaluation prepared by James E. Nelson of the Middle States Association.

The evaluation is another part of the campus-wide evaluation currently underway.

Nelson commented, though, "There are ways to improve what is done, and in admissions at the University there are opportunities to further enrich the candidate pool and to select even stronger students, while also going after diversity of student background, geography and talent."

Nelson praised the admissions personnel as "a most able professional and support staff." In addition, he said, "Operations, data management and minority recruiting deserve special recognition for their levels of productivity and achievement."

Nelson also commented that the admissions office budget is "adequate for current operations."

He continued, saying, "Admissions fits well within the University's academic affairs structure, and it works properly in close coordination with the Registrar's Office and the Office of Financial Aid."

An area of great concern, though, according to the evaluation, is the apparent homogeneity of Villanova students. The report found that 90 percent of those admitted to Villanova come from only six states. Nelson stated, "Villanova students increasingly look alike in terms of geographic and academic backgrounds, as well as relative affluence and race."

A suggestion made by Nelson in order to recruit more minority and geographically-diverse students is for Villanova to work more with alumni. Alumni interviews and presence at high school college nights could recruit many students from outside the area and provide for a more diversified freshman class.

As it now stands, the percentage of minority students in the undergraduate program is slightly under 3 percent, with the percentage of black students just over 1 percent.

Another criticism raised by the report deals with the visitor parking facilities. The report noted that since parking limitations on campus are highly restricted, the admissions office is not easily accessible to parents and students.

Nelson called for a clear statement of goals by the admissions office as to objectives of the program and for that statement to be expressed to all of Villanova's faculty. He concluded by stating that Villanova should take pride in the quality of its students.

Groundwork set for journal

By KEVIN HEIL

Student Government has recently begun production of a political journal which will give students an opportunity to voice their opinions on political issues.

The publication, The Pelican, will deal with local, national and international issues, according to Student Government President Phil Brach.

"We wanted to find a name that related to Villanova University. When St. Thomas of Villanova became a bishop, they wanted to make a coat of arms for him. He chose a pelican because it feeds its own and nourishes them," he explained.

"Our paper will contain within it a variety of political views, whereas a lot of school newspapers are slanted politically in one way or another. We're not here to promote the Republican or Democratic cause," said Brach.

"It's [the journal] a forum for Villanova students to be able to express their political opinions, no matter what [party] they are," Brach stated.

The staff hopes to publish four issues this year and mail copies to county legislators, representatives on the state and national level and politically-active Villanova alumni, Brach said.

"This will become respected as a journal that expresses the views of American college students," Brach added.

Plans for the journal began when Student Government came in contact with the Center for National Policy, a nonpartisan organization centered in Washington, D.C. This group helps to start political journals and raise political awareness, said Brach.

This past summer, Brach and two other Student Government members, John Lewis and John Sweeney, attended a seminar that taught them how to begin the journal and raise money to produce it. At the seminar, they met with people who give out seed money to help begin production of journals.

Additional money is expected from advertising revenues, fund-raising drives and a probable grant from the Center for National Policy, Brach stated.

"We belong to a network of political journals," said Sweeney. "We all send newspapers to each other and share our articles. It's a great benefit for a college to use additional resources which are readily available."

"As far as the network is concerned, it's the power of a united student political voice," added Brach.

"We're not liberal or conservative," said Lewis. "Liberal and conservative are labels. We seek to get beneath the surface of these labels to issues confronting America's future. In that respect, we're on the cutting edge of American political thought."

Staff positions are still available, said Brach. Anyone interested in joining should stop by the Student Government office in 204 Dougherty Hall.

Coed dormitories discussed

By SHARON A. WATERS

Christopher M. Janosik, director of Residence Life, said that he was "not surprised" by the results of the recent survey which showed overwhelming student support for coed dorms because his office "collected the same kind of data through the residence life survey we do each year."

Janosik further stated that neither the office of Residence Life nor the division of Student Life is opposed to coed housing. Janosik felt that before coed dorms could be established, the Board of Trustees and higher levels of administration have "to be convinced that it [coed dorms] is a positive thing to do."

Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, also agreed that the Board of Trustees and administration would have to be sure that coed dorms would add a positive aspect to the University. According to Neville, there has been no formal proposal to the Board of Trustees, but the idea of coed dorms has been discussed informally, yet not extensively, with the Board's sub-committee on student life.

Neville said that the pros and cons of coed dorms would have to be examined to see if they merit a proposal to the Board. Then a "well-thought out" proposal would be presented "very carefully" to the Board, according to Neville.

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, stated that more must be taken into consideration than just the students' opinions. Stack said, "For the Board of Trustees to be impressed, it would be important to survey the alumni and the parents."

Stack stated that he felt it would be "very difficult for the Board to keep our present policy if parents and alumni were in favor of this [coed dorms]."

Addressing the issue of the visitation policy in connection with coed dorms, Stack said visitation is just one of the many issues which would have to be examined before coed dorms could be added. Stack stated, "Students assume coed halls mean no visitation hours and that is not necessarily correct."

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, declined to comment until a later date.

duPont to lead SDI conference

On Oct. 1 John E. duPont, Villanova's wrestling coach, announced that he will present an international teleconference and technological exhibition on the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) in mid-1988 in Washington, D.C.

duPont, vice chairperson of the National Security Advisory Board and president of the Foundation for America's Citizen-Athletes, will be the major sponsor and underwriter of the "John E. duPont Great Issues Series" of conferences.

The first in the series will be broadcast to over 200 universities via satellite and will be potentially viewed by at least 2 million students and faculty.

According to a press release, duPont is committed to providing a forum that would expose America's youth to great minds on issues of public concern.

Constitution lectures to be held

The political science department, in observance of the U.S. Constitution, will present three speakers this fall to discuss various aspects of the Constitution.

The first lecture, by H. Herman Belz, will take place Oct. 27. Mr. Belz is a professor of history at the University of Maryland. Belz will give his lecture, "Constitutionalism and the American Founding," in the west lounge of Dougherty hall.

"The Global Impact of the United States Constitution" is the subject of the second lecture Oct. 29 at 7:30 p.m. in the east lounge of Dougherty Hall. The lecture will be given by Henry J. Abraham, professor of government and foreign affairs at the University of Virginia.

The last of this fall lecture series will occur Nov. 3 with "The Bill of Rights." Walter Berns, a professor of political science at Georgetown University, will be speaking. Currently, he is also the resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research. This will take place at 4 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Law school celebrates Red Mass

The Villanova University School of Law will observe the 30th anniversary of its annual Red Mass on Oct. 10, at 7 p.m. in the St. Thomas of Villanova Chapel on main campus.

Dr. Harold Gill Reuschlein, founding dean of the law school, will speak during the rites, which mark the opening of the school year. He inaugurated the Red Mass in 1957.

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, will celebrate the Mass.

More than 300 alumni, students, faculty and members of the local bench and bar will be attending the Saturday evening ceremonies.

The Red Mass originated in 13th-century France.

Pavilion to host charismatic rally

By JENNIFER REIDY

The charismatic prayer groups of the Archdiocese of Philadelphia will hold their annual rally Oct. 9-11 in the duPont Pavilion.

Some 5,200 worshippers are expected to attend the three-day rally, which will begin with a prayer meeting at 7 p.m. today, according to Msgr. Vincent M. Walsh, vicar for charismatic prayer groups for the Archdiocese of Philadelphia.

The young adult rally, for those between the ages of 18 and 35, will be held Saturday from 7-10 p.m. Sr. Maria Rosita, executive director of events for the charismatics, stated that this rally "will probably be very emotional. When these young kids catch onto the spirit, they become awfully wild, usually waving their arms in the air and joyously praising the Lord at the top of their lungs."

Walsh added, "A large group of young people will also be coming" from local colleges such as Temple University, Drexel University, the University of Pennsylvania and Ursinus College, as well as from Villanova.

The charismatic rally is not sponsored by Villanova and "the charismatics are simply renting space in the pavilion from the athletic department," according to a spokesperson from Campus Ministry.

The charismatics are a sect of the Catholic Church, founded in 1967, who maintain that they receive the charismatic gifts described in the book of Corinthians in the New Testament. These gifts include the word of knowledge, the gift of healing, the gift of miracles, the gift of prophecy and the interpretation of tongues.

The last gift mentioned involves "speaking in tongues," in which a person is found to pray or chant in a foreign language. Often this person is unable to understand the language which he has spoken, and the message can only be interpreted by someone who is bestowed with the gift of interpretation of tongues, said Walsh.

According to Rosita, a person is caused to speak in tongues by the Holy Spirit, who manifests himself in the heart and soul of the person. The prayer which the person recites is "unlocked from the depth of his soul by the Spirit, and bypasses the brain, resulting in the indiscernible foreign tongue in which the person speaks. Thus, the person has totally surrendered his will to God and has become a vessel through which He communicates.'"

The charismatics, as mentioned previously, claim that some of their members receive the gift of healing from the Holy Spirit. The Rev. Robert Faricy, a Jesuit and professor of theology at the Gregorian University in Rome, Italy, will lead a healing service at 3 p.m. Saturday.

The annual charismatic rally has in previous years been held at the Civic Center in Philadelphia, in Harrisburg, Pa., and Allentown, Pa., and in Wilmington, Del. This year's theme is "To Him Be Glory Forever."

Anyone interested in the rally can purchase tickets at the door on any of the three days. Admission will be $9 per person and $4 for young adults.

Concerns about local housing laws discussed

ment president, expressed doubt earlier this week about the constitutionality of the municipalities' strict definition of a family that is used in their multiple occupancy zoning laws.

Brach said that Student Government research indicated that in no case other than the 1974 Belle Terre v. Boraas ruling by the Supreme Court have such laws been found constitutional. According to Brach, every time similar multiple occupancy zoning laws have been challenged on the state level, they have been found unconstitutional. He said, though, that no one has challenged the laws in a court of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Brach said that "The research is done. The law is on our side ... but until someone challenges the law [the zoning ordinances restricting the number of unrelated persons who may live together], the ordinances will remain intact.

The Pennsylvania courts have not yet affirmed that the state constitution gives individuals any more rights of association and privacy than allowed by the federal constitution as interpreted by the Belle Terre v. Boraas ruling, according to the 1986 Villanovan article.

The Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., assistant to the vice president for Student Life, and John M. Hyson, a Villanova Law School professor, confirmed that there had been no change in the rulings concerning these laws at either the Supreme Court level or the Pennsylvania state level.

Martin said students evicted for breaking the zoning laws restricting the number of unrelated persons who may live together "basically will have to litigate that issue at the state level" in order to change the laws. He said they will have to argue that these local zoning ordinances violate their constitutional rights of free association with their peers or that the definition of family being used is too restrictive.

Brach, though, said he would rather find another method of alleviating the off-campus housing problems than through litigation. He said he has presented a plan at a meeting of the Town and Gown Committee which would allow the laws to remain but give students the right to apply for a "variance," which would in effect make them exempt from the laws.

Brach, though, said Student Government's "biggest drive" is presently a plan for a voter registration drive on campus. He said getting students to be registered voters in this area will give them a voice in local politics and will be a quicker means than a lawsuit of changing local multiple occupancy zoning rules.

When told of Brach's interest in using a voter registration drive to increase the students' ability to affect the situation with the local zoning laws, the Rev. Francis A. Farsaci, O.S.A., advisor for off-campus residents, said earlier this week that a voter registration drive for that purpose "might be counterproductive" and that, "The townships might become more and more aggressive" if they feel Villanova is "trying to put one over on them."

Patricia Marzulli, Student Government's secretary of external affairs, who is directing the organization of the voter registration drive, said, "My purpose with voter registration is just to let the people of the townships know that Villanova is interested in the community."

Marzulli added that getting students to register to vote "affects more than just the zoning laws ... my intention is not just to change that." She emphasized that she is not working toward students dominating voting in the townships.

Farsaci said, "I can't say that I know of anybody this year who has been evicted [for violating local multiple occupancy zoning ordinances]." He said he could remember no more than about three evictions last year.

"I really don't see it [the local zoning ordinances] as a problem. I don't see that many evictions."

Michael Fleig, director of community development for Radnor Township, said he does not "know of any large problems currently outstanding" concerning violations of Radnor's zoning ordinance. Fleig did acknowledge isolated incidents this year but maintains that there have been fewer problems recently than in the past.

Farsaci emphasized easing tensions between the townships and the University. Farsaci said that "we want to appear and truly be" cooperative in listening to the township residents' pleas.

KEVIN J. OWENS

This week, the Order of Omega is proud to spotlight the achievements of Kevin J. Owens of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity.

Kevin is a senior communications major from Pittsburgh, Pa. He currently serves in the capacity of president for Sig Ep. Kevin has also held a variety of other positions for the fraternity including Rush chairman, alumni relations officer, and IFC representative. In addition, Kevin serves as the Order of Omega's treasurer and as a member of the Tailgate Management Team.

On top of all of his activities here at Villanova, Kevin keeps busy at Devon Prep High School where he holds the position of head coach for both the varsity soccer and tennis teams.

This past summer, Kevin held another coaching job, serving as head coach of the International Pennsylvania Soccer Team USA for the under-17 division. Kevin took Team USA on a victorious tour of such places as Denmark, Sweden and the Soviet Union.

Kevin claims that he has no free time, but if he did, he would spend it watching soccer.

For all of his accomplishments, the Order of Omega is pleased to honor Kevin J. Owens of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity as the Greek of the Week.

Alcohol abuse concerns

"They think 'I can drink what I want, when I want, and nothing's going to happen to me,'" Stack said.

Janosik said, "The alcohol is not bad, it doesn't do it to you, it's the person who chooses to drink so much. Alcohol was made to be a social beverage, to be drunk responsibly.

"Our society and our students have gotten away from using alcohol to celebrate ... [they have forgotten how] to sip, to pace. Any time a student drinks, they set out to really get trashed and wasted," she said.

Janosik stated that students come to the center because of disciplinary probation, non-disciplinary referral or of their own accord.

The center's purpose, Janosik explained, is education and prevention to build awareness. "Prevent drinking so much, prevent getting in medical difficulty, prevent getting in trouble and thrown out of school, prevent alcoholism.

"What I do is to ask them about tolerance," Janosik said.

"When they cross the line from heavy drinking to alcoholism, their body has increased tolerance, so they have to use more of the substance to feel the way they used to feel on less," she said.

Other signs that they may be crossing the line to addiction are, according to Janosik, "drinking alone, gulping drinks — which is right away someone who chugs — living to drink, where drinking becomes the focus.

"The social spontaneity of drinking functions is gone because they are planning to drink. They won't participate in any activity unless there's drinking involved," she said.

She added, "Another sign is if they're drinking to alleviate some kind of pain or discomfort in their lives ... drinking to forget ... that person's at high risk. It's important not to get into the pattern."

According to Janosik, awareness about the center has increased since she started working for it part-time in 1984.

In 1984, 69 students were referred to the center for both alcohol and drug abuse as a result of disciplinary referral, said Janosik.

In 1985, 254 students were referred as Janosik increased her work time. "There were a lot more referrals and students came in on their own," she said.

In 1986, 326 students were referred, and in 1987, the center officially opened full-time with Janosik as head. Since September, 26 students have been referred on party or keg violations, 28 students for more abusive situations in which they were drunk, drunk [eight have gone to the hospital] and 10 have come in on their own.

"A lot more students have come in on their own. I've done a presentation to freshmen, [with] Panhell [Panhellenic Council] and IFC [Interfraternity Council], and we have an athletic program. I didn't really advertise myself before. This year I've done a lot of outreach," Janosik said.

Tailgating

"Clearly, I don't see what we do as 'tailgating.' [Tailgating is] lunch, a couple of beers and socializing. Registering kegs, knowing that most people are underage, stepping over bodies, seeing public urination, throwing up in the bushes, is alcohol abuse," said Janosik.

She said tailgating at Villanova is the opportunity to have as many cold beers as possible in a given amount of time.

Stack stated, "What we have before football games is not tailgating, but simply people rolling down kegs and seeing how much they can drink in a given amount of time."

He said, "If there is not more responsible drinking, I think you'll see an attempt to regulate the amount of alcohol or to eliminate tailgating. Neither will be popular, but both are necessary unless students understand that the purpose of pre-game tailgating is not to get trashed.

"Groups who have that as a goal are going to end up curtailing the event for everyone," he said.

Stack added, "If students were watching out for one another, there wouldn't be as many people drunk.

"People aren't even thinking about that [the football game], they're tying a load on," he said.

He further stated, "Most students are fairly cooperative about ending. Some, however, don't understand there has to be an end to the party."

Attitude

"Students know how to drink responsibly; they just don't choose to. Some students tell you on Tuesday, 'I can't wait until Friday when I'm drunk,'" said Stack.

Janosik said the important factor needed is an attitude change.

"Students think, 'Where can we get together to get the most amount of alcohol or to drink until we fall?' Why not socialize, and that can include alcohol, but why get sick or lose control? To me, that's not having a good time," she said.

Janosik said she was worried about the attitudes underlying drinking in which people value a good time rather than safety and responsibility.

"No one's trying to take your fun away ... we just want you to be safe and not to overdo it," she said.

Radnor House deaths

Villanova freshman Diana Geuppuso, who lives directly above Kathleen Goodwin's unit, reacted, "I'm frightened. I knew the lady, I had problems with our connecting waterpipes. She seemed strange, like something was bothering her. It's so weird that my neighbor was shot."

Villanova junior Teresa Brock, who lives on the same floor as Kathleen Goodwin did, said, "You would never expect it to happen here. This is the Main Line and one of the most expensive places for students to live." She said she saw police carry out an ambulance at the same at that was leaving for her 8:00 a.m. class.

Eighth-floor resident and junior accounting major Joanie Coghlan said police had roped off the rear parking lot after the shootings. She said, "It gives you the creeps. I'm sick that someone would do something like it. I'm devastated for the little boy."

The management office of Radnor House Condominiums declined comment Monday.

Dimitri L. Constantelos, the Delaware County medical examiner, pronounced the couple dead at the scene. He said an autopsy determined that both had died from single gunshot wounds to the head.

Respect Life Week hosted

By SIOBHAN A. RODER

The Villanovans For Life (VFL) held their yearly Respect Life Week this week to educate the Villanova community about a number of pro-life issues, according to Heidi M. Rojas, president of VFL.

"A concentrated effort to really educate the campus is what has been stressed [in organizing Respect Life Week]," said Rojas.

Rojas stated, "If one person comes out of this week knowing a little more, we have achieved our goal."

Rojas indicated that the three main issues VFL was hoping to educate the campus about this week were abortion, infanticide and euthanasia.

As part of this year's Respect Life Week, Dr. Joseph Desjardins presented a lecture titled "Is Bork Truly Pro-life?" Monday night. Judge Robert Bork was recently nominated by President Ronald Reagan to succeed Justice Lewis Powell on the U.S. Supreme Court.

According to Ingrid Birnbach, chairperson for Respect Life Week, Tuesday night's film, "Eclipse of Reason," concentrated on late-term abortions. Birnbach said the film showed a baby immediately before an abortion was performed and then showed the abortion procedure from the doctor's point of view.

On Wednesday night a movie, "Whose Life Is It Anyway?", dealt with the issue of euthanasia, said Birnbach. It starred Richard Dreyfuss as a sculptor, paralyzed from his neck down in an accident, who wants the right to refuse treatment.

A coffeehouse took place in Dougherty Hall Thursday night, during which the audience members were encouraged to write to both their state and national representatives and senators, urging those politicians to support pro-life positions on various pieces of legislation dealing with abortion, said Birnbach.

VFL sold T-shirts and "I Care" packages during the week. Bernbach said she only expected to "break even" in the sale of the T-shirts. She said, though, depending on whether money was donated for the "I Care" packages, she expected to "break even" or have a profit from their sale. If "I Care" packages produced a profit, she said the money would be donated to Mom's House, an organization which aids unmarried mothers.

Rojas said VFL was founded in 1974 in response to the 1973 Roe/Wade Supreme Court decision guaranteeing to women the constitutional right to have an abortion. Rojas indicated that, at first, VFL concentrated solely on the abortion issue.

She said, though, after learning of Chicago's Joseph Cardinal Bernardin's concept of the "seamless garment," which emphasizes the interrelatedness of all life issues, VFL began to increase the number of issues they worked with. Rojas said this resulted in the organization becoming overextended.

"We [this year's VFL executive committee] brought the group back to the three main issues [abortion, infanticide and euthanasia]," said Rojas. She emphasized that members of VFL still maintain connection with other issues through the peace and justice network.

Birnbach is the coordinator of the peace and justice network. She said that the network provides communication between the various social action groups on campus and publicity and general information about the activities those groups are involved in.

Rojas said, "Every month we [VFL] have two to three general meetings ... which are educational. We do letter-writing and discuss issues."

In addition, VFL holds a monthly social activity and does a monthly service project.

In January, members of VFL will participate in the March for Life in Washington, D.C. The trip is open to anyone who is interested, said Rojas.

Downey honored at dinner

By TRACEY WHARTENBY

Dr. Bernard J. Downey, former dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences, was honored at a retirement dinner Sept. 26 in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

Approximately 125 faculty members, administrators and secretaries attended the dinner.

Downey first came to Villanova University in 1959 as a chemistry professor. After teaching for several years, Downey became chairperson of the chemistry department.

From 1969 to 1974, Downey served as assistant dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences. In 1974, Downey became dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences.

He retired from this position at the end of last semester and is currently teaching a course in the chemistry department.

During his term of office, Downey was involved in new and interdisciplinary programs, such as computer science, human organization science and liberal studies.

Dr. Bernard Downey, former dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences, acknowledges a $1,000 gift at his retirement dinner Sept. 26.

He was also actively involved in professional organizations.

In addition, Downey is president of the Pennsylvania Association of the Graduate Schools and president of the Association of the Graduate Schools in Catholic Colleges and Universities. Also, the former dean has presented or published 28 papers about various aspects of graduate education.

Downey's retirement dinner was organized by Dr. Joseph Kinney of the English department, who served as assistant dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences for two years.

After dinner, speeches were given by Dr. Robert Grob, master of ceremonies; the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs; and the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

After the speeches, Kinney presented the former dean with a retirement gift of $1,000.

At the dinner, Dr. Priscilla Hopkirk, chairperson of the political science department, announced the dedication of the Dr. Bernard J. Downey Award in Public Service.

"Dr. Downey was an outstanding administrator and teacher. He is an outstanding person, who demonstrated in my experience with him the main ideals of our University. He is someone whom I appreciated as a colleague on the faculty. And above all, I consider him to be a real friend," said Kinney.

Directory expected in December

By PATRICIA GAVIN

A "safe goal" of "before Christmas" has been set for the completion of Villanova's student directory, Christine Wnuk, assistant secretary of public relations for Student Government, recently said.

If this goal is reached, the directory will have been published earlier than its predecessor for the second straight year. Last year's directory was not delivered to students until early in the spring semester.

When the directory is completed, it will contain a "more complete listing" of student locations than the Registrar's office holds, Wnuk stated.

Wnuk said that she and her "very helpful staff" have been at work since April. Letters containing information release forms and postage-paid envelopes were sent to students by the end of July.

Also, freshman information was taken care of during orientation with the help of Don Mullikin, student orientation chairperson, and Christine A. Lysionek, assistant to the dean of students, said Wnuk.

Currently, the directory staff is working with student information tiles in the Registrar's Office, with the help of the office's personnel. Wnuk stated that the staff has received much incorrect information from students.

After all of the information is clarified, another month will be needed to process the material, which is completed in North Carolina. A "safe goal" is therefore the best that can be done, said Wnuk.

Wnuk has asked students who were not specific about the information they gave, or who did not sign a release form, to go to the Student Government office on the second floor of Dougherty Hall to fill out a form.

The information-gathering system used this year is new, and it is hoped to make it as easy as possible for students to complete forms and return them, according to Wnuk.

So far, the new system has proven more successful, but there is still room for improvement, said Wnuk.

New alcohol policy protested

Nearly 200 of the 1,250 students at Lycoming University in Williamsport, Pa., gathered recently in the center of campus to protest new restrictions in the school's alcohol policy.

The college president, Frederick E. Blumer, announced an interim policy requiring organizations or individuals requesting permission to serve alcohol to agree not to serve anyone who appears to be intoxicated or younger than 21.

Students said that Blumer only informed a group of student leaders of the policy, who were then supposed to inform the campus, and he did not notify the entire student population.

Blumer later told students that the policy changed because of a ruling by the Third U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals extending liability to colleges if officials know minors are being served alcohol illegally.

Plagiarism common in colleges

The revelation that Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., cheated on a law school paper as a student in 1965 places him with a large percentage of today's college students.

A Carnegie Commission report in 1985 reported that 30 to 50 percent of all college students admitted that they had cheated during their academic careers.

On Sept. 17, Biden, a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, admitted that he had plagiarized five pages on a paper in 1965 as a first-year law student at Syracuse University.

Biden was allowed to retake the course in 1965, but many students today might not get that opportunity. Schools today are more vigilant in watching students.

Harvard hosts "Beetlemania"

Harvard University is currently exhibiting its own version of "Beetlemania." Ringo Starr and Paul McCartney will not be present, but more than 5,000 air-dried and preserved specimens of beetles will be, according to a recent New York Times report.

The exhibits are grouped by specimens and labeled with a touch of humor. The weevil beetle display is called "Weevil Overcome" and the tiger beetles, found on beaches, are called "The Beach Boys."

The exhibit contains more than 3 million beetle specimens and was created by Scott Shaw, curatorial associate at the Harvard University Museum of Comparative Zoology, and his assistants, Ed Armstrong and Charlie Vogt.

Colleges experience divestment pressures

By MIKE O'KEEFFE

[CPS] As a nationwide series of planned anti-apartheid protests approaches in October, activists expect the pressure on campuses to sell their shares on firms that do business in segregationist South Africa will be more intense than ever.

This, the activists note, is the first protest season since the Rev. Leon H. Sullivan called for U.S. businesses to withdraw from South Africa.

In 1977, Sullivan authored the Sullivan Principles, a list of civil rights that companies agreed to respect among their South African employees, regardless of color. Scores of colleges, unwilling to take the financial losses of selling their shares in the firms, adopted policies requiring the companies to comply with the principles.

In June, the Philadelphia minister and civil rights leader, frustrated by the South African government's unwillingness to dismantle apartheid and its mounting violence, called on firms to stop trying to make the best of a bad situation, and to pull out of the country altogether.

Fifty-nine of the nation's biggest campuses had adopted the Sullivan Principles, the Investor Responsibility Research Center in Washington, D.C., said.

"Sullivan's comments definitely will put pressure on schools to divest," said Josh Nessen, the student coordinator of the American Committee on Africa.

In January 1985, without much prodding from Nessen's group, anti-apartheid sit-ins and demonstrations suddenly exploded on dozens of campuses, and the momentum built to involve as many as 100,000 students in April demonstrations.

Since then, however, the crowds and intensity of the campus movement gradually have dwindled as trustees began to sell their schools' shares.

Nessen, though, hopes Sullivan's call will start an anti-apartheid revival during the week-long teach-ins and rallies his group has planned on during October.

Zoning

Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, have met with township officials over the last several months to maintain communication about off-campus problems, said Duncan.

These problems, primarily clashes between students and families who complain of excessive noise and late-night parties, are the source of tension in residential areas. "There is always tension," Stack said.

According to Duncan, ninety percent of the complaints are regarding Villanova students."

Stack said that off-campus "students now are paying for the sins of the past."

Both Stack and Duncan stressed cooperation and consideration in residential neighborhoods. "There are always going to be parties," Duncan said, "and I think the residents can understand that. Right now it's a small number of students causing the problems and giving the school a bad name."

End alcohol abuse

Weekend after weekend, week after week, large numbers of Villanova students engage in an activity that accounts for approximately 98,000 deaths annually. That same activity, when combined with highway driving, is also the No. 1 killer of 15 to 24 year olds. And the disease that the activity leads to is one of the most serious public health problems, affecting 12.1 million Americans. This activity is alcohol abuse, and, unfortunately, even in light of these harrowing statistics, the incidence of alcohol abuse at Villanova appears to be increasing, to the detriment of all.

There are no ifs, ands or buts about it: Alcohol is a drug, the drug of choice among Villanova students. There is no doubt, either, that consciousness about the perils of its abuse needs to be raised. As evidenced by untold numbers of stories about drinking, being drunk and being hungover exchanged regularly on campus, it appears that Villanova students, regrettably, could be counted as part of the statistic that one-tenth of the drinking population consumes half of the alcoholic beverages sold. Few students seem aware that abusing alcohol regularly is a grave danger to themselves and a serious threat to others if they drink and drive. And on top of all of this, alcohol abuse frequently leads to the abuse of marijuana and harder drugs.

Thankfully, the University is taking steps to help combat the problem. The recent establishment of the Drug and Alcohol Intervention Center to provide counseling and information to students is to be applauded. Students should follow the University's lead and take action, too. Make use of the resources available to you and learn about alcohol and drug abuse, and seek help if you or your friends exhibit signs of addiction.

Alcohol and drug abuse affects everyone. With the number of complex problems and issues that America faces today, we cannot afford to have millions of Americans living their lives in an impaired state. Do your part — work to end alcohol and drug abuse.

Stop killing minors

Before he could drive, before he could buy liquor, vote, serve on a jury or even donate blood, William Wayne Thompson, at age 15, was sentenced to death for helping to kill his former brother-in-law. On Nov. 9, five years after his sentencing, Thompson's case will be heard by the Supreme Court, whose decision will most likely set a precedent for juvenile death penalty cases. That precedent should give American young people the chance to grow up.

Over 80 countries around the globe, including Libya, China and the Soviet Union, agree that minors, like Thompson, should be allowed to mature and develop into complete persons before they are left to die as hopeless criminals. In Italy, masses of people, with the support of Amnesty International, are campaigning for U.S. youngsters' right to life.

One letter sent to Indiana Gov. Robert Orr reads, "We cannot comprehend how people of a democratic, free and independent nation ... who, after the atrocities of World War II and Nazi concentration camps had the strength to forgive their enemies, will not grant one of its children a chance to make amends."

The United States does have a juvenile justice system which is supposed to rehabilitate minors and to help them make amends. In death penalty cases, however, that same system kills these children — 275 so far. And 32 more wait on death row. How will killing these 32 young people possibly help them or their victims?

Furthermore, do we have the right to play God, to decide when someone should live? Certainly, two wrongs do not make a right.

This November, the Supreme Court can make a right choice by joining the rest of the civilized world and letting U.S. young people grow up.

R.O.T.C. produces fine officers

R.O.T.C. is producing some of the finest officers our armed forces have ever seen. The more competitive it gets, the better our armed forces will be.

To The Editor:

In response to the article 'R.O.T.C. more competitive' in the Sept. 25, 1987 edition of the Villanovan, I was wondering why the author quoted a New York Times article written about Army R.O.T.C. and applied it to the Naval R.O.T.C. program.

The New York Times article was accurate about the Army because, as enrollment increases every year, the number of commissioned officers who will receive an active duty commission is decreasing. This year, 50 percent of all newly commissioned Army officers will go on active duty while the other 50 percent will serve their country in the Reserves and the National Guard. Almost all commissioned officers in the Navy will receive an active duty assignment because of the smaller size of the Navy and need for officers.

Increased enrollment in Army R.O.T.C. is visible here at Villanova. The program, which is cross-enrolled with Widener University, is in its third year and is increasing in size. Last year there were only five freshmen students; this year there are 16. With this constant increase, there is greater competition for scholarships as well.

R.O.T.C. is producing the finest officers our armed forces have ever seen. The more competive it gets, the better our armed forces will be.

Alcoholics ruin the lives of others

By SUSAN TOLVE

To many college students, fun revolves around one thing — beer. The statistics, however, do not indicate a fun future for these students.

Someone under 21 years old can become addicted to alcohol within six months, while it could take 10-20 years for someone over 30 to become addicted, according to a representative from the Statewide Drug and Alcohol Prevention Association. In addition, the highest percentage of alcoholism comes from the consumption of beer. College, it seems, is the perfect breeding ground for alcoholics.

Spurt out statistics or lecture about the health complications associated with alcohol to a problem drinker and you will probably hear something similar to, "It's my life. I can handle it." Unfortunately, alcoholics affect the lives of many other people — people who cannot always handle this problem.

If you are a heavy drinker, you should consider the following questions when thinking about your future.

Do you want people to always be worrying about you? Do you want your spouse to be afraid to leave you alone with alcohol in the house? Do you want your family to be embarrassed of you when friends or neighbors are around? Do you want your family to be afraid of you when you drink? Do you want to black out or hallucinate in front of family or friends?

Do you want your family to worry that you will lose your job? Do you want co-workers to cover up for you or take your burden of the work because you are not capable of doing it? Do you want your child to be born with a birth defect? Do you want your child to suffer from symptoms common to many children of alcoholics? Do you want to kill someone while driving intoxicated?

By no means are these hypothetical questions.

Adult children of alcoholics have several of the same characteristics. Generally, they judge themselves very harshly, have an exaggerated sense of responsibility and are always trying to please others. The Counseling Center in Corr Hall (x4050) recognizes the difficulties children of alcoholics have and the need for them to discuss particular problems. An informational and support group has been organized and will begin meeting next week.

Alcohol more directly affects the lives of others when a person becomes violent when drinking. It is estimated that alcohol is involved in 50 percent of spouse abuse cases and 38 percent of child abuse cases, according to the National Council on Alcoholism, Inc.

About 4,800 babies are born annually with birth defects and accompanying mental retardation because of Fetal Alcohol Syndrom (FAS). FAS is the third leading cause of birth defects and the only preventable one of the top three.

Alcoholics affect the lives of more than just family and friends — they also have the potential to ruin the lives of strangers. In 1984, 23,500 highway deaths were alcohol-related. About 65 percent of Americans will be involved in an alcohol-related crash in their lifetimes.

Furthermore, 54 percent of people convicted of violent crimes were drinking before they committed the offense.

Do not become a statistic. The symptoms of alcoholism are: drinking heavily when depressed or under pressure; drinking large amounts without a problem; suffering blackouts or hallucinations; sneaking drinks; feeling distress if alcohol is not available in social situations; suffering from shakes; and drinking in the morning.

If you are one of the approximately 12.1 million Americans suffering from one or more of these symptoms, face your problem and do something about it — if not for yourself, for others. Remember that you may think drinking is fun, but it is no party for those affected by your habit.

Confirm Bork's nomination

By MARK CUTHBERTSON

When asked whether blacks or women had anything to fear from Judge Robert Bork, former Chief Justice Warren Burger said, "If they need to fear him, they should have feared me. I can see nothing in his record to support that." Enough already, I thought. Bork should certainly be confirmed.

Then a pang of conscience hit me and I had second thoughts. I think it was a vision in the form of Arthur Schlessinger and it said, "Mark, Mark, your Republican father is smirking at this very moment. Don't play devil's advocate against our liberal friends. Don't desert Teddy Kennedy, Paul Simon and Joe Kinnock, oops, I mean Joe Biden."

"No it's been too much," I responded, "The liberals have lost their credibility on this one. "Bork is the man for the job." And with that the vision disappeared.

I meant it. I really cannot believe the opinion of Kennedy when he denounced Bork's appointment hours after it was announced, while other judiciary committee members have spent the better part of the summer studying the judge's career and are still undecided.

As for Biden and Simon, their credibility is also clouded by their aspirations. Do you really want me to believe that they could afford to cut the lifeline of grassroots liberal support that Bork opponents would provide them with?

The liberal interest groups do not fare much better in the credibility department. I though disinformation and hyperbole was a tactic perfected by the right in this country and, much to my surprise, my liberal friends are equally as adept in this tactic.

Well, I think I have said enough about Bork's detractors. It is time to address the salient criticisms of Bork. The first and most emotionally charged of these is Bork's criticism of the Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion — Roe vs. Wade.

Bork is of the opinion that Roe vs. Wade stands on very shaky legal foundations. This opinion is shared by many prominent legal scholars. The fact is that we should not just be satisfied with the results of a law because if this law is not firmly rooted in our Constitution, it is bound to come crashing down in a future test case.

Another claim is that Bork is a radical conservative. People who make this charge largely point to the academic writings of Bork.

I think former attorrney General under Jimmy Carter, Griffin Bell provided an eloquent response to this charge when he stated, "We have to be very careful in this country. We do it from time to time; we become anti-intellectual. It would be easy to get somebody confirmed who has never done anything, who has never taken a controversial position on anything, but that is not the type of person we want."

The next complaint about Bork is that he cannot find a right to privacy in the constitution, I do not think I really want an unelected judged defining such a personal thing since I am free from government coercion. I think that this sort of thing is more appropriately left to the legislatures in our country. The legitimate criticism of the Roe and Griswold cases are that their formulation rested more upon the personal view of the judges in the cases rather than a firm legal basis. Such as unprincipled application of law by a lifetime appointee presents a serious problem to the working of a representative democracy.

Perhaps I have been deluded by the memory of the Iran/Contra hearings. Maybe I became so accustomed to lies and extra-constitutional ideas that Bork's engaging and intelligent testimony was too much of a change.

ROBERT BORK — Waghorn

Just maybe I have been fooled into thinking he will make a decent justice.

"No, Arthur," I am convinced that Bork has the potential to be one of the finest Supreme Court justices in our history.

American political parties in a rut

By G.J. DONNELLY

Just when you thought you could understand politics, particularly American politics, something weird pops up to ruin your comprehension. With the events that transpired over the last two weeks, there is hardly a wonder why apathy exists among so many in the population.

Between Joseph Biden's abrupt withdrawal from the Democratic presidential race and Pat Robertson's strong showing in Iowa among GOP voters, the political climate of this country is rapidly taking a strange shape.

Biden, hit with allegations of pinching speech material from leaders such as Robert Kennedy and Britain's Labor Party Leader Neil Kinnock, has now all but demolished any chance he will ever have of sitting behind the big desk in the Oval Office.

If that was not enough, he has now aroused suspicion among his own constituency in Delaware, while unwittingly placing Robert Bork one step closer to a seat on the Supreme Court, which is probably fine with Robertson, though not with his fellow democrats.

The nation's senior political party is now fighting the haunting memories of past scandals, knocking off their most eligible presidential timber. Only last May did the pariah of scandal nab Gary Hart from contention for alleged extramarital activities with Donna Rice. Edward Kennedy's shining star sank into the river (along with his car and Mary Jo Kopechne) after the events at Chappaquiddick manifested themselves publicly.

Now, as a result of all this, some members of the public have turned their attentions toward politicans such as Robertson, a smooth-talking, faith-healing, narrow-minded religious magnate, who, through the power of his own television empire and a chipmunk smile, has carved himself out a nice portion of the republican cake.

Robertson's gains these past weeks have been considerable. In Iowa, he won a local primary with 34 percent of the vote, nine points higher than the nearest challenger, Robert Dole. He also claimed that he had 3.3 million signatures on a petition supporting his candidacy. In addition, Robertson wrested control of the GOP machine in Michigan, giving him the greatest allocation of Michigan delegates for the party convention next year.

Although Robertson has coolly assured opponents that he will not, if elected, choose administration posts on the basis of religion, he has admitted that non-believers would have no place with him because he does not "think atheists have their act together."

The GOP challengers to Robertson have been taken aback, to say the least. George Bush finished a distant third in Iowa with a scant 23 percent of the vote. One Robertson aide quipped to Time magazine that, "The vice-president is reeling." Dole's campaign was hampered by his wife Elizabeth's reluctance to give up her position as secretary of transportation.

Needless to say, the political parties of America are in a rut. Things are so lame at this point that there has even been talk of Oliver North running (though only by a small collection of T-shirts, bumperstickers and, of course, the National Enquirer). Perhaps this is the price we pay for a powerful media.

In a recent class of mine, my professor remarked that the old days of the political bosses had gone in favor of the wolves of the media. He also said that however we feel about this is irrelevant because there is precious little we can do about it now. This intrigued me because it logically refuted two myths of the media, one, that it holds a bias against conservatives and, two, that it decides who or who will not be our nation's leaders.

As for the former, if the media held such a bias against the right, why, my conservative friends, have they scandalized two liberals in the last six months, while publicizing Pat Robertson and his causes?

As for the latter, could any scandals occur or any elections take place without the people to react to them? It is the American people who decide the leaders of this country, not some nitwit sitting behind a news desk. That is why we have so many newspapers, competing television news broadcasts and other outlets for opinion and discussion. I mean it is not like all we have here is Pravda; is it?

Committee assists homeless in Phila.

To the Editor:

Why would 100 people gather on a Wednesday night in Alumni Gym? A big party ... no that is not it. Perhaps an all-star basketball game ... no that is not it either. One hundred Villanovans gathered on Sept. 23 to commit themselves to the homeless persons of Philadelphia by becoming members of the Villanova Committee for the Philadelphia Homeless (VCPH).

VCPH, now in its fifth year, began a new year of volunteering time and spirit to the homeless on Oct. 1. With this new year comes many new faces and new ideas, but still the traditional goal of aiding the homeless remains.

The 1987-88 VCPH committee chairpeople are: Amy Neitzel and Dean Walsh (education committee); Brad Compton, Paul Dorsey and Nora Corcoran (street outreach committee); Mary Beth Donahue and Steve McNally (the environmental committee); and Mary Pat Parducci and myself (soup kitchen committee). Last, but by no means least, is Noreen Cameron, the campus ministry coordinator for the committee.

As a committee, we formed goals, tossed around new ideas and made decisions for the upcoming year. Our first goal was promotion; we wanted to attract people to the committee. We designed and posted posters, we advertised in the Villanovan, addressed special interests groups such as the incoming freshmen, the Greeks and previous committee members.

Lo and behold, the huge turnout and sign-up surpassed all of our goals. I would like to take this time to thank all of you who have become a part of this committee — without you, the volunteers, there would be no committee. Thanks.

This year the committee will venture into new facets of volunteering. A monthly blanket drive; the handing out of bologna and cheese sandwiches, as well as peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, on the streets; participation in the Habitat for Humanity; and a push for better campus education about the homeless. The blankets provide warmth, the new sandwiches provide variety in food, the habitat participation provides homes and the education provides knowledge and understanding. Indeed, we are off to a new year, a good year.

Alcohol: When use becomes abuse

By NOEL E. FALCO

A college scene, spring 1987: This is a true story about a fraternity party at a major state university:

Students cram into a party at a fraternity house during a mandatory dry rush [rush without alcoholic beverages]. However, here beer gave way to hard liquor as students played quarters with shots of vodka and schnapps.

As the night wore on, and pitchers of mixed drinks kept flowing, one student leaned over a burning "party" candle in order to change the record on the stereo.

Fire burned his sleeve and quickly spread to his back.

Taking a strong hold of him, I tried to force him to the ground to put out the flames. He panicked and fled.

It took five dazed brothers to restrain him and put out the flames. Ten minutes later they were still deliberating over what course of action to take.

We've become more responsible about drinking and driving because we hear about the deaths. You don't hear about the people dying of alcohol.
Janice Janosik
director of the Drug and Alcohol Intervention Center

As the student lay screaming and writhing in pain on the floor, his "brothers" decided to keep the incident quiet. They feared getting in trouble with alumni and losing their charter for serving alcohol during dry rush.

They decided to try to find some ice for his charred flesh, which obviously bore second-degree burns. The smell of burnt flesh permeated the room, and cries of agony continued.

I grabbed the phone to call for an ambulance, but a brother forced it from my hand. "We'll take care of it," he said.

They made the student walk two blocks in the cold March air to a car in which he was taken to a clinic. Only one brother stayed with him because the rest were too drunk. Too drunk ...

They were too drunk to handle a life-threatening situation, too drunk to discern between saving a life and losing a fraternity charter.

Alcohol abuse both created a dangerous situation and clouded the clear thinking needed in this situation.

If only we did not place so much emphasis on alcohol at social events, there would not have been a need to have a party during dry rush. If alcohol had not been abused, the student might not have reached over the flame. He might have been able to react better. The brothers might have handled the situation in a more appropriate manner. Life would have taken priority over alcohol.

Jan Janosik, director of the Drug and Alcohol Intervention Center, said, "How could drinking be worth a life? It's with those kind of attitudes and situations that I'm worried that people could get injured or killed.

"I've heard of fraternities leaving a drunken pledge outside a hall because the fraternity doesn't want to get in trouble ... but this guy could just lay there and die," Janosik commented.

"We've become more responsible about drinking and driving because we hear about the deaths. You don't hear about the people dying of alcohol," Janosik said.

The use of alcohol can quickly become abuse when it threatens the well-being, even the life, of others or ourselves.

South Campus battles Quad

By JACQUELINE GENTILE

It is 4 a.m. You are sleeping soundly. Suddenly you are jolted awake. It sounds as though there is an explosion outside which is followed by an instantaneous round of cheers. What could it be?

If you have ever had an experience similar to this one, chances are you live in the quad.

People do agree that both Sheehan and Sullivan have their inconveniences. Sullivan resident Peter Burke feels the noise sometimes "just gets too loud."

Other students find hall phones annoying because they ring for a long time before being answered, and often messages are not delivered.

Despite these conditions, there are students who would live nowhere on campus besides the quad. On the other hand, many people feel just as strongly about living on south campus.

What is it that these two very different sections of campus, south campus and the quad, have that attracts students?

Burke feels that Sullivan Hall is the place for him. Although the dorm is loud, it is close to classroom buildings. And Burke added that he likes "being in the center of things."

Many quad residents do not seem to be bothered by the noise. They feel that there are always other places to study if the dorms are too loud.

Moreover, the quad seems to be quite a social center on campus. "It's the best place to start a snowball fight," commented Sheehan resident Jill Savoy.

Xabier Geurricagoitia wasted no words explaining why he chose to live in Sullivan Hall. His reasons? "Location and atmosphere."

For those students who feel south campus is the place to live, they have the benefits of air conditioning, carpeting, private phones and a new dining hall.

Stanford residents enjoy having access to the weight room in the basement and the basketball courts located right outside the dormitory.

Mike Luciani, a resident of Stanford, who lived on main campus last year, feels the security is tighter on south campus. The entrances to south campus dormitories are always locked during curfew hours and security guards patrol the area effectively.

Other south campus residents feel they have good security because their rooms cannot be easily broken into, whereas Sheehan and Sullivan rooms can be easily broken into if the doors are not bolted.

Stanford resident Tom Kurke explained that, socially, Stanford Hall is "perfect." He believes a hall such as Delurey is too out of the way, while Sullivan is "too wild." For him, Stanford is a happy medium.

No south campus residents seemed to be bothered by the walk to main campus, except during the winter months when snow is not always cleared from the south campus path that leads to the chapel.

Finally, many Stanford residents said that they are very happy with the male-to-female ratio on south campus.

Falvey meets the computer age

By TARA SILIGATO

The Falvey Memorial Library has long been the center for quiet, as well as social, study for Villanova students. It provides them with a place away from the noise of the dorms so they can get their work accomplished. These days, the library is keeping up with the times and is entering the computer age.

The computer system is already in use in some areas of the library, such as circulation and the reserve room. The cataloging module is in the process of being installed. Plans are also being made for an online public cataloging module allowing the students to access the database from various locations around the campus as well as from home computers through a telephone hookup.

The circulation module allows the library staff to locate a book at anytime, whether it is on the stacks or loaned out. This, according to Dr. Mary Ann Griffin, the library's Director, gives greater control in record-keeping.

The library can also keep track of borrowers' current standings. Information on overdue books, fees, etc. can be assessed quite easily and quickly this way, Griffin explained.

This computer system will enable the Falvey Memorial Library to expand and grow, and this will benefit the students, faculty and the school a great deal.

Specters haunt St. Mary's

By DANA RAO

Over the last week, numerous unexplained phenomena have been reported in the St. Mary's dormitory, causing confusion and mayhem. The first incident involved a resident on the third floor who claimed to have had a personal encounter with a supernatural force.

Apparently, the young man was being constrained by some kind of specter. He was pinned helplessly to his bed to the point of hysteria and had no explanation for this, the first, of the incidents. The following morning the victim was visibly shaken as he relayed his story to his skeptical friends, but little attention was paid to this harrowing experience.

Later that week, the visitor returned. The next victim said he was lying in bed when he heard a knock at his third-story window. Upon investigation, he found nothing and returned to bed. A few sleepless minutes later he heard the knock again.

Growing anxious, he returned to the window to investigate the source of this persistent noise. Once again nothing was seen, intensifying his fear to a near panic state. Any doubts he had as to the reality of the knocks were dispelled by a third repetition of the noise.

Completely unnerved, he checked the window for the final time only to find the blackness of the night sky. He retreated to the safety of his bed thoroughly spooked and unable to close his eyes the rest of the night.

The next day, rumors of ghosts ran rampant through St. Mary's, which were supported by yet another experience.

The forces moved to the second floor when two students in adjacent rooms heard persistent and peculiar sounds they found difficult to describe. They could only explain that it sounded like a metal object falling on the floor, but the sounds seemed to surround the entire room.

The neighbors had no rational explanation as to what they heard, especially considering that the noises were heard after 2 a.m.

As the mysteries mount, one must consider the possibility that these stories, told in total seriousness, are true. But could it be the tomfoolery of jealous Stanford residents not able to attain admittance into the St. Mary's Country Club? Or possibly it could be a plot by a team of Corr Hall students attempting to scare their way into a few more square feet of room.

Opinions will vary and criticisms will be heard, but one thing is certain: If there are ghosts at St. Mary's, they have not come for the nightlife.

Small Business Development Office

Students help businesses

By KAREN IOVINO

Located in the basement of Sheehan Hall is a very useful organization that deserves more recognition than it currently receives. This organization is the Small Business Development Center (SBDC).

Started in 1972, the SBDC is a non-profit, volunteer organization. Student run, officers for SBDC this year are Patty Haemmerle and Stephen Colanero, co-directors, Kathleen Kelly, secretary, and Terry Simmons, field director. Professor Wesley E. Schwarz serves as faculty advisor.

Comprised of approximately 50 students, the SBDC consults and counsels small businesses on or around the Main Line. The students themselves actually advise these businesses in such areas as bookkeeping, marketing, sales and management.

The society is broken up into five groups handling five different cases, each with a student group leader. Each group is also able to choose a faculty member to advise them.

As a result of being in the SBDC, students are able to apply what they have learned in classes to the real business world.

"In class, you don't get to see how actual businesses are run. As a member of the SBDC you actually get experience in the working world," said Colanero. In addition, Kelly stated that the SBDC gives the student "great experience not only applying what you have learned, but in working with and talking to people."

One example of the cases that the SBDC has handled include a restaurant that was interested in acquiring a computer system to help monitor inventory, personnel and payroll. The SBDC was able to outline the concerns of the owner and recommend a suitable computer system.

Currently, the organization is dealing with a company that sells technical products. The SBDC is helping this company choose a computer system and form an appropriate accounting method that corresponds with the computer.

In the past, the SBDC got their clients from the Small Business Administration (SBA). The SBA is a branch of the federal government that receives government grants to help floundering small businesses. In return, the businesses were required to seek counseling of some sort. These businesses are referred to the SBDC.

However, the SBA no longer receives these grants, and the SBDC must now rely on their reputation and advertising to gain clients.

The key to the SBDC is its people. Students who wish to be a part of this organization must be junior or senior commerce and finance majors with a GPA of at least 3.0. Applications are sent to qualified students over the summer.

This summer out of 700 applications, 200 were returned.

Colanero said, "The new application system that started this year has resulted in an overwhelming response, and we have plenty of enthusiastic volunteers to help us this year."

Colanero stressed that since the program runs from semester to semester, applications that were not accepted for the fall semester will still be considered for the spring semester.

Students who have not received an application and who would like to be a part of the SBDC can pick up an application at the office in the basement of Sheehan or can call the office at 645-4382 from 9 a.m.-5 p.m.

The program is different, exciting and definitely worthwhile. The usefulness of the SBDC is effectively summed up in Haemmerle's statement, "As students, it is hard to get adults to take you seriously. The SBDC gives you an edge in the working world."

Augustinian order preserves tradition

By STEPHEN POWERS

What is the Augustinian Historical Institute? What do they do? How do they do it? To be honest, before I got to Villanova, I had never even heard of the Augustinians, let alone the Augustinian Historical Institute. But I learned.

The office of the Augustinian Historical Institute is located on one side of the beautiful Falvey Memorial Library.

"Was the Augustinian Historical Institute founded by the Augustinians?" It turns out that it was, back in 1973, and is funded by Villanova University and the province of St. Augustine. Its purpose is to promote and research publications by Augustinians in philosophy, theology, missology and biography.

The board of directors runs the institute, and is made up of five members: the Rev. Joseph C. Schnaubelt, O.S.A., the Rev. Joseph Duffey, O.S.A.; the Rev. Michael Martel, O.S.A.; the Rev. Arthur J. Ennis, O.S.A.; and the Rev. John Driscoll, O.S.A., University president. Beside the board of directors, the institute is comprised of its members and four employees.

I also learned that the institute participates in numerous activities throughout the year. They maintain a non-circulating library of works by Augustinians. They sponsor the International Conference of Patristic, Medieval and Renaissance Studies (PMR Conference) annually. They also periodically sponsor archeological expeditions in Europe.

Currently, the institute is publishing a volume of papers of St. Anselm and an Augustinian North American biography. This biography contains everything that has been published by Augustinians who have lived or worked in North America.

At the conclusion of the interview, I was quite at ease. I just hope I made the article interesting to read. It is not that I am worried about the wrath of my editors, or even the possiblity of a lawsuit. It is the subject matter of the story. If I made any mistakes, I will have to answer to a...higher authority.

Alcohol Abuse Quiz

CONSIDER THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS:

Have you missed morning classes because of a hangover?

Do you occasionally use drugs or drink in order to forget or feel better about problems with your studies?

Have your family or friends complained about your drinking or drug use, or suggested that you cut down on your usage?

Have any of your family members had a problem with alcohol or drugs?

Do you act more quarrelsome or angry after a few drinks?

Do you usually choose people who drink or use drugs for your friends?

Do you feel guilty about your drinking behavior or drug use?

Do you ever notice if your hands shake when you wake up the next morning after drinking?

Have you used alcohol or drugs to calm nerves, reduce tension or relieve stress?

Do you ever have blackouts?

Have you felt a need to abstain from drinking or using drugs for a period of time?

Have you felt uncomfortable over a discussion of your drinking?

Have you been somewhat proud of your drinking behavior or drug use?

Have you taken a "double" of drugs or gulped drinks to feel the effect more quickly?

Is it difficult for you to enjoy a party or dance if there is nothing available to drink?

Campus battles

Main campus resident Maureen Dwyer, taking a different viewpoint, feels that south campus is a good place for freshmen to live. She believes it is easier to get to know people on south campus because the wings of residence halls are smaller than the wings of Sheehan and Sullivan.

Other residents feel it is good for students to experience life on both main and south campus. This enables students to meet different people and have friends on both areas of campus.

Students who have had this experience feel that a great difference between the two areas is that on main campus there are more places nearby to "hang out," and there is less of a tendency to simply stay in your room, as there is on south campus.

St. Monica resident Jen Pilling said she enjoys living on south campus because it is "like living in the suburbs as opposed to the city."

Having been a resident of both main campus and south campus, I would like to be able to have the best of both worlds. My solution: Move St. Monica's into the quad.

Special Olympics

By AMY PIEK

In just two days, the Pennsylvania Special Olympics will again be here at Villanova. For those of us who have been involved in the planning, it is indeed a very exciting and hectic time.

On Sunday, there will be soccer tournaments, team competitions, clinics and many other special events. These will be the activities that we as observers can watch, but what we must not forget is that there is much more going on.

I, like many others, will be out all day Sunday helping the athletes in their events and also ensuring that they enjoy the day. The commitment for some of us may be for the entire day, while for some others, the commitment has lasted several months.

What can we do as Christians to carry this commitment one step further? Let us make the effort to love and accept all people with disabilities. Let it not matter that they be physically or mentally handicapped.

One bumpersticker states that the "Disabled are able." I think that this is the idea or image that should stay with us. Not everyone will be a track star or world-renowned biologist, and that is okay.

In the book of Romans, Paul speaks about the way the Christian life should be lived, and especially about the way of love in relations with others.

We are all individuals called "to use our different gifts in accordance with the grace that God has given us." (Romans 12:6) Though the distinction has been made between individuals, we are all one and the same in God's kingdom.

The reason that many of us are involved in Special Olympics is because we realize that it is an exciting event on our campus. But more importantly, we are involved because the athletes enjoy it and have worked diligently to get where they are.

Maybe if you are a hugger, the athlete you support will win a ribbon, but then again maybe he will not. Once the whistle blows, you, as a hugger, can be assured, either way, of a huge hug and a smile from the athlete that simply will not be forgotten — a smile that comes all the way from inside. You will be a part of this, you will feel terrific, and you will only be watching from the sidelines.

Because I know that Special Olympics means so much to me, I wish that everyone on campus would and could participate. Even if you cannot be a part of Sunday's Special Olympics, there is still much that can be done. You can remember that the, "Disabled are able."

Knowing that we all have such different abilities makes it that much easier to remember the many simple things that can be done. You can cheer someone to victory, you can open a door or you can crack a smile — and know that God would want it that way.

Liability-conscious bars take action

By MEGAN GUIDERA and KATHRYN QUIGLEY

"Just say no," a phrase jeered and snickered at by many Americans, is the theme of first lady, Nancy Reagan's crusade against drug and alcohol abuse.

But, what happens when a paying customer in a profit making establishment says "yes" a few too many times and becomes intoxicated? Who takes responsibility? How do the men and women behind the bars and behind the trays handle a "drunk" while continuing to provide an entertaining atmosphere for other patrons?

In many states, if an individual who is visibly intoxicated leaves a bar or restaurant and incurs damages, the server, the manager on duty and the owner of the establishment can all be held responsible for injury.

This principle, called "dram shot liability," and social responsibility have motivated many local bars and restaurants to protect themselves by actively monitoring their customers alcoholic intake.

On an empty stomach, a 150-pound man who drinks four drinks in an hour will have a .10 blood alcohol content, making him legally drunk in Pennsylvania.

The fast pace of drinkers, the overcrowding of bars and the risk of liability have resulted in establishment owners training their employees to spot drunks and slow them down.

Smokey Joe's in Wayne allows designated drivers to indulge in free non-alcoholic beverages. The bartenders have attended various courses and seminars on spotting intoxicated customers.

Smokey Joe's manager, Paul Ryan, stated that, "Young people today are very conscious as opposed to five years ago — education is finally paying off." Ryan believes that it is best to get the friends of an intoxicated patron to be aware of the situation. Ryan also has a video camera running at the front door to protect his establishment from liability.

Bennigans in Devon claims not to have a large problem with intoxication. Bennigans' clientele is older, and the restaurant is smaller. Thus, they are not often faced with the question of liability.

Many other local restaurants and bars do cater to a larger and younger crowd that warrants more caution and protection for the establishment.

One such precaution is T.I.P.S. certification. T.I.P.S., meaning Training for Intervention Procedures by Servers of alcohol, is an eight-hour program consisting of films, speakers, pamphlets, role plays and a written test. If the server passes the test, he or she is registered in Washington, D.C., as being T.I.P.S. certified for the next three years.

The program provides the establishment with a more confident staff, a pleasant atmosphere and good public relations. Various insurance companies also give a 10 percent discount to restaurants who have more than 75 percent of their staff T.I.P.S. certified.

T.I.P.S. teaches servers absorption rate factors for alcohol, strategies for cutting off a drunk, alternatives to allowing a drunk to drive, gracious people skills and the servers' degree of responsibility.

Orleans Restaurant and Mardi Gras Cabaret in Paoli is one of the many local restaurants that have become T.I.P.S. certified within the past year.

This past May, Orleans Restaurant and Mardi Gras Cabaret in Paoli required all servers, bartenders, doormen and managers to become T.I.P.S. certified. Orleans manager, Tim Riley, stated that Orleans' size necessitated T.I.P.S. certification.

Orleans has three dining rooms, a greenhouse bar, a cabaret and a patio bar; thus, T.I.P.S. has been highly beneficial. Riley claimed that the T.I.P.S. program "makes one more aware of potential problems, and how to deal with and avoid potential problems."

Orleans also displays free food during happy hour and offers to call a taxi or friends to take home intoxicated customers.

In Strafford, the Main Lion's employees recently went through T.I.P.S. certification. Manager Tom Stelzer believes that his restaurant does a great deal of "flagging" (cutting off an intoxicated party). Stelzer said, "We take great pride in making sure we have no drunks in the restaurant. We are here for everyone to have fun, but we don't want to see [intoxicated people] get behind the wheel."

The Main Lion offers a gift certificate for Sunday Brunch to people who appoint themselves the designated driver and refrain from drinking alcohol.

Other local restaurants and bars such as Al E. Gators, Montana's, John Barleycorns, Friendly's and The 23 East Cabaret are T.I.P.S. certified and have free soda for designated drivers. Many such restaurants offer "virgin" (that is, non-alcoholic) drinks, coladas or mimosas.

In the social atmosphere of restaurants and bars it has become increasingly easy for bar hoppers to lose their inhibitions in alcohol. Thus, as the customers lose their sense of responsibility, the restaurants or bars must heighten their staff's knowledge of the pleasures, powers and perils of alcohol.

Ardmore's 23 East Cabaret turns 7 years old

By KATHRYN S. QUIGLEY

The 23 East Cabaret in Ardmore turns seven years old today. To celebrate, the owners and operators of the club are throwing a party.

Tonight, Skip Castro headlines with his boogie-woogie brand of rock. Area favorite The Faction will be opening for him. Skip Castro plays Saturday night as well, followed by Nik Everett.

Pierre Robert of radio station WMMR is hosting the festivities on Saturday night. The 23 East Cabaret is throwing Robert a surprise party, because it is his birthday as well.

The Cabaret will be decorated all weekend, and prizes, such as a one-year pass will be given away. In addition, everyone who visits the Cabaret will receive a favor. The cover both nights is $5.

I spoke recently with Greg Mountain, the booking agent of the club. We talked about the Cabaret's beginnings.

"The club came about from a group of friends who had met at West Chester State University. Alan Berger started the West Chester Cabaret about nine years ago, but it was too small, so it was sold four years ago."

Berger is the principal owner of the club. He got together with James Mascara and Steve Mountain. They took over the Sly Fox, a sleazy bar in Ardmore, and renamed it the 23 East Cabaret.

The club was so successful that, a year later, they opened the Chestnut Cabaret in Philadelphia, and soon after that, the Ambler Cabaret.

Presently, Mountain is the general manager and Steve Mountain is the [illegible] manager.

I asked Greg Mountain what sets the 23 East apart from other Main Line bars.

"I think the music sets us apart." According to Greg Mountain, selling liquor is not the main focus of the Cabaret. "While we need alcohol sales to stay in business, we've never been known as a drink-your-face-off place." There is no minimum for drinks. The music is the selling point.

Live bands play at the Cabaret from Tuesday through Thursday nights. A short listing of bands who have played the Cabaret include The Guess Who, Nils Lofgren, Robert Hazard, Mason Ruffner, Bricklin, Ben Vaughn Combo, The Band, The Hooters and Tommy Conwell and the Young Rumblers.

There is music, but the 23 East is far from being a disco. Greg Mountain said that people should be able to come in, meet others and enjoy music in a clean atmosphere.

"We're not a yuppie place like Pulsations, where people come in wearing their fancy suits. It's not a pick-up place like Bennigans. It's a place for real people," said Greg Mountain.

Greg Mountain also pointed out that the 23 East may not be for every college student — only those who are musically inclined and who "... care about real music."

The offices of the 23 East are above the Cabaret. They are anything but plush and are filled with people in jeans and sneakers answering the many ringing phones.

The walls of Greg Mountain's office are filled with demo tapes sent in by hopeful bands. He says they get [illegible] a week. Since they are the ones who pass on bands and who does not?

He listens to the tape, reads the press kit and looks at the pictures. I asked if there was a trend in the sound of the tapes he received.

"Last year everyone sounded like REM and this year it's U2. Everyone wants to sound like the Edge," according to Greg Mountain.

The bands that get asked to perform have a combination of qualities.

"They have the talent, music, songs, looks and personality." Greg Mountain said that the Cabaret makes an investment when putting a band on stage. They do not want bands that will self destruct through drug and alcohol abuse.

"I'm not going to condemn anyone, but it shouldn't affect their work. If the band can be self-indulgent and self-destructive, I don't think we have to subject our customers to that," Greg Mountain said.

The Cabarets — 23 East, Chestnut and Ambler — are very involved in promoting local talent.

"I think some of the best bands around are from this area," said Greg Mountain, who sees the Cabaret as a halfway point between being a nobody and being "somebody." He mentioned Bricklin and Dynagroove as examples.

The Hooters have passed the halfway stage — they are definitely "somebodies." Tommy Conwell and the Young Rumblers will soon follow suit.

"Maybe if it weren't for the Cabarets, the Hooters wouldn't be here. That's what they taught us," Greg Mountain said.

I asked him if he minded when his former headline bands made it big and never came back.

Greg Mountain replied, "If bands get big and don't come back, that's the way it's supposed to be. Tommy Conwell has to be gone before other bands can come in."

Skip Castro will be appearing at the 23 East Cabaret in Ardmore tonight and tomorrow to help Cabaret celebrate its seventh anniversary.

'Duddy Kravitz' plays at the Zellerbach Theater

By RICHARD ABRAHAM

If you enjoy reading a review on a musical that is worth your while, read on. If not, you can always rush to the end of this article for some information on intriguing activities involving music theater.

First, here is the review. "The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz" started its run at the Zellerbach Theater a short while ago and will continue to play there until Oct. 11. It is fun. It is tuneful. It is sad. And, basically, it is good.

Set primarily in Montreal during the 1950s, the play focuses on the lively ambitions of Duddy Kravitz, a small-town Jewish boy who wants to own land in order to earn the respect of his grandfather and to become a 'somebody.'

Set primarily in Montreal during the 1950s, it focuses on the lively ambitions of Duddy Kravitz, a small-town Jewish boy who wants to own land in order to earn the respect of his grandfather and to become a "somebody."

On his way, however, Duddy's drive blinds him to the methods he uses to reach his goals. He steps on and injures the people he loves. He betrays their affection too often and lets his affections be clouded by his need to reach his dreamy ambitions.

Despite this, "Duddy," at times, is an uplifting production. Duddy shows us just how kind he can be when his ambitions are supplanted by family concern. This concern leads one to sympathize with him and forgive, somewhat, his occasionally poor behavior by attributing it to youthful energy and drive.

Lonny Price as Duddy expertly supports Alan Menken's ("Little Shop of Horrors") composition and the lyrics of David Spencer, who wrote the acclaimed English version of "La Boheme" for Public Theater. Price also manages to epitomize the youthful energy and verve of Duddy on-stage without wearing the audience out in the process.

Heading the rest of a fine cast was Anne Marie Bobby as Yvette, Duddy's hopeful and responsible love. A highlight of the production comes when Bobby and Price perform "Welcome Home," a forgiving duet. Other songs range from humorous to regretful to celebratory. All in all, the emotional intent of these performances is well-expressed, even though it would not be a best-selling cast album.

Also in the musical's favor is the unique manner in which Clarke Dunham handles the scenic design. The settings roll on and

SUB BATTLE SIMULATOR ••••• EPYX C64/128, AP, IBM

There are a few submarine simulations on the market right now, but this release from Epyx may just beat all others for realism and historical accuracy. Sub Battle Simulator puts you in one of six submarines, either German Kriegsmarine U-Boats or U.S. Navy subs. Your goal is to perform one of 60 missions or, if you choose to take on the challenge, to last throughout the entire war. This game is nothing to sneeze at.

Before you enter the water, you must learn how your sub operates, including all of the stations and commands at your disposal. There are six display screens used in the game depending on what you are doing at the time. You must perform navigation, repairs, communications and captain's duties all at the same time.

In order to sink enemy vessels, there is a wide selection of weapons, ranging from anti-aircraft guns to torpedoes and mines. Also, to aid knowledge of your sub, the same manual includes data on the types of subs used and a historical summary of submarine warfare.

If the game itself has not sold itself to you by now, let the rest of the features included with Sub Battle Simulator do the trick. A placard is included that shows all of the keyboard commands on one side and the levels of play on the other. The manual includes diagrams of every enemy vessel as well as a description of how to read the maps of over 196,000 nautical miles at your disposal. Excellent graphics top off Sub Battle Simulator's features.

GUDERIAN ••••• THE AVALON HILL GAME COMPANY C64/128, AT

War games sometimes are boring and too tedious to learn because of a long list of commands and pages of instructions. Guderian has none of those characteristics and allows you to use a joystick to play what is essentially an easy to play game. The manual is only 12 pages long, but that is all you will need to experience this excellent simulation of World War II.

In Guderian, you take the place of General Heinz Guderian, the man who perfected blitzkrieg warfare in the war. You must try to drive through to Moscow and defeat all Soviet units that you meet along the way. If the side you pick is the Russian one, then expect a tough assignment — you must protect your motherland from the German invaders. A great feature of Guderian is that you can play the game solitaire on either side or in a two-player game.

Guderian is entirely joystick-driven, which translates to an easier method of commanding your troops on the screen. The graphics are detailed enough to tell which units are which and where they are located in Russia, but as in any game of this nature, simple graphics are all that are needed. To facilitate play of the game, a map of central Russia as needed for the game is included with a detailed legend. This map becomes very useful in the game.

Although I would not classify Guderian as a beginner's war game, it can be used for that purpose. A tutorial is included for those who feel queasy embarking on a new adventure. Guderian is instead a challenging war game that will test the skills of new and old players alike.

RUSSIA ••••• SSG/ ELECTRONIC ARTS C64/128, AP

Russia is the most impressive war game/historical simulation to be offered to the public that I have seen since the last SSG game was released. SSG's approach to the design of such a game is so exhaustive that there is not anything more that the potential gamer could ask for, except maybe the date that the next SSG game will be produced. Russia takes four years from World War II and places them on a disk intact.

Russia deals with the German-Soviet confrontation that took place between 1941 and 1945, otherwise known as The Great War in the East. You can choose to be on either side and even scale the game according to your skill level. You can decide to take only a certain amount of units in a game or to command the whole army at one shot, essentially reproducing the battle. Even more interesting is the fact that the outcome is entirely up to the way the game is played — history can be changed on your computer.

The small package that Russia comes in does not do justice to the enormous amount of information it contains. The manual is 72 pages of vital information and playing aids. Although I tend to push away games that come with such large manuals, in the case of Russia I make an exception. The pages contain a very succinct guide to playing the game, as well as offer hints and historical information about the war.

If the manual is not enough to grab your interest, consider the detailed graphics and menu-driven system that Russia uses. You can easily see where your units are and how to move them. Also included are a map and menu card for both sides in the battle as well as two general menu cards for the whole game. These cards show all options and have lines that connect a command to the other menus it activates. As one last example of the effort put into Russia, consider the disk labels for your save disks — everything but the kitchen sink is included.

DARKHORN ••••½ THE AVALON HILL GAME COMPANY C64/128, AP

Never has a game that is so simple to play offered as much entertainment as this fantasy game from Avalon Hill. There are essentially only four or five main commands, with movement taking up the rest of the options. Still, where Darkhorn wins is in the area of playability and challenge. It offers a game that can last 30 minutes or a few hours.

In Darkhorn, up to four players can participate, with the computer taking the place of the remaining players so that four armies are commanded in the game. These four armies consist of men, dwarves and elves who are competing in a battle to end all battles. The game takes place at the foot of a peak called Darkhorn and the winner of the battle has to defeat the evil Darklord who is looking over the entire conflict.

The different thing about Darkhorn is that the four players can play simultaneously: one at the keyboard, one on a joystick and two on a set of paddles. The commands at your disposal are: Deploy, Switch, Fortify and Recruit. The button is used for combat on the paddles and joystick. In either case, this method of game play is unique.

A reference card that shows all available commands and explains some other vital pieces of information comes packaged with Darkhorn. The graphics in the game are of average standards and the maps that you play on are randomly generated so that no two games are alike. All in all, Darkhorn earns its keep.

GUILD OF THEIVES •••• FIREBIRD C64/128, AMIGA, ST, AP, AT, MAC, IBM

In this sequel to The Pawn, Firebird has captured on a disk a distinct sense of humor and excellence in game play unique to their company's products. Guild of Thieves is a text-and-graphics adventure that takes place in the land of Kerovnia. On any system, the graphics are superb and worthy of the price of the game alone. Still, Guild of Thieves offers more.

In the game, you have signed a contract with the Guild of Thieves in order to become one of them and you must do their bidding. They instruct you as to what to steal and you must set out to "obtain" these items. If you fail, you forfeit your membership; if you succeed, you will be given another task until you have met the standards of the Guild. In any case, the humor contained in the game makes it that much better.

Guild of Thieves is a challenge, but stealing could never be so fun. The game comes packaged with a manual printed on parchment paper that contains clues to solving puzzles in the game. Keeping with the spirit of the game, you also get a Bank of Kerovnia card and a die. Playing Guild of Thieves will stretch your imagination, so run out and get it today.

SANXION •••½ ELECTRONIC ARTS C64/128

In this newest member of the Amazing Software line from Electronic Arts, you command a Sanxion ship in a shoot-em-up that has topped the charts in England already. Sanxion places you against alien invaders and you must blast them away before they destroy you. After finishing off a sector of aliens, you must pass a training course.

In the training course, aliens are marked with a letter that dictates what you must do to them: shoot (S), collide (C), or pick up (P). Passing the training course brings your Sanxion ship to another sector.

The graphics used for Sanxion are excellent. The ships are clearly drawn and the colors used are visually pleasing. Special effects and 3-D landscapes abound in Sanxion as well as unique sounds and music. The ultimate test lies in the play of the game, so give Sanxion a try today.

Twisted Sister brings tour to the Tower Theater

By ALLEN AMBROSINO
and
JEFF GILLIES

The Tower Theater rocked last Tuesday night to the heavy metal music of TNT, Great White and Twisted Sister. This three-and-one-half-hour metal marathon had everyone in the audience going crazy. The show was Twisted Sister's first in Philadelphia in over a year and a half.

As Twisted Sister fans waited anxiously, TNT opened the show with an electrifying set of head-banging metal to promote their new album Tell No Tales. TNT, which previously had trouble finding a big name act to open for, received their big break from Twisted Sister's singer Dee Snider. TNT singer Toni Harnell, who hails from Philadelphia, and Snider are close friends.

TNT, however, proved themselves to be more than worthy of the opportunity with a solid series of explosive metal songs. The entire crowd jumped to its feet as the band tore into "Seven Seas" and "Ten Thousand Lovers In One." The set ended with "Everyone's A Star," as TNT received a rousing ovation.

With the crowd already overflowing with enthusiasm, Great White took the stage. They opened with "Shot In The Dark" and continued with more hard-driving metal. Singer Jack Russell sprayed the audience with water and got things moving by shouting a few vulgarities.

Security also got into the act, as a strung-out spectator climbed on stage and performed a short air-guitar solo. He was thrown head-first into the crowd and consequently was escorted to the door. "All Over Now" was following by an incredible drum solo. The drummer, Audie Desbrow audaciously pounded away as the sounds of rapid gunfire echoed throughout the arena.

"Rock Me" closed the set, but Great White was quickly called back for an encore. Saving the best for last, Great White had the audience shouting the chorus of "On Your Knees." Great White was both powerful and energetic, and should emerge as one of the top new metal bands.

The opening acts were so impressive that there was speculation that Twisted Sister would be upstaged. However, this was not to be, as Sister ripped into a vivacious rendition of "You Can't Stop Rock and Roll." Snider talked to the audience throughout, beginning with the opening of "I Believe in Rock and Roll." Snider went on to degrade Michael Jackson and his music by referring to him with several obscenities. In introducing "I'm So Hot For You," Snider explained how this song reminded him of his sexual experiences and encounters.

After running through some old material and "Hot Love" from the new album, Love Is For Suckers, Twisted Sister got down to some serious rock-and-roll. "The Price," the band's slowest song, was a change of pace that was nothing

Marita's Cantina offers spicy Mexican food

By THERESA JONES

A young man comes from India, studies at the University of Pennsylvania, and then decides to open a Mexican restaurant in Bryn Mawr in what used to be a strip-tease joint.

Unlikely story, you say? Maybe so, but this is the land of opportunity, where (almost) any dream can come true. And if Toshar Mody's dream was to have a successful Mexican restaurant on the Main Line, he must be sleeping like a baby.

Marita's Cantina, just down Lancaster Avenue from Barleycorn's Pub, was opened at the end of July, and it seems to be enjoying immediate success. I know some of my fellow classmates have already experienced the Marita's margarita (what a line that was at Barleycorn's!), but for those of you who have neither sampled the spirits nor nibbled on the nachos, read on!

I have recently become a Mexican food fanatic, and was more than willing to give my commentary on Marita's for the sake of the Villanova population. My three companions and I decided to make a concerted effort to sample as many items from the menu as possible, all in the name of research of course.

This was no easy task, for the menu is quite extensive, catering to anyone looking for that southwestern spice. And for those unadverturous people who insist on the American favorites, those are available as well.

After we were seated by a friendly hostess and presented with the complimentary chips (deliciously warm) with salsa and hot diced jalapenos, we began perusing the Cantina selections. Cocktails, domestic and a variety of imported beers (including Dos Equis, of course), and non-alcoholic blended fruity drinks accompany the traditional margaritas, pina coladas, daiquiris and sangria.

My margarita was very tasty, and thanks to the generosity of owner and host, Mody, we were able to sample both the red and the white sangria. (Mody recommends the white especially because he makes it himself. According to Mody, the secret is that the white is a bit more potent.) The quality of the drinks was good — not watered down, and very flavorful.

For an appetizer, two of my friends opted for the black bean soup. It may not sound great, and to be honest it does not look especially appetizing, but with the melted cheese, onions and sherry (optional), it is rather tasty. The chili con carne may be a disappointment for those looking for the hot stuff, but for those with the tamer tastebuds, the taste is pleasing. I opted for the quesadilla with guacamole, my personal favorite, and while the best quesadilla I ever had came from a greasy Mexican fast-food joint in San Diego, Marita's gave it a run for its money.

Marita's is certainly not stingy with its portions, and when salads followed the appetizers, we began to wonder if we would have room for the main course. Unfortunately, the service was a bit slow and we had too much time to think about how much food we were eating.

The entrees, plates full of Mexican treats, finally arrived: enchiladas with our choice of filling (which could have been a little warmer); cheese stuffed mild peppers fried in a light batter; fajitas, served as a plate of sizzling goodies with which you create your own tortilla concoctions and, of course, plenty of Mexican rice and refried beans.

At first sight, we knew "doggy-bags" would be a necessity. At first taste, we were already looking forward to the next night's leftovers. Solely for sake of my readers, I ordered a dessert of fried ice cream (with four spoons). Again, this was not an easy choice because the dessert options are as appealing as the rest of the menu. The treat was delicious, and just the right size to please four overeaters.

As I write this, the rest of my chile relleno is reheating, and the aroma is luring me away from my typewriter. Before I leave you and return to enjoy the second half of my dinner, let me add a few comments.

I was very impressed with the selection, quality and quantity of the food at Marita's. The service was friendly, and while not spotless, the restaurant is clean and decorated in a smooth contemporary style, creating a comfortable atmosphere. The patrons that Sunday evening included students, as well as couples and families, all equally welcome.

At this point you may be figuring the price range to be beyond that of the typical college budget; not true. One could order appetizers from the "a la carte" section and walk away far from still being hungry. The prices are very reasonable, another added attraction.

The same menu is available for lunch, and Marita's also offers take-out. So if you have not tried this treasure, I urge you to take advantage at the first opportunity. Whether just munching on the Mexican pizza with a pitcher of margaritas, or enjoying a full feast, you are bound to agree that Marita's Cantina is not only Mody's dream come true, but the Main Line's Mexican food fans' dream as well.

WOW! is less than a thrill

By KATHRYN S. QUIGLEY

WOW!
Bananarama
Polygram
★½

Bananarama, Britain's most successful "girl" group has released their new album, titled WOW! Do not, however, cut class, hot wire a car and get a ticket for speeding on the way to the record store. It is techno-syntho garbage.

Siobhan Fahey, Keren Woodward and Sarah Dallin are Bananarama. Their last album, True Confessions, went gold. Their remake of "Venus" hit No. 1 on the charts in the United States.

Presently, "I Heard A Rumor" from the WOW! LP is climbing the charts. It is an okay dance tune. However, the whole album sounds just like the first single. It gets very boring very quickly.

The first cut on the album is "Strike It Rich." The song starts out with the group yelling, "Ain't life a bitch?" The lyrics go something like: "You have to take control/and you can never stop/ You have to keep on climbing/till you reach the top." Are the members of Bananarama secretly yuppies?

Also on side one, is a remake of the Supremes song, "Nathan Jones." It is long and repetitive.

The rest of the songs on the first side, as well as most of the second side, whine about men.

"You took my heart without explaining," they sing in "I Want You Back." "I keep thinking about those lonely nights when I waited for your call," is from "I Heard A Rumor," and "Come back with my heart ..." is from "Come Back."

I admit that not many people look to Bananarama for the answers to life's questions, but I thought there would be at least one interesting lyric on the album. What ever happened to "Robert DeNiro's Waiting?" That was a funny, different song. While reviewing this album, I kept wondering, "Is it over yet?"

Now, do not get me wrong, the album is not totally worthless. It's bubblegum pop that makes okay dance music. As they say on American Bandstand when rating records, I give it a 70. It has a good beat and you can dance to it. Just do not pay money for the album.

"The Golden Boys of Rock 'N' Roll" warmed up a near-capacity crowd after a cold, wet Saturday of tailgating and football. The boys brought to life parents and students alike as they communicated in the common language of rock and roll.

Unfortunately, one of the Golden Boys, Bobby Rydell, was unable to make the show because of a recent operation of a slipped disc. However, the remaining two rockers from the bobby sox era, Fabian and Chubby Checker, put on a full show with the help of their opening act, Regency.

Regency, a five-man acappella group, kept with the '50s-'60s theme, but gave their songs an updated beat. Songs that normally had the classic backbeat of old-time rock-and-roll, such as "Hound Dog," "Love The One You're With," "Under The Boardwalk" and "Jailhouse Rock," were speeded up.

While students kept up with the rhythm of such hits as "Stand By Me," "Barbara Ann," "Ding-a-ling-a-ling" and "My Girl," most were disappointed that the group was "a little too fast." The most noticeably speeded-up song was "Shout," in which most people could not keep up for fear of pulling all the muscles in their bodies.

"They had a really good sound and were very harmonious, but they had an '80s beat compared to the '50s or '60s, even on their slow one (their encore song, "In the Still of the Night,") added one parent.

The Golden Boys then took the stage and sang "American Band stand" together. As energetic as they were, Fabian and Checker did not remove the look of disappointment on several mothers' faces when they learned that Rydell would not be appearing.

Fabian, a singer who was more of a teen idol for his looks, made a good showing with two of his hits: "I'm a Man," originally sung when he was 15, and "Turn Me Loose."

During his song "Like a Tiger," he invited some members of the crowd to twist on stage, including one mom who showed the younger generation how to really twist.

Offering some words of advice to students, such as ". . . go out there and kick 'em in the butt and win," Checker proceeded to do a medley of such hits as "Twist and Shout," "Hound Dog" and "Boney Maloney."

Next, having run the gamut of his own hits, Fabian sang a medley of such smash tunes as "Sea Cruise," "Rock 'n' Roll Music," "Blue Suede Shoes," "Jailhouse Rock" and "Tutti-Frutti." However, these old-time favorites were subjected to an electric guitar solo that ruined the wholesome, good-time feeling of original rock-and-roll, in what may have been an attempt to update Fabian's image, along with the interspersed jokes he added.

He does not have a wide range, but he is singing better now than he used to on this tour. Fabian wound up his part of the show with "Travelin' Man" and "Old Time Rock 'n' Roll."

Checker took the stage with an energy and stage presence that did not require a loud backup band (which he made play lower) or conversation. He went directly into a mix of "Little Bitty Pretty One" and "Let's Twist Again," much to the crowd's delight.

Checker's songs offered an excellent showcase for his dance moves, such as the pony in "Pony Time" and the inevitable twist. He sang "Baby Take It Easy," Fats Domino's "Blueberry Hill" and Little Richard's "Good Golly Miss Molly" before going into "The Peppermint Twist."

The night was a special one for Checker, as the crowd sang "Happy Birthday" to him to celebrate his 46th year. After a brief word of thanks to the audience and to God, Checker presented three songs that will be on his new album. "Lies," "And I Need You Girl" and "All I Want, All I Need" featured a funky blues sound with the smokey touch of the saxophone easing through.

Offering some words of advice to students, such as ". . . go out there and kick 'em in the butt and win," Checker proceeded to do a medley of such hits as "Twist and Shout," "Hound Dog," "Maybelline," "Good Golly Miss Molly" and "Boney Maloney." It was during this portion that parents and students began to dance in the aisles.

Checker followed up with "(Let's Do) The Twist" and "Let's Twist Again," driving the crowd into a twisting frenzy, before he finished up with "I'm a Man." For the finale, Fabian joined Checker in singing the Stray Cats' "Rock This Town." After the concert ended, students took their parents home and tucked them in bed after a night of "good ole rock-and-roll."

Plastic Fantastic offers bargain records

By ANDREA CINELLI

College budgets are often hazardous to one's musical interests. It borders on insanity to spend $9 to $10 on one album these days. One local record store, however, caters to the bleeding budgets of all types of music lovers. Plastic Fantastic, 755 Lancaster Ave. in Bryn Mawr, carries a brilliant variety of mainly used records, tapes, and CD s at remarkably low prices.

A unique feature of Plastic Fantastic is the store itself. The walls are splattered with colorful scribble that resembles a rough mixture of Picasso and subway graffiti.

What attracts people to this particular store? "It's a neat place," claims Dave Castleman, vice president of Plastic Fantastic. "You literally can spend an entire day, even two days, familiarizing yourself with what's here."

Although the staples of the store are rock and jazz, Plastic Fantastic also carries reggae, blues, folk, classical and other types of music, according to Castleman. It is unique in its variety and affordable appeal to most types of record buyers. There are many high-priced, collector-oriented used record stores, Castleman noted, but, "It's more important for us to sell a $3 or $4 record which people can afford."

Used records, tapes and CDs are both bought and sold in the store. Most records and tapes sell for $3 to $4; most CDs sell for $5 to $12. In addition to used merchandise, the store also contains a selection of new releases chosen by the staff. Plastic Fantastic fully guarantees all items, new and used alike, said Castleman. He commented that used records are treated alike, said Castleman. He commented that used records are treated the way a store treats new records, and people should have the same expectations about their quality.

Customers regularly sell their own records, tapes and CDs to Plastic Fantastic. The management normally pays $1 to $2 for records and tapes, as long as they have resale potential, noted Castleman. They will pay $4 to $8 for used CDs in decent condition and 50 cents for slightly damaged records with high resale value.

A unique feature of Plastic Fantastic is the store itself. The walls are splattered with colorful scribble that resembles a rough mixture of Picasso and subway graffiti. This artwork is actually the signatures of various musicians who have visited the shop for in-store appearances. The first in-store appearance was by the Talking Heads for the release of their first album in 1977, said Castleman. Since then, visitors have included The Alarm, Suzanne Vega, The Ramones, Iggy Pop, The Police and many others.

Castleman noted that, because of the low prices at Plastic Fantastic, it is not too expensive for people to experiment with diifferent types of music. Someone who normally would not listen to reggae or blues, for instance, could afford to take a chance on an inexpensive album.

Main Liners are not the only people who frequent Plastic Fantastic. Philadelphians brave the Schuylkill Expressway to shop there. One obviously devoted patron travels from Japan each year to take advantage of Plastic Fantastic's bargains, reported Castleman. Others travel from hundreds of miles away.

Luckily, we have only to travel to Bryn Mawr to buy and sell used records for cash. Located near the Bryn Mawr train station, Plastic Fantastic is at least a good place to buy used records; at most, it is a musical experience in itself.

short of spectacular.

The crowd exploded into a frenzy as the opening chords of "We're Not Gonna Take It" were played. Everyone got involved by either singing along, clapping their hands or banging their heads. The energy and power that Twisted Sister displayed in this song was representative of the entire show.

The last song of the set, "I Wanna Rock," ended the show on a definite high point. All of the band members lined up on what Dee called the "firing line" — the front of the stage. Snider and the crowd took turns screaming "I Wanna Rock," as one could feel the music vibrate through the body from head to toe.

Twisted Sister left the stage for a few fleeting moments until they were brought back by a standing ovation that shook the Tower. The band broke into "I Got One Bad Habit," a song from the new album. This was folloed by "Love is for Suckers."

The final song, "S.M.F." was then introduced. Snider explained what "S.M.F." stands for - Sick Mother ##c%$!. He then described how the band was asked by the concert promoters to keep the song out of the set. However, the group responded with a strong rejection of "such a lame idea."

Twisted Sister will continue their tour with Great White along the northeastern United States. All three bands held the audience's complete attention until the very last song was played, and this concert is a must-see.

off the stage through a mechanical walkway in what seems to be both appropriate technique and appearance.

Once again Mordecai Richler, who wrote the novel The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz and also wrote the screenplay when "Duddy" became a successful movie, co-wrote this musical production with Ausin Pendleton who, in addition, handled the directing chores.

"The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz," in its bid for Broadway, is the centerpiece of the 1987 American Music Theater Festival. Whether it will be successful on Broadway is debatable. Anti-heroes are always chancy. But, for theater in Philadelphia, it is a worthwhile endeavor.

Now, for fans of musical theater, there are some other intriguing developments for this weekend. Along with the National Institute for Music Theater (NIMT), the American Music Theater Festival is putting together the first International Colloquium on Contemporary Music Theater. Held at the Philadelphia College of Art (PCA) from Oct. 9-11, the colloquium involves panel discussions and presentations on contemporary trends and future projects in the development of music theater. Speakers include artists from throughout the world.

Also, there will be a script-in-hand reading of "Casino Paradise" on Oct. 11. "Casino Paradise" is a comedic opera composed by William Bazon, written by Arnold Weinstein and directed by Albert Innaurato. For information on any of the above events, call the American Music Theater Festival at 988-9055.

Perfume smells of murder

By ROBERT DUGGAN

Perfume: The Story of a Murderer
by Patrick Suskind
Pocket Books
½

Perfume: The Story of a Murderer is the first novel from the fertile mind of Patrick Suskind. After gaining great popularity in Europe, the novel has now come to America through the translating efforts of John E. Woods.

Perfume first appeared in German as Das Parfum in 1985. After taking Germany by storm, it has taken just two short years for it to reach our shores. Suskind has also known international success through his play "The Double Bass," written in 1980 and performed throughout most of Europe and most recently at the New Theatre in Brooklyn, N.Y.

Suskind has taken up writing professionally since aborting a promising career as a concert pianist because of an injury sustained to his hands. He currently resides in Munich.

Perfume is the story of a murderer named Jean-Baptiste Grenuille. Grenouille is born into the horrible poverty of 18th century France. He is left for dead by his mother, but is found and placed in an orphanage.

Growing up horribly misshapen and disfigured, he is seen as just another monstrosity among the many monstrosities of the plague-filled, revolutionary-minded Age of Reason. There are, however, two things about him that set him apart — his complete lack of body odor and his superhuman sense of smell.

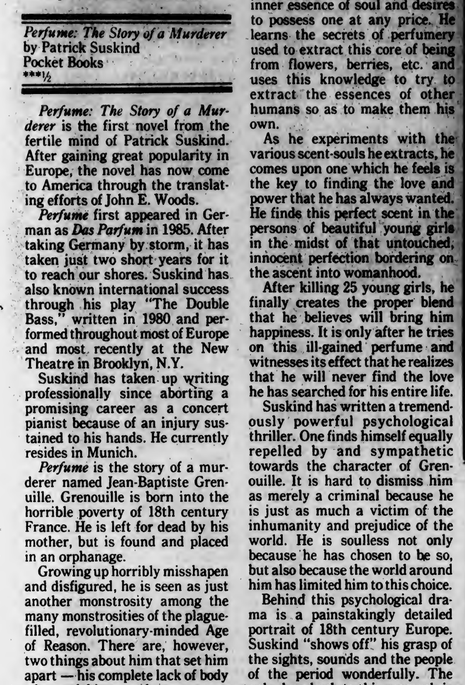
Scent becomes highly symbolic in this novel. On the one hand, it is the most primitive, the most primal of the five senses. Grenuille's incredible sense of smell is this primal, animalistic aspect of the realm of scent. Stalking and eventually claiming his prey, human or otherwise, through his olfactory prowess, Grenouille becomes more beast than man.

On the other hand, scent comes to symbolize the inner essence of all things. Grenouille lacks this inner essence of soul and desires to possess one at any price. He learns the secrets of perfumery used to extract this core of being from flowers, berries, etc. and uses this knowledge to try to extract the essences of other humans so as to make them his own.

As he experiments with the various scent-souls he extracts, he comes upon one which he feels is the key to finding the love and power that he has always wanted. He finds this perfect scent in the persons of beautiful young girls in the midst of that untouched, innocent perfection bordering on the ascent into womanhood.

After killing 25 young girls, he finally creates the proper blend that he believes will bring him happiness. It is only after he tries on this ill-gained perfume and witnesses its effect that he realizes that he will never find the love he has searched for his entire life.

Suskind has written a tremendously powerful psychological thriller. One finds himself equally repelled by and sympathetic towards the character of Grenouille. It is hard to dismiss him as merely a criminal because he is just as much a victim of the inhumanity and prejudice of the world. He is soulless not only because he has chosen to be so, but also because the world around him has limited him to this choice.



Behind this psychological drama is a painstakingly detailed portrait of 18th century Europe. Suskind "shows off" his grasp of the sights, sounds and the people of the period wonderfully. The only drawback to this research is his lengthy and often tedious explanation of the techniques of perfumery. Perfume is to perfumery what Moby Dick is to the whaling industry.

Despite this drawbvack, Perfume is one of the most appealing novels to be written in recent memory. Now that Woods has made it finally available to the English-speaking world, all those who enjoy fine literature should take this opporutnity to encounter the unique art of Suskind.

Father and son swap brains in Moore's new film

By DINA INNELLA

"Like Father Like Son"
directed by Rod Daniel
Tri Star Pictures
½

"Like Father Like Son" is a movie about a father (Dudley Moore) and a son (Kirk Cameron) who switch brains. Thus Dr. Jack Hammond's brain goes into Chris Hammond's head and vice versa. The movie's premise sounds very familiar and as the story proceeds it gets worse.

It just so happens that Chris' friend gets a hold of some "brain transference serum" and puts it in a tabasco sauce container. After successfully testing it on the dog and cat, the serum accidentally gets placed in the cabinet right next to real tabasco sauce.

Imagine what happens: Dr. Hammond makes himself a Bloody Mary and uses tabasco sauce. Father sips his drink, Father looks at son and the brains are swapped.

The serum is gone, and in order for the brains to transpose again, another serum must be found. In the meantime, dad (in son's body) goes off to school to ruin Chris' reputation, and son (in dad's body) goes off to the hospital to ruin Dr. Hammond's chance of becoming chief of staff.

Moore plays the part of a wealthy surgeon who anticipates that one day his son will follow in his footsteps. But, when his mind becomes that of a teenager, watch out. Moore performs his role exceptionally well; there is something about him that is young at heart and very believable.

Some of "Like Father Like Son's" funniest moments resulted because of Moore's acting abilities. The best scenes are those in which Moore plays the awkward teenager, chomping on bubble gum and having fun with his new found authority. If you are a dedicated Moore fan, this movie is a must-see.

Some of "Like Father Like Son's" funniest moments resulted because of Moore's acting abilities.

Cameron plays the part of a spoiled teenager with lousy grades who is on the school track team. Chris has no desire to become a doctor and his father has not yet discovered this. This is Cameron's first major movie role, and he should stick with television a little longer. He tries his best to imitate Moore's well-known characteristics. It proved to be a hard role to play, so Cameron should be applauded for his efforts.

One of the worst scenes in the "Like Father Like Son," is one in which Chris (as dad) delivers a baby. A woman is about to give birth, while father and son are searching for the brain transference serum in the middle of nowhere. This scene was manipulated and completely implausible. This scene made me laugh only because it was totally inconsequential to the story line.

Pre-teens would enjoy this movie. The theater I went to welcomed a whole slew of little kids who thought the movie was great. The plot is cute and it is a shame that there was some strong language and a few raunchy jokes that warranted the PG-13 rating.

The rating appeals to those over age 13, but the plot appeals to those under age 13. If the producers of this movie want a hit, they should edit some of the strong language, lower the rating and market the movie to a younger crowd who would appreciate "Like Father Like Son."

The Dead Milkmen deliver national album

By ANDREW MATHIS

Bucky Fellini
Dead Milkmen
Enigma Records

Bucky Fellini is the latest effort by The Dead Milkmen, one of the only bands from Philadelphia's hardcore punk scene to go national. Surprisingly, this album really is not hardcore at all. Instead, it is a blend of relatively hard rock and funny, sometimes shocking lyrics.

Even before listening to the record, a few things will catch the eye of the purchaser of Bucky Fellini. First is the warning label on the front of the shrink-wrapped package which The Dead Milkmen had placed there themselves. It proclaims, "Prepare to be offended . . . in a childish sort of way." (They hit the nail right on the head.)

Also amid the interesting drawings and photography that cover the record's sleeve you will find the names of the band's members, which are some of the most interesting you will find: Malory on drums, Dave Blood on bass, Joe Jack Talcum on guitar, and Rodney 'Cosloy' Anonymous on vocals. The latter has my personal vote for best punk name.

Whether or not the music is equally amusing is really up to the listener. "The Pit," which opens the album, gives a pretty good taste of what most of the material that is characteristic of the Milkmen's music sounds like. It is a fairly quick-tempoed tune, but seems like it could be better if it were quicker. A faster tempo plus a louder and more definitive Pit" a decent hardcore song, but, unfortunately, it does not.

"I Am The Walrus" is a song included on the first side that, despite its somewhat annoying vocals, is actually a good song. It is ironically reminiscent of a typical pre-psychedelic Beatles' song, though not the one whose name it shares.

"Watching Scottie Die," also on the first side, is the disgusting account of a father watching his son die of several sordid diseases brought on by chemical pollution. While it sounds utterly offensive, if the listener strips away his sense of false morality, it is actually pretty funny. Musically, it is making fun of the old, sad ballads of the country-western tradition and is really doing a good job of it.

Other notable songs on side one include "Going to Graceland," another "almost hardcore" account of The Dead Milkmen going to see the place where Elvis Presley died so they can make cheap jokes and buy cheap memorabilia, and "Instant Club Hit (You'll Dance to Anything)," which makes fun of the dancers at new wave clubs who will "dance to anything" by the Smiths, Public Image Ltd. and Depeche Mode (who they call Depeche Commode.)

Side Two opens with "The Badger Song," which is the worst song on the album. Rodney's vocals are more annoying than usual, and worse than that, it is really difficult to understand what he is trying to say and what the song is all about.

Other songs on side two include "Tacoland" and "(Theme From) Blood Orgy of the Atomic Fern." The former is The Dead Milkmen's dedication to the San Antonio fast food establishment that they love so much. The latter is title is about the most amusing thing about it.

Side Two closes with "Jellyfish Heaven," which is a song about The Dead Milkmen's idea of an afterlife for sea life, is really just plain stupid.

However, Side Two does contain one real pearl amidst all the oysters. This is "Surfin' Cow" which, despite its irrelevant name, may be the best song on the album, probably because it is without Rodney's annoying voice.

"Surfin' Cow" is an instrumental that focuses on the talents that actually exist in musicians Malory, Talcum and Blood. It shows that there is actually hope for these young musicians yet.

Surprisingly, aside from all the album's bad and good points, it is not a bad album all-around. While it is definitely not for everyone, there is a significant, however small, percentage of the music audience that will find Bucky Fellini to be an enjoyable listening experience.

After listening to the album a few times, it is even easier to stomach Mr. Anonymous' pseudo-western twang. (He hails from West Chester.) It may even be a pleasurable experience for the new listener. Though no one can really say what, The Dead Milkmen and the new Bucky Fellini have something going for them.

Bobby Brady leads the way

By DOUG SCANCARELLA

With the Villanova football team off to a roaring start, many stars are shining brightly. One that stands out is talented wide receiver Bobby Brady. Brady, whom Head Coach Andy Talley claims is "the best receiver I have ever coached" led the Wildcats in receiving in 1986.

Brady came from Central Catholic High School in Illinois, where he was recruited by a number of division I and Ivy league schools. However, most of those schools left him high and dry and he was left unsigned after the signing deadline. Villanova received word of Brady from Boston College, checked him out and soon signed him. Brady turned out to be a great recruit.

Tragically, Brady suffered a broken collar bone in a high school All-Star game, just a few weeks prior to reporting to Villanova as a freshman. Brady missed the entire 1985 season, and was redshirted.

The injury may have been a blessing in disguise. Later in the season, Kirk Shultz also suffered an injury that caused him to be red-shirted. The two are now listed as sophomores and have two more years of eligibility plus the remainder of the '87 season ahead of them. That is an important factor, considering the schedule gets tougher as the season goes on.

In 1986, Brady, listed as a freshman, started in all nine games, grabbing 45 passes for 695 yards and six touchdowns. Talley said of his fine receiver, "Bobby has the ability to make the great catch. In clutch situations, we will be looking for him. He is a hustler and a leader."

Brady is a receiver who thrives on one-on-one coverage. This was exemplified in last week's victory over Boston University. Brady scored the two Wildcat touchdowns, and in both instances, he was able to beat one-on-one coverage. Later Brady added, "When I see one-on-one coverage I'm looking for a big play. Hopefully, Kirk will pick it up."

The fact that Brady possesses the ability to break man-on-man coverage is a big problem that other teams have to face when pitted against the 'Cats. It is very difficult to double-team him because of 'Nova's other offensive threats.

Talley commented, "Some teams try to take Bobby out by doubling him up, but then Kirk can just go to Greg Downs or our outstanding tight end, Jim Cashman. We also throw a lot out of our backfield."

Brady is presently fifth on Villanova's all-time receiving list, behind leading receiver Mike Siani, who had a prominent career with the Baltimore Colts and the Oakland Raiders of the N.F.L. What is even more impressive is the fact that Brady still has the bulk of his collegiate career remaining.

Perhaps the greatest tribute to Brady was this comment by Talley, "Along with being a tremendous team player, and an impact player, Brady is an outstanding human being."

Volleyball at 4-7, Drop three straight

By MONICA BYRNE

The Villanova women's volleyball team could currently be described in both a positive and negative fashion. Foremost, the team is talented, aggressive and high spirited. Yet, at the same time, the players are inconsistent, frustrated and simply unfortunate.

Coach Dennis McGinnis summed his team up by saying, "We can do a lot of nice things but we're picking up a lot of bad habits."

This past week, after encountering Georgetown, Seton Hall, Pittsburgh and Yale, the Wildcats dropped to 4-7 in overall play and 1-3 in Big East competition.

On Sept. 29, the Wildcats traveled to Georgetown where they played way under par, losing three games straight, 8-15, 13-15 and 7-15. The next day, the lady spikers journeyed to Seton Hall and returned victors. Playing average volleyball, 'Nova defeated the rebuilding team of Seton Hall, 15-10, 15-4, and 15-6. The 'Cats then "rested for two days before hosting Pittsburgh and Yale on Oct. 3.

While many diehard Villanova fans sat in the pouring rain, watching Villanova's football team wash up Boston University, others comfortably sat in the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse watching Villanova's volleyball team play their "best match to date" according to McGinnis.

Although the spiker's attempts to win were unsuccessful, they gave their Pittsburgh opponent some tough competition. The Wildcats lost in three straight games, 12-15, 8-15, and 6-15, but as the scores indicate, were not buried like they were at the last outing against Pitt, when they lost 2-15, 5-15, 1-15.

McGinnis said he's "not at all ashamed of the loss," and emphasized that, "If we continue to improve and play like we did against Pitt, we'll end up No. 2 in the Big East." But McGinnis quickly added, "We have the talent to be No. 1."

On Saturday night, after playing so well against Pitt, 'Nova suffered a very disappointing loss to Yale. The Wildcats took the Elis the full five games, but were defeated 3-2.

In the first game, the two teams traded points until Yale took advantage of Villanova's lack of communication and less than average serving. Despite the

Villanova football's all-time leaders

Three members of the Villanova football team have just moved up in their respective categories of all-time leading players, following Saturday's victory over Boston University.

Kirk Shultz surpassed Pat O'Brien in career passing yards with 2,394 yards. O'Brien quarterbacked Villanova from 1977 to 1980. In 1980, he led the 'Cats past teams such as Boston College, Temple and Holy Cross.

Versatile running back Ron Sency became the eighth leading rusher in Villanova history last Saturday, passing John Heim and Robert Haner. Heim, an oustanding running back from 1970 to 1971, ran for 740 yards in 1971, giving him the fifth highest single season rushing total in Villanova history.

Haner, the leading rusher in 1950-52, scored 12 touchdowns in the 1952 nine-game season, making a Villanova record.

Bobby Brady's two receptions against B.U. allowed him to pass Chuck D'Agostini and Paul Sodaski in career receptions with 54. Brady also ranks fifth in career receiving with 862 yards.

Collins paves way for 'Nova

By MICHAEL GOLDSTEIN

The Wildcat soccer players returned to their home field for the first time in eight days last week to take on their rival school, Temple, in what turned out to be one of their biggest wins thus far this season.

Early on, the game tempo was controlled by the Owls through numerous shots on goal, all of which were rejected by a strong defense. An erratic first-half led to a 0-0 score at the intermission.

The Wildcats appeared in trouble early in the second half when a Villanova defender fouled a Temple player inside the penalty box giving the Owls a penalty kick. But goalie Ron Klos rose to the occasion by smothering the shot on goal at the 42:59 mark.

Midfielder Jeff Collins broke the stalemate by scoring on a header with just over 40 minutes remaining in the game, which is all Villanova would need for the victory. Temple applied heavy pressure late in the game, but the Wildcats turned away frequent attacks, preserving the win and raising the team's record to 5-4 on the season.

Collins completed a banner week for himself on Friday against Rutgers-Camden by scoring the lone goal 19:21 into the second half to help the Wildcats to a 1-0 triumph. John Bond was credited with his third assist in the last two weeks on Collins'goal.

Villanova's offense picked up the pace by outshooting Rutgers, 11-6, while the defense recorded its second straight shutout to complete a perfect mark of 2-0 for the week, giving them momentum for their upcoming contests. The win over Camden put the team's record at 6-4 after the first 10 games.

The team becomes more confident with each win and their midseason form appears to be solid because of hard work by the players, combined with quality coaching led by Head Coach Chris Jones.

The Wildcats travel to Georgetown on October 10, starting a three game road trip. They do not return home until October 21 when they will meet Swarthmore University.

The Villanova water polo team swept through last weekend's six-team Mid-Atlantic Conference tournament with a perfect 5-0 record. The Wildcats, now 7-1 overall, will be the Atlantic Division's first-seeded team in the final Mid-Atlantic Tournament on Oct. 16-18.

Owls prey on 'Cats

By AMY SPENCER

So far this season, the word loss has been rarely used by Villanova's field hockey team. But it crept into the conversation last Thursday as the Wildcats were handed a defeat by Temple. Only the second loss of the season, Villanova went down by a score of 3-1 to the Owls, who are ranked 15th nationally.

The star of the game was Temple's Crystal Gibbs, who scored all three goals for the Owls. The game remained scoreless for only the first 10 minutes of play. Then Gibbs broke through the Wildcat defense and slammed the ball into the goal. The assist went to Gail Cummings.

Villanova was then able to keep the ball away from their own goal until the second period when Temple scored twice more. Villanova's only score was made during the second half of the game when Victoria Rife, assisted by Ann Rosato, drove the ball past Temple's goalkeeper.

The problem the 'Cats encountered during the game was Temple's defense. The Owls allowed Villanova to take only seven shots on goal, compared to the 18 shots that Temple tried.

But disappointment was not the only emotion felt last week. There was also jubilation as the Wildcats overcame Drexel by a score of 1-0 last Tuesday. Villanova's defense shone this time, limiting Drexel to seven attempted shots. Scoring for the Wildcats was Sharon Seitz, currently team leader in goals scored, with five.

A rainy afternoon drowned out the game against La Salle on Saturday. The game has been rescheduled for Oct. 20 at 7 p.m.

Golf is runner-up at Big East

By JIM BOWMAN

Although this year's Villanova golf team may be young and inexperienced, no one can say they are not consistent.

However, this consistency is not exactly the type that third-year coach Don Ficco had in mind. For the past month, the Wildcats have religiously followed a two-day tournament pattern of opening round disaster and second round juggernaut.

Last weekend, Villanova held steadfastly to this pattern by stumbling in the opening round of the Big East championships, only to recover and post the lowest team score of the tournament on the last day. Their efforts netted them a second-place finish in the Big East finals, held at the Tournament Players Club at Avenal Farms, in Potomac, MD

A portion of Saturday's round was played in a virtual downpour, while the remainder of the tornament was played in chilly 40-degree temperatures, accompanied by gusting winds, which was certainly not ideal golf weather.

"Our players did not react favorably to the rain [Saturday]," explained Ficco, "but they reacted well in the wind and the cold. We had the best team score of the tournament on Sunday, although by that time we were already 19 strokes off the pace, and it was too late."

The recovery and second-place finish were important for the proud Villanova team, but the highlight of the tournament came from freshman Jeff Osler, who flirted with an individual title and eventually captured an impressive second-place Big East finish.

"He's a good player who got off to a slow start here. I always knew he could do that well and he really should have scored a little better," commented Ficco.

Osler agreed, saying, "I three-putted four greens in my final round and double-bogeyed on the 18th hole to shoot 79. I hit the ball great though, and I am confident that this performance is going to turn my season around."

Other top Villanova finishers were Chris Capello in eighth place with a 167, and Kevin Rogerson and Jim Clarke in a tie for 11th at 169.

Next for the Wildcats will be the Big Five Championships Oct. 13 at the Eagle Lodge Golf Course.

Tennis rallies, wins five

By STEVE ELLIS

The women's tennis team upped their overall record to 6-5 by winning five of eight matches over a two-week span. The team also placed second in the P.A.I.A.W. Division I Tournament held recently at West Chester University.

The team began the successful two-week stretch with a 9-0 whitewashing of East Stroudsburg. The match marked the successful return of junior Laura Smelas, who teamed with senior Beth Lemon for a 8-0 doubles victory.

Millersville was the next victim for the improving 'Nova netters as they again shut out their opponents, 9-0. In the process, the Wildcats only dropped one set of the entire match.

The women made it three in a row by defeating visiting Glassboro State, 8-1. The Wildcats then took to the road and were defeated by Big East foe Seton Hall, 7-2. The team recovered the next day and registered a hard fought 3-2 victory over the Rams of Fordham.

The second-place finish in the P.A.I.A.W. Tournament was highlighted by the first place finish of Lemon and Smelas in the first doubles slot. The cause was also helped by sophomore Lynn Slowinski, and the doubles team of Sue Bernardi and Jeanne O'Connor, who had second-place finishes.

Third-place finishes were chipped in by Katie O'Brien at second singles and Stacey Hall at third singles. The team finished four points behind Lehigh and edged Drexel by one point to earn the second-place finish.

The Wildcats continued regular match play with a heartbreaking 5-4 loss to Delaware. They came back the next day to hammer Washington College, 9-0, in the make-up of a rain out. The netters finished the two-week stretch with a tough 5-4 loss at Lafayette.

The team is in the midst of eight matches in eight days, including home matches with West Chester, Lehigh, LaSalle, Ramapo and Drexel. The young team continues to improve and could be a force to be reckoned with at the Big East Tournament, scheduled for Oct. 16-18.

strong efforts of Hillary Anderson (ending the game with 15 digs and three service aces), Helen Hnat (tallying 19 match kills) and Lori Reiter, 'Nova lost, 13-15.

In game two, the lady spikers started strong and rallied to win, 15-9. The Wildcats, playing intelligently and with confidence, maintained their momentum to take game three, 15-10. Leading 2-1, Villanova unfortunately mitigated their intensity and lost, 12-15, in the fourth game.

"Still in the driver's seat," according to McGinnis, the lady spikers began the fifth game strong, thanks to powerful serving from Yvonne Gustberger, but fell, 9-15.

Even though the volleyball team has traveled extensively, the Wildcats still have a long way to go. The team will host Drexel on Oct. 6, and then travel to Princeton for a tournament on Oct. 9 and 10. The Wildcats will end their week with George Washington University visiting 'Nova on Oct. 11 at 1 p.m.

McGinnis feels that his team "should win the next four games, which will be a good indicator as to where we stand and where we're headed."

Disappointedly, McGinnis admitted that, "When something goes wrong, you have to reach down and find something within yourself. We still don't have anyone like this, who's willing to take charge and go out and get what they want."

He added, "We're still trying new things," but he is basically distressed with the team's lack of consistency. Undoubtedly, with a little more motivation and support, the women's volleyball team could easily get back on the winning track.

Huber best in Big East

By DOUG SCANCARELLA

This past week Villanova's top women's cross country runner, Vicki Huber was named Big East Athlete of the Week. She shared the honor with Connecticut soccer standout Dan Donigan.

Huber, a junior, led the Wildcats to their third consecutive title in the National Catholic Cross Country Championship, held at the University of Notre Dame in Indiana. She won her race with a time of 17:24.1.

Huber, an excellent athlete who possesses tremendous speed and endurance, took first place in the first two meets of the season. The two meets were both victories, and in both instances she was followed by Villanova's Kathy Franey, who placed second. Meg Moisen, Jenny Rahn, and freshmen Jenny Brekhis were other key contributors to the team.

Other runners that figure to be an integral part of the club in 1987 are Celeste Holliday and Sonia O'Sullivan. Both will make their first appearances this week in the Paul Short Memorial Run.

Huber was an enormous success in her freshman and sophomore years. As a freshman, Huber was an immediate impact. She was slotted in the number three position and collected wins in the 1500-meter at the Big East indoors and in the 1500-meter and the 3000-meter at the Big East outdoors.

As a sophomore Huber advanced to the number one position, and earned All-American honors. She anchored the distance medley relay at the Florida classic and set a new NCAA record when she finished first in the 3000-meter at the NCAA outdoors.

This year, with Villanova's first two victories, the Wildcats women's cross country team ranks 15th in the nation, and once again Huber is leading the team. The 'Cats are ranked above cross country powers such as Northern Arizona, Alabama, Clemson and Texas El-Paso.

Athlete of the Week

JEFF COLLINS

This week's Saco East Athlete of the Week is Jeff Collins.

Collins, a senior forward on the Villanova soccer team, scored both goals in the Wildcats' pair of 1-0 victories over Temple and Rutgers-Camden last week.

His four goals in 1987, coupled with one assist, make him Villanova's leading scorer with nine total points.

In addition to being named Saco East Athlete of the Week, Collins was honored as Soccer Seven "Player-of-the-Week" for last week's performance.

Collins attended Cardinal O'Hara High School in Springfield, Pa., where he earned All-Delaware County and All-City honors in soccer. He is a civil engineering major and one of four children.

Rugby tackled by U.Penn

By MEL ATKELIES

Villanova's ruggers failed to continue their winning ways last Saturday, losing to the University of Pennsylvania, 24-12 at Morris Fields. The reigning EPRU (Eastern Pennsylvania Rugby Union) co-champion's record now stands at 1-2.

'Nova, even with their full-strength line-up in the pack for the first time this year, was unable to overcome their Philadelphia rival. The backs were once again without fullback and captain, Tim Whelan, raising serious doubts as to whether the team will repeat last year's play-off success. Whelan has been plagued with ankle ailments since August.

"Until we get serious about our training," said Chris McDonnell, "I don't see us even beating Maryland."

Pennsylvania commanded an early lead, with inside-center Noel Crawford penetrating 'Nova's defense with two tries, giving the Quakers a 12-0 lead. 'Nova roared back quickly, racing the length of the field before Joe Staib failed to convert on a 10-yard dropkick that he hooked wide of the goalposts.

Penn scored another try before 'Nova was again deep in their territory. With only moments left in the half, Penn's All-America fullback Allen Hummert stripped McDonnell of the ball before running it the length of the field for a try.

"We haven't scored like this in a while," boasted Scottish native Hummert, "I've forgotten how good it felt."

With Penn leading 24-0 after the half, 'Nova began an aggressive assault on Penn's goal. Lock Elmer Lesnevich brought the kickoff down to Penn's 40-yard line before dropkicking a goal for three points.

Minutes later, Denis Graeber scooped up an errant Penn pass and dropkicked his own goal from 20 yards out. With 'Nova again deep in Penn's territory, Mike Koons brought rain with a arching penalty kick. Chris McDonnell tried to make amends for his earlier mistakes with a dropkick from five yards out, ending the scoring at 24-12.

In the B-side match, Mike Tarzani scored two tries and Bill Sicord added two conversion kicks in a 12-0 win over Penn on a rain-soaked field. Paul Larkin stifled the Penn offense in their scoring attempts.

This Saturday the ruggers travel to Haverford for an inter-divisional match.

Talley's 'Cats storm past Terriers

By JOHN G. RICCO

As the saying goes, "It was raining cats and dogs." Well, last Saturday they sure were not Wildcats and Terriers.

Though Villanova (3-0) would eventually emerge from its game against Boston University with a 14-7 win, the route taken to get there was far from normal.

All factors pointed toward an outstanding game. Our parents were in town, the game was a sellout (13,400 paid attendance) and the Terriers, a legitimate division IAA team, were ready to clash with Head Coach Andy Talley's young, up and coming squad. There was, however, one small problem, the weatherman refused to cooperate.

The steady rain, which fell throughout the game, was propelled by driving winds in the second half, and limited both teams, especially on offense. In a game where dropped passes and fumbles were the norm, both coaches knew that the team who got on top first would have a great advantage.

"We knew we had to get some points on the board before the ball and the field got too wet," said Talley. And his team did just that.

On their first possession of the game, while the field was still relatively dry, quarterback Kirk Schulz marched the Wildcats down to Boston's 23-yard line. Though kicker Tom Withka's 40-yard field goal attempt was short, the Terriers were caught offsides, and the five-yard penalty gave the Wildcats new life.

Six plays later, Schulz faked a pitch left to tailback Ron Sency, and threw back to split end Bobby Brady who was wide open in the right corner of the end zone.

The three-yard pass play, accompanied by Withka's extra point, gave Villanova a quick 7-0 lead with 4:59 left in the first quarter, and capped an impressive 16-play, 71-yard Wildcat drive.

Talley, commenting on the touchdown pass said, "We really didn't fool anyone with the fake pitch, but Bobby [Brady], our big-play kid, gave us the big play."

Villanova's next offensive series proved to be just as effective. The Wildcats took over on their own 27-yard line and less than a minute later they had scored again. Following a 21-yard pass to flanker Greg Downs and an eight-yard run by Sency, Schulz and Brady were at it again.

Brady, who was in single coverage, fought off the cornerback to receive Schulz's toss and scampered 43 yards into the end zone.

Withka added the point after and, with 57 seconds left in the first quarter, Villanova had what seemed to be a commanding 14-0 lead.

The lead seemed commanding because of defensive tackle Ted White and the rest of the Wildcat defense. Villanova had held the Terriers to less than 40 offensive yards in the first quarter and looked very strong.

Indeed, Boston was not able to penetrate Villanova territory until late in the second quarter when the Terriers started their first and only scoring drive of the day.

Behind the powerful running of Randy Pettus, the Terriers drove 56 yards in 10 plays to close the gap to 14-7 as the final seconds ticked off ending the half.

Pettus, who carried the ball a career high 40 times for 176 yards, scored the touchdown on a one-yard dive, and, as his statistics show, gave Villanova trouble all day. "He's [Pettus] the best back I've faced since I've been at Villanova," White said. "We had to gang tackle him and take him up high to bring him down."

By the time the second half was ready to start, both the wind and rain had picked up considerably, and the large Parents' Weekend crowd had dwindled down to a few hundred.

"It was like the twilight zone down there," remarked Talley. "Between the wind and the rain and my glasses fogging up."

Bad weather or not, however, there was still a second half of football to be played, and the Villanova defense was up to the test.

The 'Cats knew that if Boston could not score then they could not win, and that is exactly what happened. While the Wildcat offense battled the elements, the team's defensive unit remained strong.

Each time Boston threatened, 'Nova's defense stiffened, and time after time prevented a game-tying score. "I'm proud that we hung in there. We were able to play with intensity despite the weather, and that really showed me something," White said.

Talley was also impressed with his defensive squad, stating simply, "Our defense was darn good!"

Saturday's victory could well be the Villanova's biggest since the football program's reinstatement three years ago.

"This win gives us credibility," Talley said. "They now know we can be a threat."

And, the weather showed us it can be as well.

Juniors Derek McEwen and Bill Buckley gang tackle Boston U. tailback Randy Pettus. Pettus carried the ball a career high 40 times against the 'Cats on Saturday.

Outside linebacker John O'Brien, middle Boston University quarterback Pat Mansfield are a big loss.

V.U. athletes to be educated about alcohol and drug abuse

By NOEL E. FALCO

Alcohol and drug abuse education classes are being presented to each University athletic team three times a year, according to Jan Janosik, director of the Drug and Alcohol Intervention Center.

"The purpose of the classes is to teach responsible decision-making and to present facts and specific information about the effects of alcohol and drug use on an athlete's body," said Janosik.

"Alcohol affects judgment and performance; it throws off the whole water balance. It takes two to three days to restore this balance because the muscle tissue is depleted of water," she said.

Janosik stated "[Alcohol] slows everything down ... [athletes then] can't concentrate, can't remember plays. They're not as quick with their reflexes."

She stated that alcohol abuse often is a result of competition with other athletes in which the "proving syndrome" is sometimes carried over into drinking. This is often evidenced in "chugging" or other drinking games.

To counteract this competition, the classes also emphasize athletes confronting athletes on alcohol abuse. "Team members are often the ones who know when an athlete has a problem," said Janosik.

She said the athletes are taught intervention skills so they know how to confront each other and can convince a fellow athlete to come in for help.

The center's consultant for this program is Mike Green, a recovering alcoholic. Green was an All-American athlete when he attended West Chester University. Now he is consultant to the Flyers on alcohol abuse, as well as to Villanova University.

As to drug and alcohol testing in athletes, Janosik said the center is only involved if an athlete tests positive.

"We talk and determine what is being abused. Then we devise an individual program, a counseling program. Our whole goal is to help the athlete," she said.

Janosik continued, "We encourage re-testing to see that the athlete is complying and is drug-free. [The program] is not punitive, but is a helping- and counseling-oriented program."

Janosik stated, "The program seems to be going well. Students are responding really well to the education component and ... to Mike."

The center is finished with the first round of team meetings and will start the second round before Fall Break, according to Janosik.

BEHIND the lines

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

As I was sitting in the stands of Villanova's stadium last Saturday, I was thinking to myself that something did not look right.

After hours of pondering the problem, the reason for my confusion popped into my head.

There was no mud.

After years of watching pro football teams play on astroturf, my eyes are still not accustomed to the absence of players with mud stuck in their face masks, sliding 10 yards in the slime and mire to rest on the side of the field in a puddle of water.

Would it not be nice to see football players muddy again? Would not some of the nostalgia of the game be brought back to life with the rebirth of natural grass?

Instead, the fans of the sport of football are now becoming accustomed to words like turf-burn, turf-knee, turf-toe and assorted other injuries of the turf variety.

Is it fair of a school, or any organization, to ask an athlete to not only sacrifice his body for love of sport and pride of school, but also for money. After all, money is the driving force behind the installation of astroturf.

As a fan, I personally do not like seeing players bleed for no other reason then for high finance. The physical aspects, other than blood, that were mentioned before would be greatly improved with the installation of grass.

One of the best aspects of grass is that it gives. When a player makes a cut on grass, the field gives and the foot slides, which relieves the pressure on the ankle and knee.

However, the turf does not give. Thus, when a player cuts, the stress is placed on the toes, the ankle and the knee. The result is injury.

My plea for this week is a change in field surfaces. Bring back football the way it used to be when the players, not money, made the game great.

Campaign nets $24.8 million

By SHARON A. WATERS

Covenant II, Villanova University's capital fundraising drive, completed its campaign this month and raised $24.8 million over five years, according to the Rev. George F. Riley, O.S.A., vice president for University Relations.

The success of the largest fundraiser in the history of the University surpassed its initial goal of $20 million in 1982 and the $9 million previously raised in Covenant I.

The campaign, chaired by John A. Murphy, president and chief operating officer of Phillip Morris Inc. and a 1951 graduate of Villanova, received pledges from corporations, foundations, alumni, parents and friends of the University, according to a University press release.

Individual donations comprised the largest percentage of the money raised, contributing 90 percent of the total funds, according to Riley.

Riley quoted the specific breakdown as consisting of more than $5 million from nearly 3,000 alumni, $6.7 million from trustees, more than $6 million from corporations and foundations and $4.4 million from friends.

Furthermore, the top two gifts from individuals exceeded $9 million, Riley said.

Riley attributed the campaign's success partly to the more extensive use of face-to-face solicitation of alumni. Alumni donations from Covenant I totalled only $500,000, as compared with the $5 million raised in Covenant II.

Though their donation to Covenant II increased dramatically over that to Covenant I, all alumni still maintained or increased their annual contributions to the University, which Riley considers extremely important.

The incorporation of electronic screening to the fundraising campaign also helped Covenant II surpass its goals.

Though relatively new, the computerized electronic screening system assists in various aspects of fundraising from determining the most productive allocation of financial and human resources in the campaign to identifying "high potential prospects for fundraising appeals and activities," according to information provided by Riley and Edward A. Morosky, associate vice president for University Relations.

Utilizing unclassified information from the U.S. Census Bureau, electronic screening also indicates generally the possible level at which a prospective donor should be solicited, according to Morosky and Riley.

Riley also cited "great alumni support" and an increasing national interest in the University, especially among corporations, as other factors contributing to Covenant II's success.

Total costs of the fundraising campaign were only 3.2 percent of the nearly $25 million raised, according to an annual donor report published by the University. Since fundraising expenses usually constitute between 8 and 14 percent of the total dollars raised, according to the donor report, low costs were another positive aspect of Covenant II.

The money raised will help alleviate the costs of the construction of the du Pont Pavilion, the alterations and expansion of engineering and science laboratory equipment, the improvement of the University's computer program, major renovations of University buildings including Bartley, Mendel and Tolentine halls, student financial aid and general campus development, according to a pamphlet provided by Riley.

Magazine praises V.U.

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

A survey of the nation's college presidents released in the Oct. 26 issue of U.S. News and World Report rated Villanova University the best comprehensive college in the East for the second year running.

Comprehensive institutions are defined by the magazine as colleges enrolling over 2,500 students, each of which provide a combination of professional and liberal-arts courses. "Over half of the bachelor's degrees awarded lie in professional areas like engineering, meaning they often educate students for specific job markets," according to the article.

There are 124 colleges and universities constituting the Eastern comprehensive category. Fifty percent of the college presidents in this category responded to the survey. The presidents only rate the schools in their own category.

One of the main reasons the magazine cited for Villanova's first place ranking is the school's strength in the humanities and emphasis upon social justice.

"Villanova, with 6,400 full-time undergraduates, infuses an emphasis on social justice into its curricula. Engineering majors take six humanities courses, three in religious studies, to instill a sense of social responsibility into jobs that will be mainly technical.

"During an annual Hunger Awareness Week, future engineers study how better methods of fertilization and irrigation can boost food supplies," according to the magazine.

Not only was Villanova chosen as the best overall comprehensive institution, but it was also rated as having the best humanities program in the category. The magazine stated that this rating supports the claim that, "College administrators tend to equate strength in these subjects [humanities] with overall academic quality."

The Oct. 26 survey marks the third biennial survey by U.S. News and World Report on American higher education. This year,

Recent studies that have linked the lowering of cholesterol counts with a reduced risk of heart disease and heart attacks have prompted new federal recommendations to the medical profession concerning cholesterol levels.

According to the Oct. 19 issue of Newsweek, health officials recommended that all adults over 20 years old have their cholesterol levels tested.

The panel said that cholesterol counts below 200 should not cause too much worry and counts between 200 and 239 are considered "borderline" and a retest is recommended within a year.

"But people whose levels are above 240 — and borderline patients who have additional risk

Chapel restoration planned

By KARLA BECKNER

Plans are underway to begin a complete renovation of the Main Chapel on the Villanova campus, said the Rev. Shawn T. Tracy, O.S.A., director of Campus Ministry.

A committee headed by Tracy and the Rev. Anthony Genevese, pastor of St. Thomas of Villanova, is in the process of pinpointing exactly what work needs to be done and discussing the possibilities open to them for change.

"The church is over 100 years old," said Genevese, "and nothing much in the way of repairs has ever been done. It's been just fix it as it breaks."

Tracy added that plans for renovations have been under discussion for the past 15 years, but nothing has ever happened.

According to Tracy, the committee is examining the floor plans to discover ways to open space. Consequently, the format of the church may need to be shifted.

"We need to decide whether we want the church to accommodate 500 or 800 people," said Tracy. "This will call for redesigning the space of the church."

Some ideas under consideration include the raising or lowering of the altar and relocating the reconciliation room in the back of the church. Also under inspection is the marble in the sanctuary. Tracy noted that since the marble is badly cracked, the committee is looking at several alternatives for replacing it. Possibilities include laying new marble and replacing the marble entirely with either terrazzo or carpet.

Other possible changes to be made involve installing a new climate control system, replacing the present pews, repainting, repairing the stained glass windows, refurbishing the restrooms

New position to aid communication

By E.H. McELDOWNEY

The Rev. Martin Smith, O.S.A., was recently appointed the new assistant director of Residence Life for Environmental Management. The position was created this summer to act as a liaison between the Office of Residence Life and the department of Maintenance.

According to Smith, his job is to aid in communication between the two departments.

Smith explained that maintenance requests previously went through the system of resident assistants to Maintenance. Under the new system, all requests go to Smith's desk where they are prioritized, recorded and then taken by him directly to Maintenance. This method both organizes the procedure and makes it more efficient, said Smith.

A spokesperson for the Office of Residence Life recently commented that the office had been seeking the creation of a position to enhance communication between its office and Maintenance for some time.

She noted that there was no relation between the recently-created position and the evaluation in the Shriberg report, part of the ongoing University evaluation process, that called for such a position.

Smith said his position was created to remedy the lack of communication and understanding between the two departments. He stated that he has found the Maintenance department to be "cooperative," and that in general, "The service is good. Emergencies are usually taken care of in one day."

Smith did call attention to the fact that "Maintenance is understaffed" and that they may be slow because of this lack of manpower. He pointed out that while most students view Maintenance as only being responsible for the 16 residence halls, there are 50 buildings on campus that they service.

"There is usually only one man for several buildings, dorms, classrooms and offices," he said. "To get more and better service, we need more staff, both custodial and Maintenance," Smith stated.

Smith said he also frequently walks the buildings to make sure conditions are good and that the dorms are "fit to live in."

Vandalism is another aspect of residence life that concerns Smith. He is currently beginning new programs aimed at educating residents about the costs and effects of vandalism.

Smith stated that "out of a population of about 3,000 residents, it's a minority of 100-200 [students] that cause the real damage." Smith stressed that his office is trying to work with student input in finding ways to deal with vandalism.

Constitution lectures begin

By DIANE A. CILIONE

The Villanova honors program lecture series on "The Debate Over Original Intention" began Oct. 15 when Professor H. Jefferson Powell spoke to a full assembly in the Wayne-St. David's Room of the Connelly Center.

Powell is presently a visiting professor of law at Duke University Law School. He received his bachelor of arts degree from St. David's University in Wales, his master of arts degree from Duke University, his master of divinity degree at Yale University and his law degree from Yale University. In addition, Powell is on the law faculty of the University of Iowa and was a visiting professor of law at Yale University last year.

Powell's lecture was built around the question of original intent and whether it can bind Americans today. He outlined the practical problems that arise when contemporary legal authorities try to determine the original intent of the founders. The difficulty of uncertain translation and lack of early legislative history are two problems Powell discussed.

Powell's lecture implied that original intent is not a workable concept by illustrating the problems which were inherent in it, according to a member of the lecture audience.

Powell answered questions and comments after the lecture.

Powell's lecture was the first in a series of lectures sponsored by the honors program on the question of original intent. On Nov. 19, Gary McDowell, a resident scholar at the Center for Judicial Studies, will speak. On Nov. 23, there will be a debate between Harry V. Jaffa, Salvatori research professor of political philosophy from Claremont McKenna College, and Bruce Ledewitz, a professor of law at Duquesne University School of Law.

On Nov. 20 the Hon. Antonin Scalia, justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, and the Hon. Edwin Meese III, attorney general of the United States, will speak on original intent. Tickets are needed for both events.

The last two lectures, part of a special bicentennial celebration, are a cooperation of the honors program (continued on page 4, col. 1) effort of Villanova University and the Intercollegiate Studies Institute.

According to Dr. John J. Schrems of the political science department, all the free tickets for the Scalia lecture are exhausted, and the best way to get tickets for the Scalia lecture is to purchase a ticket for the Meese lecture and request one.

Schrems is a faculty associate of the Intercollegiate Studies Institute, and played a large role in arranging the appearances of Meese and Scalia at Villanova, according to Dr. Colleen Sheehan of the political science department.

According to Schrems, the Constitution Bicentennial lectures have been in the planning stages since the fall of 1985.

The political science department is sponsoring its own lecture series on the bicentennial of the Constitution this semester.

Sheehan, a new addition to the Villanova faculty, is teaching an honors course this semester which the honors lecture series has been built around, according to Dr. Michael Burke, director of the honors program.

Sheehan, along with Susan Fiorentino, are responsible for the coordination of the first part of the series which was arranged independently, according to the informational flier.

Security committee yet to begin work

By DANTE J. SCALA

The way was cleared Tuesday for the ad hoc committee on Security and parking policies to begin work, according to Senate Chairperson Dr. Philip A. Maurone.

The committee's progress has been delayed because of uncertainty over who would fill the two faculty positions. As of Tuesday morning, there were three candidates for the two positions, and, according to procedure, the Senate was set to choose from them at their meeting today, said Maurone.

Later that day, however, Dr. James J. McKenna Jr., director of human organizations science, declined a nomination he had received from an executive committee member. Thus, the two remaining candidates, the Rev. Peter Donahue, O.S.A., theatre professor, and Dr. Carolyn Manfredi, nursing professor, were automatically accepted.

Faculty Senator Dr. Vito L. Punzi, who initially volunteered for the committee, resigned because of time commitments.

With all the committee seats filled, the process of charging the group with official duties has now begun, said Maurone Tuesday afternoon. Student Government President Phil Brach, who made the motion to create the committee in September, will be acting chairperson until a chairperson can be elected from the committee, stated Maurone.

Donahue and Manfredi join student senators Diane Carman and Brian Moses; the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students; and the Rev. William A. McGuire, O.S.A., director of Athletics for buildings and facilities on the committee.

McGuire was nominated by the Rev. Patrick J. Rice, O.S.A., vice president for Administration, said Maurone. Rice was nominated for the committee during the Senate's September meeting but declined the nomination because Security reports directly to him, he said Tuesday. Rice stated that he was willing to provide information and answer questions on Security for the committee.

Maurone said that the letter that would charge the committee with its duties would generally reiterate the motion, which called for a "fact-finding committee" to study Security and parking policies. He personally suggested that the committee consider the creation of a standing subcommittee to study general University services. Currently, there is no such body that concerns itself with University services, which include Security, Food Services and the bookstore, he stated.

Also, he said that before the committee delivers its report, it should look at the study of Security which is being conducted by outside evaluators. This report will be available by January, said Maurone.

Budget process begins

The first stages of the annual University operating budget process will begin at the Senate meeting today. Senate Budget Committee Chairperson Alvin A. Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance, will present an initial committee report to the Senate.

Clay stated Monday that the committee is in the preliminary stages of their work.

Also, students and faculty will offer proposals for specific parts of the first draft of the budget. Brach will present the student recommendation for tuition and room and board, and Faculty Senator Dr. Harry R. Strack will submit the proposal for a faculty salary increase.

As of Monday, neither proposal had been finalized.

Freshmen engineers honored

For the second year in a row, Villanova University freshmen engineering students took first prize in the freshmen engineering design graphics competition held at Reno, Nev. last June.

The judging took place during the annual American Society for Engineering Educators' (ASEE) Annual Convention.

The winning student team report, titled "A Page Turner for a Paraplegic Person," was prepared by team leader Justin Butterfield, with Marybeth Mopas and Elias Tannous, in Professor Karl Zimmer's class.

Dr. Robert Lynch, dean of the College of Engineering, presented the team with an inscribed plaque that will be displayed in the mechanical engineering office.

Freshmen reports for the competition are submitted by engineering colleges from around the country, and the winning entries were chosen by a panel of 19 judges from other schools. The award is based on the originality, practicality and manner of presentation of the design as well as the student's proper use of grammar, metrics and computer graphics.

"Professor of the Year" to speak

Rose Marie Tong, 1986 "Professeor of the Year" and philosophy professor at Williams College in Massachusetts, will speak Nov. 2 at 8 p.m. in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center.

Her lecture is titled, "Straining the Wisdom of Solomon: The Case of the Surrogate Mother." Tong is the author of Women, Sex and the Law.

Tong's appearance is sponsored by the Women's Studies Network, a campus organization dedicated to increasing awareness of sex-role issues.

The Council for Advancement and Support of Education (CASE) selected Tong as best professor in the nation for 1986 for her "contributions to the lives and careers of students and for extraordinary achievement in teaching, schol-arship and service to the profession and/or institution."

Fellowship offered

By JENNIFER REIDY

Approximately 60 doctoral fellowships in the biological sciences will be awarded in an international competition sponsored by the Howard Hughes Medical Institute (HHMI) and administered by the National Research Council.

The goal of the fellowships is "to support the education of outstanding prospective investigators to ensure the strength and vigor of the pool for biomedical research."

Awards will be made for study in research-based doctoral programs in the following areas: cell biology and regulation, immunology, genetics, neuroscience and structural biology, among others.

Hughes Doctoral Fellowships are intended for students at or near the beginning of their graduate study in the biological sciences. Each award includes an annual stipend of $12,300 (for 12-month tenures) to the recipient, and an annual cost-of-education allowance of $10,700 in lieu of all tuition and assessed fees.

The deadline for applications is Nov. 13, and the announcement of awards will take place in March 1988.

For more information and application materials, contact the National Research Council at (202) 334-2872.

New study on cholesterol and heart disease

factors, such as a family history of heart disease, hypertension or a smoking habit — should have repeat tests, including an analysis of their HDLs (high-density lipoproteins, which help carry cholesterol out of the body) and LDLs (low-density lipoproteins, which carry cholesterol around the body). Treatment by diet or drugs might then be in order," the article said.

The article states that some amount of atherosclerosis (clogging of the arteries) is very likely in Americans and that buildup in the arteries can start in childhood.

"If the United States is to achieve a cholesterol count under 200, like Japan's, dietary changes have to start with the current generation of children," experts said.

Cindy Lauer, nutritionist and registered dietician for University Food Services, said that the University will not change its menus in response to the new guidelines. "We haven't discussed anything that will change," according to Lauer.

She said that, last year, Food Services began serving broiled fish twice a week and offering the option of a vegetarian entree for lunch and dinner.

"That doesn't mean they're low in cholesterol, because [students] put on a lot of cheese and sauces," she said.

Lauer commented that the fresh fruit and salad bar are good choices.

"We have sliced turkey on the deli bar at least twice a week, which is low in cholesterol," she said.

Lauer stated, "The meats we buy are high quality and don't have a lot of fat. Our roast beef is very lean, even though that's one of the higher ones in cholesterol. Students have a choice of gravy or not, which probably adds twice as much cholesterol."

She said there have been two articles on cholesterol in "Morsels and Tidbits," the menu offered to students weekly. Information and charts on fats and cholesterol have also been included.

According to Lauer, it is possible to maintain a low cholesterol diet within the school diet, but, "You have to work at it just like fixing food at home."

She said, "We have a better choice here than at fast food places, but it is possible to have lower cholesterol. At breakfast, there are lots of choices besides eggs, such as bagels, cereals and whole grain products.

"The salad bar [should be included] as part of the meal, but needs supplementation. The tuna salad has mayonnaise, but it is not as high [in cholesterol] as some things you would find," she said.

Lauer added, "All our fried products are fried in vegetable oil," which is low in cholesterol.

She stated, "Frozen products usually don't use vegetable oil, but instead use coconut oil, which is high in saturated fats. The only way you could know is by reading the label.

"Red meat is high in cholesterol, but a regular portion of four ounces is comparable to chicken and better than lasagna with cheese. If you do it right, have the right portion, cut off all the trim fat, don't put the gravy on, you can still have a fairly low cholesterol intake," Lauer said.

She added, "Remember to have a variety of foods. For example, you need your breads and high fiber cereals. It's proven that they bring down cholesterol levels.

"It's not just a matter of eating cholesterol, but of eating foods that reduce it. Exercise is very important, as is maintaining your weight. It's not just what you eat," said Lauer.

An article in "Nutrition & the M.D.," September 1987, stated, "In spite of recommendations by some governmental and private agencies, the best advice is one of careful modification of dietary habits and avoidance of other risk factors whenever possible.

"Although genetic inheritance cannot be overcome, smoking can be eliminated, exercise instituted and/or increased and treatment initiated for chronic diseases which are risk factors."

However, the same issue attested the controversy over diet when it stated, "Since this study [Coronary Primary Prevention Trial] was done on middle-aged hypercholesterolemic men and since diet was not a factor, the question remains, should a low-fat (30 percent of calories), low-cholesterol (300 mg/day, 2 eggs/week) diet be imposed on all persons over the age of 2 years — children, women, normocholesterolemic men, and the elderly? These recommendations would translate into a diet which would be extremely limited in animal protein and other associated nutrients."

Newsweek also said, "Some experts worry that diets high in polyunsaturates might prove harmful in the long run. Some animal experiments, in fact, suggest that polyunsaturates in large amounts might promote cancer."

Students, like Paul Houser pictured here, can eat a low cholesterol diet at the Dougherty dining hall "if they work at it," according to Cindy Lauer, nutritionist and registered dietician for University Food Services.

The National Order of Omega

VILLANOVA GREEK OF THE WEEK

This week, the Order of Omega is happy to spotlight the accomplishments of Barbara Monahan of Alpha Chi Omega. Barb is a senior communication arts major with a minor in psychology, and comes to Villanova by way of Alexandria, Va.

As a member of Alpha Chi, Barb has served on the executive board and as the junior class representative for the standards board. Barb is also a two-year member of Omega and currently serves as the Omega secretary.

Outside of Greek life, Barb has been actively involved in the New Student Orientation Program, serving as an O.C. in 1986 and as a Steering Committee member for Orientation '87. Barb is also a four-year member of the Blue Key Society and has held the positions of Steering Committee member and senior days party chair for Blue Key.

In addition, Barb has been kept busy this year by the Who's Who selection committee, for which she served as the student representative for the College of Arts. In her free time, Barb enjoys camping, travel and skiing.

For all of her contributions to Villanova, the Order of Omega is proud to honor Barb Monahan of Alpha Chi Omega as the Greek of the Week.

The National Security Agency is looking. We're in search of new professional relationships with both Mr. and Ms. Right. What we offer in return is a unique career that may well be the answer to your personal desires.

What we offer is certainly different. At NSA, our threefold mission is critical to our country's security. We process foreign intelligence information. We safeguard our government's communications. And we secure our nation's computer systems. A mission of that proportion requires a diverse range of leading technology and talented professionals.

Currently, NSA is searching for Mathematicians, Computer Scientists, Language Specialists and Electronic Engineers.

Our Mathematicians work with applied and pure math. They apply—and create—a host of advanced concepts from Galois theory and combinatorics to probability theory and astrodynamics.

Computer Scientists discover a variety of projects and technology that is virtually unparalleled. We use literally scores of computers, hundreds of businesses from every major manufacturer. Applications include everything from communications software to artificial intelligence.

Language Specialists, linguists, those fluent in Russian, Chinese, Arabic, and a host of other languages are needed to fulfill our mission to analyze foreign communications, translate texts and transcribe tapes. They also help share knowledge of their area of the world with members of market groups.

Electronic Engineers also find a vast array of specialties from Signal Processing and CAD/CAM to Speech Processing and Computer Security.

The mission is vital, the variety staggering. And the benefits are also impressive. Our employees enjoy competitive compensation plus the many advantages of the Baltimore-Washington area.

If you're in search of a meaningful career with variety and distinction, look to NSA. Schedule an interview through your College Placement Office. Or write to us at the address below.

NSA will be on campus Nov. 20th interviewing graduating seniors for Engineering, Computer Science, Math and Language positions. Limited summer positions are available for those who have completed junior year.

Student press case heard

By KEVIN C. HEIL

A case is currently being heard in the U.S. Supreme Court that will decide whether school administrations should be allowed to censor student newspapers that are tied to a class in the school's academic curriculum.

The case, Hazelwood School District v. Kuhlmeier, marks the first time that a school press case has been argued before the Supreme Court.

The Court will decide whether a school-sponsored newspaper that has been produced as part of a journalism class is a public forum protected by the First Amendment, and whether school officials should be permitted to censor a school-sponsored publication.

According to the Fall 1987 edition of the Student Press Law Center Report, the case dates back to 1983 when Hazelwood (Mo.) East High School Principal Robert Reynolds removed two pages from the school's paper, Spectrum, because he considered its content "too sensitive" for high school students.

The report further stated that the two-page spread, under the headline, "Pressure describes it all for today's teenagers," contained articles which ranged from teenage pregnancy and marriage to how divorce affects children.

Students who were interviewed for the articles had given their consent for the use of the information which they provided. The students were also given pseudonyms.

The report added that Reynolds was convinced that the articles would invade the students' privacy, and possibly bring embarrassment to their families. He stated that the students might also be identified by their pseudonyms.

Many top educators in the field of journalism believe that a decision in this case against student press rights could have an adverse effect on the future of journalism education.

According to June Lytel-Murphy, a member of Villanova University's English department and the advisor to the Villanovan, a ruling against student press rights would not affect the Villanovan since the publication is not tied to the academic curriculum.

"Villanova is a private Catholic institution, which reminds us that the newspaper should adhere to certain values," said Lytel-Murphy. "In the last seven years, there has been very little in the way of dispute as to what appears in the paper," said Lytel-Murphy.

She explained that the administration may have disagreed with the way material has been presented, but it has not issued restraint as long as the article was fair or factual.

According to Lytel-Murphy, freedom of the press does exist at Villanova University. "It exists with the provision that the newspaper of record [the Villanovan] has the responsibility to carry out the mission statement of the University, which means that there are limits in dealing with subjects which in any way refute the mission statement.

"The administration generally has had the attitude of allowing the students to take responsibility for what is printed," Lytel-Murphy said.

She added that there has been no censorship in recent years, and if any changes have been made, they have been the decision of Villanovan staff members. Regarding the Supreme Court case, she believes the school and principal overreacted. She feels that an advisor for a school publication should be the person responsible for the judgment call as to whether or not material is controversial.

If a controversial journalistic issue is brought up at Villanova University, it goes before the University's communication board, said Lucyna J. Gorski, director of Student Activities.

The board reviews all areas of communication at Villanova University, including the Villanovan, Belle Air yearbook and the campus radio station, WKVU, she said.

"As long as the staff realizes their responsibility, there's no problem. The reason we win so many awards is because the people [on the staff] are committed to high standards and professionalism," Gorski said.

A decision on the Hazelwood case is expected sometime in spring 1988.

Voter registration drive to be held

By MAUREEN STAPLETON

Student Government has instituted a voter registration drive in an effort to educate students on the registration process, both within Radnor Township and through absentee ballots.

Student Government President Phil Brach stated, "We want the students to understand they have the power to make a difference."

The voter registration drive is the first concentrated push by Student Government to inform the students about the registration process. In order to gauge the interest of students in this drive, Student Government's department of external affairs conducted a survey on campus.

In response to the early indicators of the poll, Patricia Marzulli, Student Government secretary of external affairs, said, "Voter registration will be a success, not just in Radnor Township, but in general. Enough students are unregistered and express an interest to have a great effect."

For on-campus residents, the campus is divided among three different wards within Radnor Township.

Main campus is located in the second ward, second precinct. South campus is in the seventh ward, first precinct. Moriarity and Geraghty halls are in the fourth ward, second precinct.

Brach stated the fact that the campus is divided into three different wards is "over-rated." However, he speculated that if enough students change their registration to Radnor Township, the wards would be redistricted in 1990. "I'm hoping they [the students] want to say something to Radnor," he said.

Marzulli emphasized that the educational process in the drive will show how important voter registration is in the community. The drive will be a continuous process on the Villanova campus and will not end at the registration deadline before each of the elections.

The department of external affairs is also considering the possibility of providing information on the candidates before each of the elections and possible transportation to each of the ward voting sites.

However, the emphasis for the drive at the present time is to educate students on the importance of having a voice in government, either in Radnor Township or through the absentee ballot for their hometown.

Chapel

and replacing the electrical wiring.

In addition to the inside work, the committee is also looking to update the outside of the church. "The whole environment will be looked at for redesign," Tracy said. "We want a sense of more open space which will involve landscaping the pathway in a different way and possibly putting in a fountain and park benches. We also want to restore the louvers on the towers."

The next step for the committee will be to contract a liturgical design artist and elect an architectural firm. Presently they are gathering names of competent firms interested in presenting credentials.

According to Tracy, the entire restoration process will take approximately five years, including a period of about six months when the chapel may be closed. "Everything hinges on how quickly we can get started," Tracy said.

Tracy noted that the committee is now concerned with raising the funds necessary for the restoration. "The University and parish are now committed to the renovation. We now need to communicate with the people who identify with the chapel to raise the funds," Tracy said.

Embattled Drexel president quits

Amidst allegations of sexual misconduct and harassment, William S. Gaither, president of Drexel University, resigned Oct. 21.

The resignation ended six months of controversy that began when a female employee of the school filed a complaint alleging that Gaither had reached under a table and touched her knee at an April business meeting in Toronto.

He denied these charges of sexual harassment and two others made by two unidentified female employees who have since left the university.

The allegations arose at a time when Gaither received criticism from faculty and deans who accused him of making major changes at the school without first consulting them.

Drexel's school deans and faculty council asked for Gaither's resignation in May. The following month, 93 percent of the faculty gave him a vote of no-confidence.

On Oct. 21, the day Gaither resigned, the Drexel board of trustees was to vote on whether he should be retained as president. K.C.H.

U. of Penn students stabbed

Three University of Pennsylvania students were stabbed, one critically, last Saturday in two related attacks in the University City section of West Philadelphia.

The critically injured student has been identified as Robert O'Brien, 20, of Shrewsbury, Mass. The other two students, Patrick Maly of the Northeast section of Philadelphia, and Joseph Fylypowycz of the Fairmount section of the city, both 19, were treated and released.

According to Fylypowycz, he and Maly were discussing the Philadelphia 76ers with some other students. Apparently, two other riders became offended by the students' remarks and began "mouthing off." K.C.H.

Brown U. president resigns

Brown University President Howard R. Swearer announced his resignation at a news conference Oct. 16, stating that his decision had been facilitated by personal reasons and that he desired "a change of [career] direction.

"I've been thinking about it for six months. Eighteen years of being a college and university president is a long time without a break," Swearer said.

Swearer, Brown's 15th president, is credited with reducing the school's annual budget deficit and raising its international stature during his 11-and-one-half-year tenure.

Swearer stated that he would remain at Brown until a successor was chosen. J.R.

University ranked

1,329 college presidents were surveyed, 764 of whom replied.

In the previous survey, Villanova was also ranked first in the Eastern comprehensive category. However, this year Villanova received an even higher rating, with 48.4 percent of the college presidents in the category placing it in the top 10, compared to 32.7 percent in the previous survey, according to an inter-office communication written by Eugene J. Ruane, director of Public Relations.

Behind Villanova in the Eastern comprehensive category were Ithaca College, in New York, with a 37.1 percent rating; Rochester Institute of Technology, New York, with a 35.5 percent rating; City University of New York, Brooklyn College, with 32.3 percent; and Worcester Polytechnic Institute, in Massachusetts, with a 30.6 percent rating.

City University of New York — Hunter College, and Providence College, in Rhode Island, were tied for the sixth place rating with 20.9 percent each. Fairfield University, in Connecticut, placed eighth with 27.4 percent. Simmons College, in Massachusetts, was ninth with a 24.2 percent rating.

Villanova's tuition, cited as $8,000 in the article, was lower than six of these 10 other schools.

The Eastern comprehensive category in which Villanova was placed was one of nine total categories.

Stanford University was rated the top national university and Williams College, in Massachusetts, was rated best national liberal arts college.

Living history abroad courses set

By TRACEY WHARTENBY

Two three-credit living history abroad courses, integrating classwork with a Spring Break trip to Mexico or France, will be offered during the spring semester.

According to Dr. Michael E. Burke, history professor and director of the honors program, the course, Mexico, Past and Present, is one that combines classwork at Villanova with an eight-day trip to Mexico during Spring Break.

Taught by Burke and the Rev. Ray Jackson, O.S.A., of the peace and justice department, the course material will concentrate on issues such as political structures, poverty, economic underdevelopment and the contradictions of contemporary Mexican culture.

According to Burke, the trip is designed so that participants may explore the rich diversity of Mexico. The class will visit Indian pyramids, colonial plazas, cathedrals, museums and small villages. The students will meet with bankers, social workers, missionaries and U.S. Embassy officials.

The class will also enjoy some free time so they may experience the country individually, said Burke. Participants will divide their time between Mexico City and the colonial province of Michoacan.

The course consists of a series of lectures and readings, and the trip costs $800 per person.

France Through the Ages is a three-credit course that includes visits to Paris, Versailles, Mont-St. Michel, the Normandy beaches and the Loire Valley chateaux area.

The course is taught by Dr. Raymond Cummings of the history department, who will concentrate on connecting the history of France with what will be seen on the trip; and Professor Rene Mongeau of the modern languages department, who will emphasize the art, culture and language of France.

The course material focuses on several periods of French history — the Middle Ages, the Renaissance, the age of the Bourbons, the Enlightenment and Revolution — and contemporary France. The trip costs $1,078 per person, which includes hotel accommodations for nine nights.

The living history abroad courses were created nine years ago by Burke and Dr. John A. Doody, chairperson of the philosophy department.

Students who do not want to become involved in the course are still welcome to accompany the class on the trip.

Villanova's reputation attracts top faculty

By DANTE J. SCALA

Villanova's growing academic reputation has aided the University in gaining "top people" for its faculty staff, said the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs, in an interview Tuesday.

"People are beginning to realize how good we [the University] are," said Gallen. He stated that increased faculty writings and publications, along with the presence of certain institutes and journals, have aided in the "significant" rise of Villanova's academic name.

This rise has come during a time when the University has been raising the number of its full-time faculty. During the last five years, the staff has risen from 463 professors to 537, a 16 percent increase. Gallen attributed this growth to an increase in faculty in certain departments and the creation of new programs, such as computer science and the master's of business administration.

Other reasons for the recent spurt of faculty hirings include an attempt to reduce the number of part-time faculty and the replacement of retired faculty. The number of retirees has been small, however, said Gallen.

Gallen explained that the highest faculty turnovers have taken place in the English, history and mathematics departments.

A significant number of those being hired have degrees from Ivy League schools and other prestigious national colleges and universities, according to the faculty listings in the back of the 1987-88 University Bulletin.

For example, the English department has recently hired three professors with doctorates from Harvard, Princeton and Cornell, respectively, according to Dr. Sterling Delano, chairperson of the English department.

People are beginning to realize how good we [the University] are.

The Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs

Gallen stated that there is a budget for recruiting efforts and a conscious effort is made to get the best people for the staff.

One factor that hampers the recruiting effort is the lure of industry, said Gallen. People who earn doctorates in scientific and business areas, such as mathematics, physics, computer science, accounting and marketing, are in demand in the business world, where they can make more money than they can at a University. Thus, there is a smaller supply of people possessing doctorates for academic institutions.

Villanova is still getting top people from the remaining supply, said Gallen.

In contrast, people with liberal arts doctorates are in greater supply because there is less demand for them in industry, said Gallen. Thus, potential professors in such areas as the humanities are competing for University faculty positions. Six hundred applications were recently received for three openings in the English department, according to Delano.

General guidelines for faculty hiring include both the potential for scholarship and for teaching, said Gallen. He stated that the two respective talents are of equal importance in hiring considerations. Faculty candidates generally need to have doctorates and records of publication, he stated.

Delano echoed Gallen's statement, saying that his department was looking for people who are committed to both research and teaching.

In addition, Delano explained that his department has been able to recruit young, talented faculty with very impressive credentials to replace the eight professors who have retired since 1980. The new additions "have added to a department in which there already is a number of talented people," he stated.

Gallen stated that the recent increase in the number of faculty will now halt because of space limitations on campus. Currently, there is no more space in which to put additional faculty, he stated.

Gallen said that the creation of a new academic building would help to solve the problem of space limitations. The construction of a new building, which is on a list of possible projects for the University's Planning and Priorities Committee, would provide more classrooms and office space.

Delano agreed with Gallen on the need for a new academic building, stating that space limitations have blocked the expansion of his currently "understaffed" department.

He stated that although the part-time teachers in the English department are "devoted," he would like to decrease their number and increase the number of full-time professors. This would put more full-time professors into freshmen classrooms.

Gallen also mentioned the expansion of Mendel Hall to accommodate new laboratories as another possibility. There is currently a lot of academic planning going on, he said.

Hahn speaks on U.S.S.R. visit

By SABINA PIERCE

Dr. Jeffrey Hahn, a Villanova political science professor, spoke at an honors colloquium Oct. 9 about his visit to the Soviet Union. Hahn went to the Soviet Union for four months last year with his family on a Fulbright teaching scholarship to teach students at Moscow State University.

Hahn taught a computer course that consisted of public opinion research and statistics to analyze public behavior. He is the first professor to teach such a course in the Soviet Union.

Hahn's course was designed to be a computer lab with no more than 20 students, but on the first day there were 60 students signed up. By the second half of the semester, there were only 15 left.

"I felt discouraged at first, but I then found out that my seminar was on a voluntary basis only; no credits were given as in usual university courses," he said.

Day-to-day consumer life in Russia is horrible compared to western standards.

Dr. Jeffrey Hahn political science professor

Hahn thought that the only reason why students were attending his course was out of intellectual curiosity.

While in the Soviet Union, Hahn and his family stayed with a Soviet couple in their apartment. Hahn found their way of living quite different from ours.

"Day-to-day consumer life in Russia is horrible compared to western standards," said Hahn.

He noticed this when he found it very difficult to find laundry detergent. He had to go to several stores.

"Simple little tasks took an enormous amount of time," said Hahn.

When he took one of his sport jackets to be dry cleaned, he stood in a line for a half-hour, filled out three forms and had to strip the jacket of all its buttons. He noticed that housewives in the Soviet Union buy a surplus of hard-to-find items and swap them with other housewives for other hard-to-find items.

All in all, Hahn found his stay in the Soviet Union pleasant. He thought Westerners have a wrong impression of the Soviet people. "I like the people in the Soviet Union. They are very nice people," he stated.

OUR FINANCIAL ANALYST PROGRAM

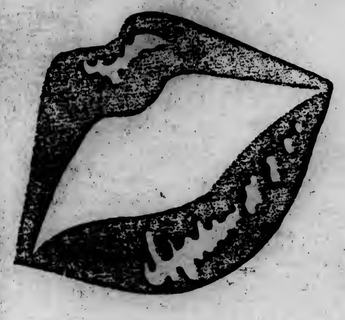
More Than A Learning Experience

The financial Analyst Program at Salomon Brothers is one of the firm's direct links to the future. To the college graduates who join us each year, we offer the most balanced variety of business opportunities of any major investment bank in the world. Analysts learn our business by joining teams of peers and senior professionals, serving clients, contributing to our success, and providing the day-to-day assistance we need and value.

The core two-year program is based in Investment Banking: Corporate Finance, Financial Institutions, Municipal Finance, and Real Estate Finance. These are high visibility areas in the business world where assignments are challenging and creativity is prized. The analyst program is an excellent base for learning the role of the investment banker.

Salomon Brothers is recognized as a major global presence in investment banking. From our traditional strength in trading and sales, we have expanded into the multiple and still emerging disciplines of finance. We have earned international respect for our high standards of professionalism and our integrity. Our finance activities — providing advice and raising capital for business and government — are integral and essential elements of Salomon's business.

Although Salomon Brothers has grown rapidly in the past decade, we are committed to keeping our culture intact. We place a high priority on training both in the classroom and on the job. We believe in the work ethic, in personal integrity and in teamwork.



Above all, we offer a learning experience that is demanding, absorbing, challenging and, quite often, exciting. And, for the dedicated, inquisitive analyst, it can provide even more.

Chapel restoration is long overdue

For more than 100 years, the Villanova Main Chapel has been an integral part of our community. Thousands of students and friends have passed through it's doors to celebrate the liturgy, to marry or to baptize their children. However, that strong symbol of the Catholic faith and of the Augustinian tradition has fallen into disgraceful disrepair. For this reason, we applaud the long overdue decision to begin a complete renovation of the chapel.

Certainly, it is no secret that the chapel's condition needs improvement. During its existence there have been no major repairs, and the pews, stained glass windows and marble have deteriorated. All must be either replaced or refurbished.

Furthermore, if repairs were made, they were not performed adequately. For instance, the lourves in the spires were just boarded up instead of being properly mended, taking away from the church's aesthetic value. Now, though, the years of neglect will finally be remedied.

However, the committee should ensure that the renovations do not change the architectural design of the building. Before laying terrazzo or rearranging the church for more open space, the original style should be researched and closely followed.

At present, the only stumbling block preventing the restoration process from beginning is the acquisition of funds. The administration and trustees must put this project high on their priorities list and preserve this symbol of the Augustinian tradition.

Fix the dorms

The recent appointment of a staff member to act as a liaison between Maintenance and Residence Life was certainly a wise decision, for clearly, the need for the liaison and the two departments to attack several chronic problems together is evident.

First of all, the speed with which residents' non-emergency maintenance requests are processed desperately needs to be reviewed. All too often, repairs of broken windows, faucets and doors take weeks or are not done. All maintenance requests should be handled promptly.

Secondly, the University should use better judgment when it comes to heating the dormitories. Although temperatures dipped down into the 30s and 40s many nights this past month, dormitory residents were frequently left to shiver in unheated rooms. Is a University that does not provide heat during cold weather looking out for the welfare of residents? We think not.

Thirdly, many of the older dormitories on campus are in sad shape. Routine maintenance has been neglected. Often just a fresh coat of paint or some minor remodeling is needed, but the University has not done the job. Action should be taken now before the dormitories become more run down.

Additionally, since residents in many cases receive less than adequate housekeeping services, the new liaison should work to improve their quality as well. Bathrooms are often dirty, hallways are often not swept and showers are not cleaned properly, leading to a buildup of mildew and germs. Students paying $4,100 to $4,500 a year for room and board deserve to live in clean, well-kept dormitories that are not a threat to their health.

The Maintenance/Residence Life liaison has his work cut out for him. Whether he and the Maintenance and Housekeeping departments will be equal to the task remains to be seen. We, the Villanovan, challenge them prove us wrong. Remedy the conditions in the dormitories, dormitories.

Letters to the Editor

Adhere to Catholic values

To the Editor:

After working at Bryn Mawr College for a year, I recently accepted a secretarial position at Villanova. I was quite happy about the change, having come from the secular-humanist environment at Bryn Mawr in which I never felt quite comfortable, to the familiar, Catholic environment of Villanova and the respected Augustinian tradition.

The only "fly" in the academic "ointment" so far, has been a sight which greeted me my first day at work and once or twice thereafter — a table set up in the Connelly Center for the purpose of signing up new members for the National Organization for Women (NOW). Please correct me if I am wrong, but I thought I had left the secular-humanism behind me. Nothing could have jarred me more than seeing this group trying to drum up support on a Catholic campus.

NOW is an avid and unabashedly strident supporter of abortion — a position that is totally opposed by the Catholic Church. To my mind they have absolutely no business recruiting on a Catholic campus — or is there any such thing anymore as a Catholic campus?

I have heard disturbing rumors from many Catholic colleges that we are not really adhering to Catholic values as strongly as we should be on some Catholic campuses, and are giving many ideas, now matter how inimical to the Church, a wide berth of acceptance.

We should guard against losing our values in the modern candy-shop, pick-and-choose style of morality being offered everywhere else these days, lest we become just another roadstop on the way to the materialistic, me-first, get-rid-of-whatever-gets-in-my-way lifestyle.

Outlaw realistic toy guns

By SUSAN TOLVE

Tomorrow night may be the last Halloween many dress-up cops, robbers and cowboys will be toting authentic-looking guns. New Jersey, Massachusetts and California are all considering legislation to curb the use of realistic toy guns, and Burbank, Calif. has already approved a ban on toy gun sales.

Toy guns, after all, can have the same devastating effects as their realistic counterparts.

A 19-year-old man playing a lazer tag game in California, aimed his $40 toy gun at a police officer, who retaliated with two shotgun blasts that killed the teenager on April 7.

In Burbank, Calif., a man waving a toy replica of a .45-caliber automatic pistol interrupted a live broadcast for KNBC-TV, ordering consumer reporter David Horowitz to read a statement on Aug. 19.

Sheriff Deputy Dennis Kiser of Beaverton, Ore., came close to shooting a teenager walking toward him with a replica of a submachine gun. He saw the youth insert a clip into what appeared to be a weapon. The clip turned out to be a water reservoir; the weapon was a squirt gun.

"If I had followed my training, I would have killed him," said Kiser, according to an Oct. 23 Associated Press article.

Instances such as these are not new. Toy guns have been used in holdups for years, but now the replicas are becoming more realistic and more popular.

The legislation in California and Massachusetts would ban sales of all toy weapons except those with transparent barrels. New Jersey legislation would ban possession of toy guns.

Such efforts mark the beginning of a long overdue stand against the potentially dangerous use of toy weapons. But why only ban either sales or possession? If only sales are banned, toy weapons can be bought in other states and still used legally. If only possession is banned, why sell something that no one is allowed to use?

All states should ban both the possession and sales of toy guns. Too often they are mistaken for real weapons — and real weapons have been mistaken for toys. If children grew up easily recognizing the difference between real and toy guns, there would be a lot less household accidents. I will never forget my younger brother finding my grandfather's pistol (my grandfather was a security guard) and thinking it was a toy. Luckily, my mother was nearby.

While stricter hand gun legislation could save lives, this is a controversial issue involving the constitutional right to bear arms. But legislation banning realistic-looking toy guns can save lives without the controversy. Children can still play their games — just with transparent or brightly-colored weapons.

Sacrificing the authenticity of toys is a small price to pay for a safer society — one with less holdups and less unnecessary shootings.

Enough people have been killed. Now we need to kill the danger and fear of toy guns by outlawing the possession and sale of realistic-looking toy weapons.

Update Villanova

By JOHANNE C. CHARP

Villanova University, one of the finest institutions of higher learning in the nation, offers academic excellence, a spiritual atmosphere, as well as a wide variety of athletic and extracurricular activities.

Villanova looks great on paper, but needs to focus its efforts on updating the University in many aspects in order to remain competitive among comparable schools.

Areas such as housing, music and theatre facilities must be improved for Villanova to continue as the No. 1 comprehensive institution in the East.

First and foremost, the present University housing situation is most destructive to the Villanova community as a whole. Generally, housing is offered to most students during their freshman and sophomore years, but denied for their remaining two years. With the exceptions of scholarship athletes, presidential scholars and the few "regular" students offered housing, Villanova juniors and seniors are forced to find accommodations within the neighboring communities.

While living in an off-campus house or apartment may be positive in that it offers students a touch of real life, for the most part, living off-campus separates the student from college life and denies him an integral part of the Villanova experience.

The University can no longer function as a community because one-half of its students live on campus while the other half is dispersed throughout the surrounding neighborhoods.

Villanova must reevaluate its priorities and concentrate on housing its upperclassmen. The construction of two south campus dormitories is a positive step, but it is just one of many needed to radically improve the housing situation.

Villanova should invest in on-campus apartments for upperclassmen as well as additional dormitories in order to accommodate at least 80 percent of its enrollment. On-campus apartments would give upperclassmen the freedom of living on their own, and at the same time alleviate the problems of many students violating housing codes in the neighboring communities.

Villanova looks great on paper, but needs to focus its efforts on updating the University in many aspects in order to remain competitive among comparable schools.

Villanova's theatre department consistently offers quality productions, but is forced to work with inadequate facilities. Anyone who has seen a show at Vasey Theatre knows how limited the seating capacity is and how outdated the stage and backstage areas are.

A closer look at the facility will reveal that the dressing and make-up area is nothing more than a limited, cramped space within a storage and boiler room.

Villanova offers no sound-proof practice rooms where a singer or musician can warm up for an audition or performance. Quality, in-tune pianos are certainly a rarity on campus, but if acquired, would greatly improve Villanova students' cultural experience.

The inadequate theatre and music facilities severely limit Villanova's capacity to compete culturally with similar institutions. Our excellent liberal arts program is not complete without decent performing arts facilities, and the University should address this problem.

I love Villanova and will be the first to defend our quality institution. Yet improvement is definitely needed in the housing and performing arts areas in order for Villanova to remain a highly ranked school in the nation.

Republican urges U.S. to stop zero-zero concept

By LOU MESHON

The Soviet Union has had its economic miracles. It has matched the West at the forward edge of military technology. It is chipping into the frozen treasures of Siberia. It has created an enormous merchant marine and a Navy of global reach. But these achievements have been bought at the price of consumer starvation. The only way the Soviet consumer can be compensated for 70 years of deprivation is by savings on defense.

The so-called zero-zero concept regarding intermediate-range nuclear forces (INF) undoubtedly offers the Soviet Union breathing space. Zero-zero means eliminating INF weapons from the European strategic zone. The agreement would confine the versatile Soviet SS-20 missile to east of the Ural Mountains. In return, America's cruise-missiles and Pershing-2's would leave Europe altogether.

It seems a fair trade-off. But, although the Soviets might eventually be able to defend against cruise-missiles, they have no hope of dealing with Pershing-2. Given the awesome costs of matching America's Strategic Defense Initiative, particularly in the short-range dimension, the sacrifice of SS-20 seems a cheap price to pay for the economic benefits of zero-zero.

Zero-zero promises a stronger Soviet Union in the long run, through a more contented work force, a larger civilian economy and a slower timetable for matching the United States in intercontinental SDI. Why is Europe so frightened by the thought of U.S. withdrawal of missiles, troops or worse — both? The reasons are as follows: The Soviet Union maintains 30 divisions in East Germany, Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

Britain and West Germany, the two highest-spending NATO members, field only 15 divisions in the central region. The Soviet Union deploys 600 short-range nuclear missiles there. Britain, West Germany, Belgium and Holland between them deploy no more than 127, and the warheads are under American control.

The disparities abound in every other military sector. The British and West German air forces have 700 combat aircrafts in the central region; the Soviets 2,900. In tanks, the figures are 9,000 for European NATO states and 19,500 for the Soviet Union. In artillery pieces, NATO has 4,000 and the Soviets have 10,000.

But counting in the best of the Warsaw Pact forces, those of East Germany, Poland and Czechoslovakia, immediately make the imbalance greater. And looming within the whole equation is the factor of Soviet and Warsaw Pact reserves. Remember, the Russians throw nothing away. Soviet conscripts are being trained on ancient T-34's, the tanks with which the Red Army fought at Stalingrad!

Soviet military warehouses are stuffed with equipment Western armies would have junked long ago. The personnel are available to man them. Conscriptions is an instrument of social control throughout the Soviet bloc that adds 1.3 million trained men to its military reserves each year.

NATO cannot begin to move these resources. West Germany has a reserve army of 600,000. But the real source of reinforcements is the United States. The REFORGER (Reinforcement Germany) program can put a whole division into the central region in 24 hours.

Its symbolic effect is even greater than its material importance. REFORGER demonstrates the United States will as well as its capacity to stand by Europe. No matter that the Soviet Union has 30 divisions that can be moved at short notice. It is the knowledge that the United States could strengthen its forces in West Germany in a crisis that has calmed European fears for 20 years. The prospect of zero-zero has agitated those fears all over again.

Europeans feel more threatened than they have been since the heyday of Stalinism. Because of this, it is my strong conviction that zero-zero be stopped. The United States should use the opportunity to drive the Soviets into an arms race that they cannot win unless they further starve the already desperate population of their country. This would surely secure a decisive victory for freedom with the vanquishment of Communism, and, as I quote President Reagan: "The destruction of the evil Soviet Empire!"

Janosik succeeds where Counseling Center failed

To the Editor:

I would like to commend Villanova University for the establishment of the Center for Alcohol and Drug Assistance and for recognizing the abilities of Jan Janosik.

To make a long story short, I went to the Counseling Center last year with a lot of problems. They made me wait three weeks for an appointment and then after three appointments were clueless as to what was the primary cause of my problems. They were not very friendly and certainly did not seem to care much about me.

They "diagnosed" me as in an anxiety state and recommended I see the study skills person who would motivate me to go to classes and to study. Needless to say, my problem got worse.

After talking with my R.A. one night, he suggested I talk with Jan Janosik. After my Counseling Center experience I did not think it would do any good, but I agreed. Janosik saw me the very next day and made me feel very welcome and at ease. Her warm personality and astute observations about my physical condition and emotional state were very reassuring.

It only took her a short while to ask me about my drinking and drugging. The Counseling Center did not ask one question about alcohol or drugs. Anyway, I felt confident immediately that Janosik knew exactly where I was coming from and could help me. She met with me every week, sometimes twice per week, all year long, and thanks to her, I am now living my life drug-free.

At one point in counseling, Janosik felt I should talk with a psychologist, and referred me to the Counseling Center. After hearing my previous story, she immediately made a call to a psychologist off campus, got me an appointment the following day and drove me there the first time to introduce me. Thanks to Janosik's help, my relationships with my family are much improved, my grades are better and, best of all, I like who I have become.

I strongly suggest that any V.U. student who needs help should go see Janosik in the new Center for Alcohol and Drug Intervention. It will be worth it!

Replace abortion ad

To the Editor:

We had the opportunity to read the Villanovan over the Parents' Weekend. We were struck by the ad for Amnion Crisis Pregnancy Center with its clear focus on Abortion counseling. We realize that you, as editors, have "responsible freedom of expression" but this ad gives the impression that Villanova condones abortion. We know that is not the truth. We think that the paper does express who the school is.

Villanova's mission statement includes its commitment to search for world peace and justice. We assume that this includes the injustice of taking the life of the unborn child.

We suggest that the ad for that counseling center be replaced with an advertiser who is more consistent with Villanova's philosophy.

Keep Tolentine open at night

To the Editor:

I wish to call attention to a new policy instituted by the University early this semester. All classrooms in Tolentine Hall are to be locked after being "cleaned." In purusing the University Bulletin, I came across Villanova's Mission Statement:

> This community (Villanova) serves society by developing and sustaining an academic environment in which the potentialities of its members may be realized. Villanova is committed to those same high goals and standards of academic integrity and excellence as well as corporate achievement that characterize all worthy institutions of higher learning.

In contrast to this statement stands this new policy that severely limits every student's potentialities. It is in the best interests of neither the student body or the University and is inconsistent in regard to University ideology.

It was only two weeks ago when I became aware of this regulation. It was 12:30 a.m., Sunday night. One of my roommates was watching TV, and the other was trying to sleep. Besides, the noise level in the Quad makes it virtually impossible to study at night, or any time for that matter. Hence, I decided to do what I had thought to be the most logical option and go to Tolentine. I had two midterms, a speech and a paper all due the following week.

It was not 10 minutes after I began to study intensely when a custodian came in and politely informed us that the room was closed. I was perplexed and questioned him as to when this ruling had become effective. He said that it was instituted about two weeks ago and went on to helpfully direct me to Rooms 301 and 204, which are now designated as the "all-night" rooms.

Needless to say, I found Room 301 packed with students, so I decided to check out the scene down in Room 204. Again the same scenario.

It seems contradictory that a university that promotes education to its highest degree, and whose policies are centered around facilitating the faculty and students in meeting their academic needs, would support such a system that actually hinders academic capabilities.

Villanova, I am proud to say, is one of the most progressive universities in the country. Our criteria for admission, academic standards and university policies (not to mention increased tuition), all attest to this credence, as does the U.S. News and World Report Survey of College Presidents.

Once again, Villanova has been ranked the No. 1 Eastern Comprehensive institution. The recent decision by the university to close Tolentine proves to be a step backward in principle.

First, the total seating capacity of Rooms 204 and 301 combined is only 73. That is not even a full 1 percent of student population, should we include graduates and University College students. Obviously, to me at least, it does not seem as though the University is promoting studious activities. Nor, I think, would it appear that way to the prospective student, parent, faculty member or evaluator.

As a member of the Blue Key Society, one of our many responsibilities is campus tours. Having ample study space is a primary concern to students and parents alike.

Where can I study? How late is the library open? Is it impossible to study in the dorm? The above are all the most frequently asked questions. In addressing those concerns, it used to be comforting for me to confidently assure prospective students that, "You can always study in Tolentine Hall. It is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week." Some saw that as a privilege, others as a given.

Secondly, students both on and off campus, graduate and undergraduate, definitely take advantage of Tolentine Hall late at night. The space is utilized. Most of the time, there is just the right amount of people per room where you can work and not be distracted. Many times, students meet for group "study sessions." They exchange notes and ideas, review material covered in class and in text, use the chalkboard if necessary and quiz each other.

In business, this philosophy is practiced through implementing what is called "quality circles," and has been proven quite successful. I particularly find this an effective way to study. With only two rooms open, though, study meetings are either eliminated, or cause a major distraction to those who are studying individually.

In addition, the new set-up is simply inconsistent. We never know when a room is going to be locked — sometimes 11 p.m., sometimes midnight, sometimes much later. There have been nights recently when I have walked out of Tolentine about 3 a.m. and rooms that had been locked at 11 p.m. had not been cleaned at all!

Furthermore, the new policy is not only inadequate but also creates more difficulties than it was designed to eliminate. Admittedly, I know of, have witnessed, and even have assisted, in the forced entry of a locked classroom in Tolentine. Space, like any other scarce commodity, will be acquired through alternative means if the market does not supply it.

I do not know, maybe it is me, but I would think that it makes a pretty sad statement about the University when students have to break into classrooms in order to study. It is a situation that can be easily corrected.

Should the University not amend this policy, the only alternative would be that they provide adequate study lounges in each of the resident halls. If you have ever been to the Sullivan lounge, you may want to carefully define the term adequate. This alone, however, will not solve all the problems. "Consideration hours" (a term not applicable to the quad) would have to be enforced — good luck.

In any event, it is imperative that some action be taken as soon as possible. The situation is bad now, but let us think of how it will be around finals.

In the past, Villanova's administration has done an excellent job in handling the school's academic affairs; I trust they will continue. However, when considering the new policy, I urge them to closely examine the severe ramifications it imposes. The University Senate, all Deans, faculty, and the student body should re-evaluate the policy, and I am sure they will see, as many do already, that it does not, in any way, improve our academic program, that it is not in either the students or university's best interests, and that it is an unnecessary change in policy at this point in time.

Editor's Note: As a result of numerous complaints, such as the above, from both students and administrators, the rule to close Tolentine rooms after cleaning was reversed.

Editors' note

In response to readers who are offended by the Amnion Crisis Pregnancy Center advertisement, the Villanovan editors would like to explain its placement in our newspaper.

The center does not perform or support abortion. Rather, the center offers a variety of services for women who are pregnant and do not know where to turn. The services offered are completely free and confidential and include the following: education on pregnancy, on abortion and on alternatives to abortion; counseling and support; housing for women in private homes if necessary; prenatal and postnatal information; childbirth education classes; clothing for both mother and baby; and parenting classes.

An Amnion Crisis Pregnancy Center representative explained that, although the center does not "force people to do anything, we encourage people to carry their babies to full term."

As the newspaper of record for Villanova University, the Villanovan follows the University mission statement, and thus all ads comply with that statement. The placement and wording of the Amnion advertisement was approved last year by the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, and Lucyna Gorski, director of Student Activities.

Register to vote

To the Editor:

A few weeks ago, a voter registration drive was held in Connelly Center, an event sponsored every semester by the College Republicans. The main goal for the past two semesters has been to register students who live on campus, or who live off campus in Radnor Township.

With a significant student voter block, it is hoped that Radnor Township officials will look a little more kindly toward Villanova and its students. Unfortunately, however, the apathetic nature of Villanova students specifically, and young people in general, was evidenced by the relatively low number of people who registered.

The duty of every citizen in the country is to vote if they are legally able to do so. A democracy is a government of the people, so if no one votes, the result is not very representative. Young people can always expect to get the short end of the stick if they remain silent. If Radnor Township continues to push around Villanova students, it is our fault.

Let us consider young people (age 18-20) as a group and senior citizens (age 65 and up). Both are groups out of the mainstream of public life, yet the political clout of the two groups differ tremendously. Young people are mostly in school or in low-paying jobs and seniors at this age are generally retired.

The reason the political clout differs so much is simply because seniors vote and young people for the most part do not. In the 1984 presidential election, of people in the age group 18-20, only 47 percent were registered and only a trifling 36.7 percent actually voted.

For seniors, an overwhelming 76.9 percent are registered, and more importantly, 67.7 percent voted. This translates into power, because if nothing else, most politicians are poll watchers. They are responsible to everyone they represent, but only a registered voter can vote them out of office.

This power that senior citizens have can best be illustrated by the controversy surrounding Social Security. Any politician who advocates "reforming" the muchflawed Social Security system, is targeted by seniors as an enemy to their interests. This politician would probably lose the senior vote, which in some states, such as Florida, where the percentage of senior citizens is very high, could cost him or her the election. Therefore, the area of Social Security reform is a very touchy subject and seldom mentioned in Congress.

Contrary to this, when in many states the drinking age was raised to 21, politicians could vote for the raise because they knew it would have basically no effect on their electibility. If most young people are not registered or do not vote anyway, what does the elected representative have to fear? People who are not registered cannot vote him or her out of office.

While the issues of the drinking age and dealing with Radnor Township differ in scope, the source of the problems is the same. Young people can be ignored because they are of little political significance. The best way to solve these problems and to prevent future problems is to register and vote. If a person is elected by you, he will most likely listen to you because he knows you could just have easily voted for the other guy.

It would probably be Radnor Township's worst fear if a Villanova student ended up on the township board, but this cannot happen without the full support of the Villanova community.

Student confesses committing a sin

To the Editor:

In today's world of social unrest, racial tensions and the ever present threat of death by AIDS or nuclear war, I feel I must confess to Villanova, and, yes, to the society I have forsaken, a sin that plagues my conscience, a sin whose consequences could have made today's world problems pale in comparison.

Thankfully, the morally upright dining facility supervisor halted my outrageous transgression of policy by forcing me to discard the contraband.

Oh, I realize that for the insignificant sum of little more than $4,000 a year I should fall prostrate on the ground in joyous praise to the Lord for my low, gumbo-cuddle bed, for my day-old bread, and, yes, for my Wednesday yogurt. I should have been content to enjoy my feast in the exquisite banquet hall they provided, but no!

If it had not been for the support and iron will of a herculean University employee, my flesh may have been rotting in hell this very minute! The sin was, oh, how it pains me to confess this — attempting to steal a sandwich from a Villanova dining facility! (Yes, on a weekday!)

I did willfully, with malice in forethought, attempt to conceal and smuggle a few morsels of food to eat at my leisure just as a common vagabond would steal strawberry tarts from a helpless old woman's windowsill.

Thankfully, the morally upright dining facility supervisor halted my outrageous transgression of policy by forcing me to discard the contraband. To him I say, thank you, and to you, Villanova, I implore you, please allow me to atone for my acts!

Villanova boasts state pageant winner

By CHRISTOPHER PEPE

"Ladies and gentlemen, I now present to you the talented and beautiful Miss New Jersey, Robin Lange." (Applause.)

When I received this week's assignment, I had mixed emotions. I was interested in meeting Miss New Jersey, but in the back of my mind was the thought of a stereotypical pageant princess. However, with Robin Lange this is hardly the case.

Lange, a Villanova senior theatre major, truly deserves her rich rewards. Having worked her way through the first four years of college, Lange knows the hardships of being a working student.

In an attempt to alleviate monetary pressures, Lange's mother entered her into the local beauty pageant, Miss Burlington County.

Meanwhile, Lange, having taken a semester off, was working in Japan, oblivious to her newly altered destiny. As matters progressed, Lange found herself the winner of her first pageant ever and on her way to the Miss New Jersey pageant.

Realizing the rewards that could be gained, Lange took the initiative and began preparing for the next pageant. She enrolled in aerobics classes, ordered a "special swimsuit" and began designing her gown. Lange also began writing a dramatic monolgoue that she would recite for her talent.

As the preparation progressed, an inner desire to win and go to the Miss America pageant arose, although a victory was not expected. When the time arose, Lange was a smash hit. Through her experience on stage, she was able to feel comfortable in front of the many people.

Having reached the Miss America pageant, Lange had already reached her monetary goal. What should be noted is that the Miss America pageant is a scholarship pageant, not strictly a beauty pageant. One must be in college or pursuing a degree to qualify, with tuition payment being the ultimate reward.

Now, with all pageants behind her, (and no plans for any more), Lange's life is slowly settling down. With appearances everyday, modeling contracts to fulfill and classes two days a week, it is obvious that she is still very busy. Even so, Lange finds time to dedicate to her sorority, Alpha Chi Omega; her family and her boyfriend, leaving her almost relieved she did not become Miss America.

So, what now for Lange? Well, with priorities set and money in the bank, her first goal is to get her degree. Having a love for theatre, and a desire to be in the movies, perhaps she will be in the limelight again. But for now, this beautiful and intelligent blond from New Jersey plans to take things as they come.

Road trip leads the way to unexpected events

By R. MICHAEL BULLOTTA

Midterms were no less of a burden than usual this semester. But, after burning a little midnight oil and cramming American policy to the soothing tunes of Kenny G., the worst was over.

Fall Break and a much needed excursion to Boston to visit Dad was a marvelous idea! As this atypical road trip turned out, however, getting there would be half the fun.

I had the family truckster all packed Friday night in order to alleviate any complications when I departed the following morning. The weather forecast was spectacular — sunny and 72 degrees.

Needless to say, it was overcast and 45 degrees when I revved up the blue monster and headed north. The drive was relaxation therapy and the fall colors were breathtaking. Well, perhaps breathtaking is too strong a word. Let us just say the leaves were worth looking at. Everything went just peachy until I reached the Big Apple.

The first hint of the impending disaster came as I was crossing over the Bronx on I-95. As I was maneuvering through traffic, doing my imitation of a New York City cabbie, my car stalled. Fortunately, by utilizing my keen catlike reflexes, I managed to promptly throw the beast into neutral and start her up again.

Feeling a little irked by the incident, I needed a break. It was now time to stop for gas and catch a bite to eat. Luckily, there happened to be a Sam's Salami and Sud's stand at the next exit. I had to stop. I could not be sure how far it might be to the next one.

After paying the cook at Sam's the complimentary burp, I headed back out on the highway feeling like a new man. Later history repeated itself, and my car again stalled out. This time the junkpile would not start until I pulled over and came to a complete stop.

I continued on my way with my blood pressure a bit higher, as I was now worried about whether or not my car could complete its mission.

For a while I was optimistic and the day's previous car trouble seemed miles away. But suddenly, my personal Steve Winwood concert was interrupted by a loud banging noise and consequent loss of all power in my sad excuse for transportation.

At this point in the trip, I was only about 30 miles from my father's house in Massachusetts. However, I was stranded on a major highway and not near any exits. It was getting dark, and I certainly did not feel like a Super Lotto winner.

Fortunately, the cassette player still worked. I sat in my car listening to some tunes and formulated my plan. I decided to put the hood up, and wait for a policeman to drive by. If one did not come by, I would try to walk to a phone.

After only five minutes, I spotted a state trooper. I began waving frantically, as if I had been leaving port on the Love Boat for Cabo San Lucas. Evidently the officer had other things on his mind, probably contemplating which pair of sneakers he would wear to the upcoming Policemen's Ball.

A half-hour went by. I did not relish the thought of spending the evening in my broken-down car, so I set out to find satisfaction. I walked about a mile to the next exit. When I came to the top of the exit ramp, I looked both ways,

Fall Break reunites families

By KRIS RYAN

Fall break is the time of the semester when the majority of Villanova students return to their hometowns to replenish their depleted supply of energy and brain cells and prepare themselves for the forthcoming events of the second half of the semester.

Although it is a welcome vacation for all, this mid-semester break probably means more to freshmen than to other students. One looks forward to the small conveniences taken for granted while living at home.

Fall break means sharing a bathroom with less than 20 people, eating a meal cooked to individual tastes and not kept warm under infra-red light bulbs, and having the journey to the dining room be a voyage not longer than traveling down a stairway or two. As a freshman, these things represented heaven to me, and I could not wait to go home and enjoy family living.

Whether it was because I was tired from all the studying during exams, or because I was very eager to see my family after two months of separation, or because I had been informed by my friends about how well I would be treated at home simply because I was missed so much, I had certain preconceptions as to what the initial reunion with my family would be like.

I envisioned myself returning home, tired and weary after a long and uncomfortable train ride to find my family waiting with open arms, a crackling fire in the fireplace, and the house warm, cosy and radiating with happiness. My family would gather together in the living room, the hearth of the household, and hug and kiss in joyous bliss at my homecoming while the dog barked and romped around us.

Now, maybe it is because we do not have a dog, or perhaps because the fireplace is not in working condition, but this was not exactly the way the events occurred. It was not that my family was not ecstatic to see me, nor I them, but simply that they did not expect anything to be different since I had left.

On the contrary, I discovered many inconsistencies with what my life was like before I left for college compared to what it was like after I returned. There were differences, but not the ones I had anticipated.

The first thing I noticed when I arrived home was the change in the time schedule. Although I remained in the same time zone, I suffered from a type of jet-lag

V.U. Band travels to Windy City

By SHEILA COURTER

Do you have the urge to travel, meet exciting people and learn new things? All this can be yours if you have the tolerance for uniforms, nicknames and two men constantly blowing whistles. No, this is not the military, this is the Villanova University Band.

Beside playing and marching at football games, the band spends Fall Break on tour. This year is the band's ninth year of travel. In the past, the band has traveled to Canada, Washington, D.C., and Boston.

This year, the band spent Fall Break touring Chicago, Ill. The following are the chronicles of our trip to the "Windy City."

Day One: The band left on Oct. 17 for what was an eight-and-one-half-hour bus trip to Akron, Ohio. The ride flew by as music blared and refreshments were available. Sophomores and juniors appreciated Ohio's 19-year-old drinking age.

Day Two: The band left Akron and headed for South Bend, Ind. early in the day. We practiced at Notre Dame for our first concert in Chicago. The V.U. Band will be particularly remembered at a South Bend club, where one band member led a few verses of "You've Lost That Loving Feeling," proving that band members have various talents.

Day Three: We visited the Notre Dame campus, and bought out the book store. During the following week, everyone was wearing Notre Dame sweatshirts. Passersby must have mistaken us for the Notre Dame band.

We arrived in Chicago, and our first excursion was to the Sears Tower. To describe the view as "breathtaking" would be an understatement.

Day Four: The band played its first concert at DePaul. The DePaul band played exceptionally well, but seemed much too serious.

Day Five: Many members of the band visited the University of Chicago. Unlike Villanova's Sheehan Beach, the university has a real one with sand and water. Unfortunately, it was too cold to use it. We played our second concert at Resurrection High School.

Day Six: The band headed back to Akron, Ohio, another eight-hour drive.

Day Seven: We played two concerts, one at St. Hilary's School in Akron, Ohio, and the other in Greensburg, Pa., at St. Paul's School. Playing for younger children is a wonderful feeling. The audience was always full of smiles.

Day Eight: Finally, we left for home. Everyone was exhausted, and as freshman Bill Steiger expressed, "barely alive." Arriving at home, we were thankful for the memorable times we spent together in the Windy City.

Campus Ministry

By REV. RAY JACKSON, OSA

"Love God with all your mind, all your heart and all your strength. And love your neighbor as yourself."

Jesus addressed these words to the people of his day, and they are just as applicable to us as they were to them. To love yourself is to respect yourself, to know your good qualities, talents and abilities.

It is to have some vision to your life, to have a sense of direction, to contribute to making the world a happier place for others, rather than leaving a trail of gloom, or a wake of pain.

It also seems to me that to love yourself should include an understanding of your weaknesses and selfishness. I do not think that I love myself if I deny the hurt which I sometimes inflict upon others. I am irritable, indifferent, greedy and jealous at times. If I love myself, I must learn to forgive myself and seek forgiveness from those whom I have hurt.

Most of all I need to appreciate my uniqueness. God has given me my life! I have been nurtured by family and friends. It is good to be alive!

"Who is my neighbor?" the man asked Jesus. By way of a reply, Jesus told the story of the Good Samaritan. The implication was that, not only are we to consider our family and friends as neighbors, but we must learn to include the needy, the wounded, the poor, the refugee, indeed all whom we see as in need of assistance.

The understanding of love which Jesus taught had little to do with romance. Unfortunately, we often equate good feelings, sexual attraction or personality preferences with love. Jesus wants us to love even our enemies — those who oppose us, make fun of us, deceive us and even persecute us.

This is no small order for anyone, since much of our fallen nature inclines us to get even, or strike back. Only with the help of God are we able to rise above our desire for revenge.

How do I love God with my mind, my heart and my strength? A partial answer is to love myself and all my sisters and brothers in the human family. A further answer might be found in a prayer.

"I love you, my God, you are the Creator of all things in the heavens and the earth. You have brought forth life in abundance, through billions of light years, in stars and galaxies without end.

"Into the midst of the human family you have taken flesh and joined us on the journey of life. You call us friends; you died that we might have eternal life.

"You left yourself with us in a memorial meal of bread and wine, the food of life, and asked us to love one another as you love us. You have sent us Your Spirit, to renew us each day, to guide our feet on the path of peace.

"Grant to me a mind filled with wisdom, a heart filled with compassion, and a determination to seek your will in all I do. Amen."

AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY EMPLOYER

Trouble on the road to Boston

but saw no sign of civilization. It looked like my best bet was to wait by the car.

I then returned to my automotive disappointment, and attempted to solicit assistance. There were few cars on the road, and my hopes were not exactly soaring. It was at this moment when things began to go my way.

I saw a small, imported car pull over into the breakdown lane only a few yards from where my car was parked. The little car was packed as tightly as Smokey Joe's on a Thursday night with foreign-looking people. They quickly jumped out of their car, cameras in hand, and began capturing the fall foliage on film.

When I got a closer look at the tourists, I realized that they must have come over from one of the countries in the Middle East. I then tried to engage one of them in conversation to politely ask for a ride. I hoped to myself that they would not hold President Reagan's latest actions against me.

Somehow I managed, through various hand gestures and a few Arabic expressions I picked up at my local 7-Eleven, to communicate that my car was broken-down and that I needed a ride to a service station.

They were only too happy to oblige me. Sitting uncomfortably on a stranger's lap is a small price for a person in my situation to pay. They dropped me off at the nearest gas station, and, after buying out all the postcards, departed.

The man at the service station told me that he did not have a towing service and did not know of a service that was open. I tried to phone my father but there was no answer.

Again my prospects began to look very dim. It was then when a local police officer pulled into the gas station. I quickly walked over to his car.

The officer appeared to me to be one of Villanova's freshmen moonlighting as a cop to pick up some extra cash over his Fall Break. I later found out he had just graduated from the Police Academy three months prior. He called a tow for me and told me he would take me back to my abandoned car.

The officer was not much older than myself. His friendliness made me feel like I was riding with a buddy from school instead of an officer of the law. I proceeded to ask him everything about police officers that I always wanted to know but was afraid to ask. I even got a brief instruction on the operation of a police radar gun.

As we were driving back to my car, we received an emergency call and had to change course. As it happened, a woman had locked her keys in her car along with her 10-month-old baby girl. When we arrived at the scene, we were faced with a hysterical mother.

The officer calmed her by assuring her in a Superman-like manner, "Relax Ma'am, I've got everything under control." Within moments, the story had a happy ending as the mother was reunited with her infant and her car keys.

The officer drove me to my car and told me to wait for the tow which would be there soon. I thanked him for the assistance, and the exciting diversion, and he went on his way to continue serving his fellow man.

Only minutes after the officer left, the towtruck arrived. The man driving the truck got out and, without saying a word, hooked my car up to his towtruck. He then said in a low voice, "Where to?" I explained to him that my father lived in a small town outside Boston and asked him to tow my car to a dealership near his house. The truck driver made a loud grunting noise which sounded like a yes and we were on our way.

This man was crude to say the least. I thought I recognized him from last year's televised tobacco-spitting championships on HBO. His body odor was so obvious that it seemed like he smelled that way on purpose and was proud of it. But again, this was no time for me to be choosy.

After a while, I managed to have what might, in some countries, be considered a coversation with the towtruck driver. He told me that he would drop me off at the dealership with my car and that I could get a cab to drive me home.

But, after cleverly convincing him that I, too, liked Old Milwaukee beer and have been to my share of strip joints, I gained enough of his respect for him to drive me to a spot within walking distance of my final destination.

After leaving my car at the dealership, I was dropped off at the Exxon station near my father's house. I gave the driver his financial consideration and began walking, luggage in hands, on the final leg of my journey.

As I approached the house, I could see my father outside on the front porch. At first he did not recognize me, as he did not expect to see me arrive in that manner. Then he walked over to me and said; "Son, where's your car? What did you do, walk here from Philadelphia?" To this I simply replied, "It's a long story Dad, grab us a couple beers, and we'll talk."

I suppose the moral of my story is that I should never have been dumb enough to drive a brand-new American-built automobile!

Break thoughts recounted

and had to readjust to a new schedule. My family went to bed at 10:30 p.m., the time when activities come alive at Villanova.

While rising before noon on Sundays is considered a sacrilege here, at home my parents expected to see me before lunch. It was odd, but after a few days, I had finally synchronized myself to living in "family time."

A second inconsistency I noted was with my relationship with my family. I found that I got along incredibly well with my younger sister about whom I was positive three months before spent all her available free time searching for new and innovative methods to annoy me.

Could it be that I actually missed her disturbing habits and idiosyncrasies? Or maybe it was that she had a newborn respect for me as a college student. Whatever the reason, it still remains a mystery that we enjoyed one another's company for an entire week.

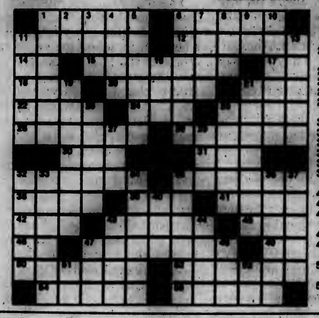
What I found especially difficult in dealing with my parents was continually informing them of my whereabouts. I do not think it unreasonable of my parents to ask such requests as to where I was going or with whom. After all, they are parents and inclined to worry for little or no reason. However, I was unused to having someone wait up for me or worry about me.

This questioniong infuriated me in high school when I lived for independence. Now, in college, it made me feel loved.

Although I was not treated like royality at home, the quality of life did improve. The second night of my break, I was served a full turkey dinner with all the trimmings. A complete dinner such as this is a rarity at home because both my parents work long hours and believe whole-heartedly in fast and easy meals. There were numerous other benefits such as choosing what the family watched on television, not having a specified curfew and getting the car whenever it was needed.

One day during break, I decided to visit my old high school. It was funny how it was so much smaller, the place that was the center of my social and educational world for four years. I could not believe that I had thought this building was the best high school in the world.

Now I did not recognize many of the students and some stranger was using my locker. Somehow I had simply assumed that the combination would have been retired after I left. I realized that I no longer was a student there, but an alumna.



I discovered that Fall Break is probably the fastest week of the school year. It was great to see my old friends, relatives and family again, but by midweek I had begun to miss the craziness of my dorm, my roommate and all the friends I have made.

The week at home was a whirlwind of excitement trying to catch up on all I have missed in the past two months. I wanted to go back, but I did not want to leave.

Knowing you can not have the best of two worlds, I reluctantly packed and returned to school. When I entered my room, I had a strange feeling and I thought to myself that it was good to be home.

Procrastination plagues Villanova students

By JACQUELINE GENTILE

Panic sets in. You have a test tomorrow. It covers six chapters. You have not so much as opened the book all semester.

"This is the last time!" you say, furious with yourself. "I swear I will never wait until the last minute again." Once is enough to make you learn, right? Wrong!

Many people find that they are chronic procrastinators. Students particularly, with so many due dates and deadlines find themselves procrastinating. If we realize that we have this problem, and over and over again, we put work off for no apparent reason, the question seems to scream out at us: Why do we procrastinate?

We are all adults here, but, maybe, just maybe, we still harbor this childlike feeling: If I ignore something long enough, such as that paper for the class you hate, maybe it will just go away.

Does the fact that we ignore something indicate an underlying problem? We most often find ourselves putting off what we dislike. Yet, perhaps the real reason is one that is greater than dislike — fear of failure. Deep down, are we so afraid of the outcome of our work that we become, in a sense, paralyzed and unable to do it?

Taking a totally different point of view, some people choose to think of procrastination in a positive sense. These people feel that they work most efficiently under pressure. They find it a challenge to do work at the last minute, racing with time to meet a deadline. Some people even feel they produce their best work when the pressure is on.

However, this point of view can only be taken so far. There is a difference between working under the pressure of a deadline and pushing work to the point where there is simply not enough time to get the job done.

Let's face it, procrastinators at this stage of the game saying that you enjoy the challenge of producing good work under pressure does not hold much weight.

There are still others who feel that doing last minute work is inevitable, especially in college. When we find ourselves with a bunch of tests and papers due in the same week, we are forced to put off work until the night before it is due (or even later).

People feel their schedules are so busy that even if they are aware of an upcoming week of tests and papers, there is no way they can start the work very far ahead of time. This theory seems rational, but could it be just another vain excuse as we attempt to defend ourselves against being called by the dreaded "P" word?

If you feel you are a born procrastinator, do not worry. There is still hope for you. Just go to your nearest bookstore and look in the self-improvement section (where there are at least 500 books on how to change your life in a day) and you will find books on how to deal with procrastination.

But ... if you just can not seem to get around to it, take heart. You are not alone.

Professor discusses working mothers

By TARA SILIGATO

On Oct. 14, a seminar, "Part-time Work for Mothers: Burdens and Benefits" took place in the Connelly Center Cinema. It was the second in a series of seminars called Work and Family: A Changing Balance sponsored by the sociology department and the University College.

The talk was given by Dr. Leslie Alexander, an associate professor at Bryn Mawr College's Graduate School of Social Work and Social Research, who has been conducting longitudinal research about women in the part-time work force.

Alexander explained that some women feel that part-time work is the answer to the problem of balancing home life and a career and that it is a step toward integrating the two.

This alternative remains attractive to women with families, although there are some disadvantages to part-time work. "Negative stereotypes abound," said Alexander. Many employers feel that part-time workers are less motivated and less productive than full-time workers.

One may ask if part-time work actually does provide integration of family life and career. Alexander tried to find the answer to this question.

In 1980, she began a study of hospital employment of two major university hospitals in the area. The part-time workers in these hospitals were typical because they did receive benefits as well as a decent salary. At the time, one hospital was not unionized and the other was only partially unionized.

Phase 1 of the study lasted two years. Alexander surveyed 215 women with at least one child at home under 18. Forty percent were nurses and the remainder were administrators, technicians, and other workers. Physicians were purposely excluded because the study was concerned with the average worker.

It was proven that both the part-time employees and the full-time employees had extreme career commitment and that they were highly satisfied with their jobs. They did, though, feel that there was stress put on them to balance their two lives.

A few years later, Alexander began a follow up that was just completed last spring. She used mail questionnaires primarily. An overwhelming 95 percent responded.

She observed that 28 percent were part-time workers, 66 percent were full-time employees, and five percent were unemployed.

Alexander found that one negative aspect was that three-fourths of the part-timers and one-half of the full-timers still had the same title. The results were consistent with the first study. They were satisfied with their job, but they still had problems balancing their time. The women felt that by working they were better role models for their children, and they were happy that they could contribute financially to their family.

The difficulties encountered in part-time work were problems with child care and commuting. Alexander found that while full-time workers utilize structured daycare, part-time workers usually rely on relatives or inconsistent sources. Many women felt that if they worked full-time they could take advantage of daycare.

Alexander found also a dual concern for children of school age who come home to empty houses — the "latchkey kids." The part-timers admitted that they many times, bring work home.

All in all, Alexander explained that both full-timers and part-timers agree that working enhances the home life as home life enhances work. Alexander concluded that even with the setbacks, full-time work and part-time work has its advantages for women.

Kappa Kappa Gamma celebrates Founder's Day

By CHRISTINA PROFICO

Oct. 7, 1987 was special day for the sisters of Kappa Kappa Gamma, as they celebrated their Founder's Day with a special dinner in the Villanova Room. The dinner was attended by a number of alumnae, representing Kappa chapters in colleges and universities all over the country.

The Zeta Iota chapter was proud this year to welcome a particularly special guest, Kappa Kappa Gamma National Fraternity President, Marian K. Williams, who was also the key speaker of the evening.

Another highlight of the night was the annual presentation of the 50-year pins to a special group of alumnae, representing 50 years of Kappa membership. The gathering was a mixture of Kappa membership. The gathering was a mixture of Kappas young and old. This particular Founder's Day marked the 117th anniversary of the founding of Kappa Kappa Gamma at Monmouth College. The evening ended with a candlelight ceremony and a strong reaffirming of Kappa spirit.

Sororities offer much

By NICOLE BLANCHE

Sororities offer university women much more than just something to put on their resume or a temporary social network. While it is true that membership does offer a sense of belonging and eases the transition to college life with a full calendar of activities, membership also developes social and business skills. Furthermore, sisterhood encourages commitment to community service and the opportunity for unlimited personal growth.

Above all, the primary focus of college is academic advancement. Many sororities place strong emphasis on excellence in scholarship. Offering a supervised group study time for pledges and sisters is one form of encouragement.

Each chapter scholarship program is different. Some chapters set up individual tutors or special help sessions. Others provide counseling or advisement for registration and additional support materials in the form of old notes, papers and tests.

A student must be organized to meet both her academic and sorority time commitments. Each sorority provides committees that challenge sisters to take on new rolls, planning and implementing special projects. This gives each sister the opportunity to share her unique talents with the chapter, as well as the opportunity to develop new talents.

A commitment to community serice is developed through each chapter's philanthropy. Students may give service directly to the community by visiting a nursing home or gathering food and clothes for a shelter.

They may also organize a fundraiser for a national charity like Children's Cancer Research.

Sisters also volunteer their time and talents in many capacities not only at Villanova but also at state and national levels. The opportunities for national service are open to any active sorority member.

Each sorority has its own unique national philsophy that provides the framework forits rituals, philanthropy, scholarship and social programs. Nationals follow pledges from induction through collegiate membership into the alumnae years.

In addition to the academic assistence, comunity service and alumnae associations there are semi-formals, T.G.s, theme parties and tailgates. These events not only give the sisters the time to cultivate friendships that last a lifetime, but also help to develop the Greek sister into a well-rounded woman.

Talley speaks

By JILL DeFORTE

Coach Talley recently spoke to a joint IFC/Panhel meeting concerning a plan to initiate more interest in Villanova football and increase attendance at the games.

According to Talley, fans play an important role in Villanova football by providing the positive mentality which is essential for player morale. The full support and spirit of the student body is a necessity for a successful team.

Talley stressed that not only does he want the students in the stadium, he wants them involved in the game, as well. This goal may be accomplished in a variety of ways, including block seating for organizations and high attendance and spirit contests.

The Greek community is urged to participate in any way possible and any suggestions may be submitted to the Athletic department.

Expansion possible

By STEVE DEL DUCO

Rumors of expansion have recently surfaced in the Greek community and expansion has been a big issue for the Interfraternity Council (IFC) all semester. According to Gary Bonas, IFC advisor and assistant director of student activities, now is the most opportune time to add new members to the standing Greek system.

When Sigma Pi was added a few years ago, a decision was made by the administration to institute a trial period before any consideration could be given to the addition of other fraternities. Now, with the withdrawal of BGT and the suspension of DKE, there seems to be room for at least one more fraternity.

According to Bonas, there is currently a group of approximately 20 students who have expressed interest in establishing a chapter of Delta Sigma Phi at Villanova. However, before a formal recognition process can be undertaken, approval of Dr. Richard Neville, vice president of Student Life, must be obtained. In addition, the IFC must also grant its approval before the fraternity can be fully recognized.

IFC/Panhel holds Halloween Party

By ANN RYAN

Hip, hip, hooray, the Greeks deserve three cheers because we are busy with philanthropy projects, and they are great! They are worthwhile services, and they are notable accomplishments.

Our most recent philanthropic project was our annual Halloween party. Each year, the combined efforts of all the fraternities and sororities create a night of ghoulish fun for many children. This year the party was held on Oct. 29 in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center.

Philanthropy chairpeople Laura Dietl and Steve Mullally organized everything from inviting the children to the details of the festivities. Next, they announced the event to each fraternity and sorority and encouraged them to participate.

Each fraternity and sorority set up their own table of tricks or treats in the Villanova Room. The combination of all these tables made the party a success. Lastly, they ran the show, making sure fun was had by all.

For the first time ever, a group of children from a poorer section of Kensington participated in the party. This was an opportunity these children may not have had the chance to enjoy.

The Halloween Party was a great success, but by no means the extent of our community service projects. Each individual fraternity and sorority runs their own projects.

This year alone the Greeks have serviced the homeless by working the Walk-a-thon Committee for the Philadelphia Homeless, and the needy by working with Project [illegible]. Whether it be through [illegible] Greeks [illegible]

Springsteen releases new album

By KEVIN HECHT

Tunnel of Love
Bruce Springsteen
* * * * *

Throughout his highly touted career, Bruce Springsteen has explored countless realms with his music. From growing up, to cars, to war and a discerning look at America, Bruce has set them all to music with energy that has been matched by none. In Tunnel of Love, Springsteen turns all his thoughts within, revealing the complex passion in his soul and the mysteries of love.

Springsteen's raw energy has always been ingrained in his music, and the marvelous storyteller has always been able to inspire through his thoughtful lyrics. Tunnel of Love rises a step above anything the Boss has ever done, showcasing a superior level of musicianship on an album containing ballads with a haunting mood, harmonious riffs with searing guitar and songs that are downright beautifully sad and pleasing to the ear.

The album deals with love in many ways, and by the record's end, Springsteen shows that love is no easy ride, comparing it to a tunnel of love in which, "It ought to be simple, ought to be easy enough, Man meets a woman and they fall in love. But the house is haunted and the ride gets rough, And you've got to learn to live with what you can't rise above, In this tunnel of love."

"Tunnel of Love" examines the ups and downs of relationships, while "All That Heaven Will Allow" reveals a happy man caught up in the glory of romance with the belief that love conquers all. ("Rain and storm and dark skies, Well now they don't mean a thing, if you got a girl who loves you, And who wants to wear your ring.")

The Boss' touching introspection in Tunnel of Love shows him in a different light, adding a new dimension to the gritty music contained on the successful Born In the U.S.A. in 1984. Springsteen lets his defenses down, revealing a warm, sensitive man who has felt the joy and pain of love and who depicts his experience through the textured beauty of the album.

Tunnel of Love uses its music to its advantage on songs such as the haunting "Tougher Than the Rest," which is backed by strong percussion and lofty synthesizers that personify the passion of a man in search of love. The screeching harmonica punctuating Springsteen's acoustic guitar in "Spare Parts" grips the listener with the painful reality of a pregnant girl's dilemma when her boyfriend runs away.

"When You're Alone" also explores the pain of love gone sour, but perhaps the album's most poignant song is "One Step Up," which has a melodic arpeggio of acoustic guitar flowing through the harmonies of Springsteen and back-up singer Patty Scialfa in a sorrowful lament of two people growing in separate directions. ("We've given each other some hard lessons lately, But we ain't learnin', We're the same sad story that's a fact, One step up and two steps back.")

"Aint' Got You," the opening song on the album is a less serious look at love in a style reminiscent of Elvis. Other songs contain a hint of country that does not hinder the music, but serve to accentuate its feeling.

The repetitive cadence of "Valentine's Day" drives the lonely feeling of insecurity home, and the darkest song on the album, "Two Faces" portrays the struggle of a man who is torn by love.

The song that ties the album's theme together, "Walk Like a Man," combines the emotion felt in all the songs. In a climatic moment, he watches his bride walk down the aisle as he holds his father's hand while he struggles to stand tall through his "mystery ride" and to have the strength to walk like a man.

Although it cannot be denied that albums such as Born to Run and The River contain music that will be around for years to come, the melodies and textured music contained on Tunnel of Love may make the album Springsteen's most meaningful work.

The hidden soul of Springsteen is explored in a musical diary of his deepest thoughts and fears to touch the hearts of those who have explored the mysteries of love.

Solitude Standing tour came to the Tower Theater

By ALLEN AMBROSINO

On the night of Oct. 11, a different type of music was brought to the Tower Theater. Suzanne Vega endeared herself to the audience by incorporating a mellow singing technique with an appealing stage presence.

Vega's abundance of singing talent made it unnecessary for her to rely on cheap gimmicks and special effects. The ages of the crowd ranged from grandparents who lived through the Great Depression to youngsters who will represent Villanova's class of 2001.

The Richard Barone Band opened for Vega, but was not very impressive. Their music lacked quality and became annoying after only a few minutes. Some of their songs had decent lyrics, but were weakened by the inferior performance of the drummer, Val Morini. By the time Barone's band had finished their set, I was anxiously waiting to hear Vega, and so was everyone in the Tower.

When she appeared on stage, you could feel the electricity in the air as the crowd erupted. This was only her second appearance in the United States since her recent tour of Japan, Australia and New Zealand. Vega began by talking to the crowd about her tour, and then she had her band leave the stage for her first song.

Vega captured the crowd's full attention by beginning the concert with a unique type of song entitled "Tom's Diner." She sang the lyrics without music and took many of the people in the crowd by surprise. The technical term for this type of song is acapella and it is a new concept in the popular music industry. "Tom's Diner" was a great way to begin the set, as it displayed the creativity that Vega possesses.

This was followed by "Left Of Center," a song that gained popularity because it was on the soundtrack of the movie "Pretty In Pink." The song and the music were mediocre, but Vega carried them both with her superb singing voice.

After "Ironbound/Fancy Poultry" was over, Vega began to talk about the background for her next song, "Luka." Several years ago, she did have a neighbor named Luka who lived on the second floor. However, he was not an abused child and had a very loving family. She just used his name because it went with the idea for the song.

"Luka" is a very touching song about a young boy who is continuously abused by his parents and afraid to ask for help. Vega makes everyone in the audience experience a feeling of sadness and sympathy for Luka because of the music and the lyrics.

"Luka" made me realize what the [illegible] hands of abused children have to deal with every day in real life and the lack of support they receive. This song was the highlight of the concert and the turning point of Vega's singing career.

To lighten the mood, Vega made a suggestion to the women in the audience about the dangers of New York City. She told them to sing "In The Eye" if they were ever being mugged and felt like singing. It is one of Vega's faster paced songs that portrays a rebellious woman who shows no fear when threatened with the possibility of death. As a matter of fact, the woman dares the assailant to kill her and look her "in the eye."

The last song of the set was "Calypso," which was written as a result of the adventures of Odysseus, the main character in The Iliad and The Odyssey. Vega sympathizes with the plight of Calypso when Odysseus leaves her after seven years to go back to his wife. She demonstrates Calypso's sadness and depression with very soft music and emotional lyrics.

After Vega left the stage, she reappeared in less than a minute to sing "Night Vision." Then, as the crowd began to leave, she came back out on stage for a second encore, singing the title song to her latest album, "Solitude Standing." The crowd went wild and gave Vega a standing ovation after the lights went on and the concert was completed.

Vega was very impressive and showed many of the qualities of today's superstars. Most of her songs are easy to understand and are not dominated by special effects. Vega lets her voice do all of the work, and hopefully will continue to entertain audiences all over the world for years to come.

Keaton portrays a yuppie who has a 'Baby Boom'

By MARYJO YANNACONE

The women's movement has been around for quite some time now. There have been many changes regarding the role and status of women, perhaps the most significant being the flood of females into the work force. This force does not encompass merely the educational, secretarial and nursing fields, but also flows out into the realms of medicine, law, accounting, finance and the list goes on. Having traded in their spatulas for stethoscopes, their brooms for briefcases, today's women are finding themselves plagued by another dilemma, one perhaps a bit closer to the heart.

In the rush to prove themselves equal to men in strength and professionalism, some women in the job market have forgotten what a wonderful thing it is to be a gentle, loving female. They have equated the business world with toughness and little emotion, and have proceeded, sadly, to bring that attitude into their personal lives.

It is just this problem that the film "Baby Boom" is all about. The main character, J.C., played by Diane Keaton, is a managing consultant for a New York advertising firm. She is the quintessential businesswoman; her work is her life, and she likes it that way.

Believing in sex, but not commitment, J.C. lives with her lover, Stephen, played by Harold Ramis, who is also married to his job. They are two yuppies on the rise, cohabitating in a quietly elegant yet severely decorated Manhattan apartment.

Both J.C. and Stephen bring home six-digit salaries, and enjoy separate bank accounts. Theirs is a relationship of convenience. Neither is interested in romance or marriage, and neither one wants anything to do with children.

But, as we see throughout the film, the unexpected and the unwanted often occur. Just as J.C. begins to be primed for a position as a partner in her firm, she finds herself burdened with a beautiful toddler named Elizabeth, the orphaned daughter of a distant cousin. J.C. just happens to be the child's only living relative, and so Elizabeth is literally dropped in her lap.

After numerous unsuccessful attempts to deal with an adoption agency, and more than mild pangs of the heart, J.C. makes the decision to keep Elizabeth. Needless to say, this new hobby does not sit well with the executives

SINBAD AND THE THRONE OF THE FALCON
½ MINDSCAPE AP, AMIGA, C64/128, AT

In this game, the newest member of the Cinemaware series from Mindscape, you must take the role of Sinbad and find a way to return the Caliph of Damaron to human form from his current state as a falcon. Your dear friend Princess Sylphani found the Caliph transformed into a falcon when she went to visit him one morning. First, the culprit who changed the Caliph has to be dealt with and then the secret to his cure found.

True to the legend of the popular hero of many movies, Sinbad has the gamer fight soldiers and all kinds of strange creatures. Sword-fighting skills must be developed in order to survive in this mythical world. Many opponents stand in the way of success, and knowing how to correctly use your sword is often a necessity.

The game is controlled entirely with a joystick or mouse, and movement is accomplished by choosing one of the available destinations from a menu that changes every time you move. Such menus are an integral part of Sinbad, controlling conversations with characters and other options.

The most impressive elements of Sinbad are the beautiful graphics, ease of play, well-developed and challenging plot and the excellent use of the Sinbad character. Mindscape likes referring to the Cinemaware line software as interactive movies. Although skeptical at first, I have found this designation to be entirely true in this captivating, thoughtful adventure.

PRESIDENT ELECT 1988 EDITION
 SSI C64/128, AP, IBM

This simulation is one of the most interesting to be relased since the first flight simulator came out a few years ago. In President Elect, you simulate very realistically an election of the leader of our country. From the campaign trail right on down to election night, President Elect allows you to control all of the parameters in a computer election.

If you need any incentive for buying this game, I have a couple of reasons why you should try it out. The 1964 edition of the game correctly predicted the results of the political contest to the exact electoral vote count. Also, a contest is included with the game that offers $1,988 to the first person who comes closest to predicting the actual 1988 results by using the program. All that is required for entry is a photograph of the game screen.

President Elect is so complete that the program itself is not the only thing you receive for your money. The manual uses terms such as delegate lore to set up an election. While the manual can be a complete history about [illegible]

The neatest feature of President Elect is the ability to simulate any election from 1960 onward, since there is data for over 60 politicians past and present on the disk. I pitted Richard Nixon against Albert Gore and the former president won — the lesser of two evils. SSI already has George Bush as the winner in their simulation of the next campaign!

PIRATES!
 MICROPROSE C/64/128, IBM

For the first time in their history as a software company, MicroProse has produced a game that is not a simulation of some kind. In a way, Pirates! is a simulation of life as a buccaneer of the late 17th century. Yet, the game is too much like a combination of a role-playing game and an interactive adventure to go unnoticed.

Pirates! uses a rather unique and helpful series of windows to control the game. In these windows, players make the various choices that are presented in the game, from choosing an adventurer to meeting the governor of a particular town or island. The windows are each coded a different color and overlap so that you always know how many menus "deep" you are.

In keeping with the attempt at user-friendliness that Pirates! makes, the games feature beautiful color graphics of the locations, characters and maps involved in the game. You can almost tell from the pictures whether a character that you meet is a criminal or a friend. Also, these scenes bring you into the 17th century as an observer of life at the time. Expect nothing less than the best in Pirates! since designer Sid Meier has had years of design experience.

Since the people behind Pirates! are MicroProse, you can count on the inclusion of special items to help with the game and promote the atmosphere of the game. Especially useful is the large map of the Spanish Main, useful for the years 1560 through 1700. It shows all of the locations that you can travel to in the game, as well as many details necessary for successful playing.

In Pirates!, you can conduct battles, plunder, trade goods, rescue women, find treasure, fence, sail, conquer islands, explore the entire Caribbean and come back the next day for an entirely new adventure. The manual explains all elements of life at the time and everything you could want to know about the game options. Get Pirates! and start an adventure of your own on the high seas.

REVS+ ½ FIREBIRD AP, AT C64/128,

Quite bluntly, most computer race games bore me to tears because of their inaccuracy and the difficulty in playing the game and controlling the vehicle. I was in just this frame of mind when I booted up Revs+. Before long, I found out that Revs+ was not going for awards in the how-much-scenery-can-there-be category, but was instead concentrating on the enjoyment of racing.

Your race car is equipped with a fast engine and strong tires with which you can maneuver at different speeds. The [illegible] courses on the disk are Silverstone, Hockenheim, Brands Hatch, Donington, [illegible] with each [illegible] them as much as possible before racing seriously.

The graphics are adequately presented in Revs+ without being boring. From road signs to oil slicks, all that you would probably see on the real track is there. But you are not supposed to be sightseeing anyway. Choosing between the keyboard, paddle or joystick as your control is more important. I would recommend the normal joystick as your "steering wheel."

Revs+ is a very good offering from Firebird in the racing department. There is no question that you are in the driver's seat as you play the game. A map that shows the courses is inside the package and often acts as a warning for that next hairpin turn or the long stretch of straight track. If you want action to pass away a boring evening, Revs+ delivers.

B-24  SSI C64/128, AP, IBM

I would give this game five stars for package alone, but that is not why I am here. B-24 is a challenging flight simulator in which you must duplicate a bombing mission of Ploesti, Rumania, an important target in World War II. This area of the world supplied Hitler with oil for his army and was a strategical pawn in the war.

B-24 includes not one, but two manuals for your complete mastery of the game. Full of actual pictures of the Ploesti area dating back to the '40s, the two guides offer historical information, strategy and instructions for flying your bomber and carrying out the mission. There are 12 sites available for bombing in 19 missions. The choice is all yours.

A map comes with B-24 to put all of the scenarios in perspective. It shows where all of the sites are located as well as giving the x-and y-coordinates of the sites. The map puts the finishing touches on an already excellent game. If war games appeal to your tastes and flight simulators stretch your reflexes, B-24 can satisfy both cravings for one price.

CLIP ART COLLECTION VOLUMES 1, 2 and 3
 SPRINGBOARD C64/128, AP, IBM

Since the release of Newsroom, computer users have made many newspaper-like flyers unique for the tell-tale format and funny graphics. The graphics used in Newsroom output is officially called clip art, and these three additional volumes of the funny figures offer many more pictures. Each of the volumes has a certain theme, so choosing one is not difficult.

Clip Art Collection Volume 1 contains a disk packed with general pictures useful in all areas. The second volume specializes in business clip art, ideal for the opportunistic business major to include in a paper. The latest volume focuses on sports and recreation art, from bowling to badminton.

Each collection features at least 600 different pieces of clip art for your use. It is impossible to even try to describe what is in a collection because of the large number of elements, but I can say that each collection will satisfy your desire for new clip art in your flyers and newspapers.

Metal bands appear at the Empire Rock Club

By RUSS CECCOLA

Two powerhouses of heavy metal took over The Empire Rock Club two weeks ago to stun an audience expecting nothing less than a great show. Savatage and Deadly Blessing entertained the crowd with their unique musical styles that border on ear-splitting. The Empire Rock Club is the best place in the area to see local bands of all types, as well as those bands that tour the club circuit of the United States, including Savatage.

Deadly Blessing hails from the area and opened the night's festivities with their strong music. It was the first time that I saw this band, which plays at The Empire frequently, and I can say that they will be moving up quickly. Deadly Blessing has already been signed to a record deal, with their album to be released in December.

Some of the songs that Deadly Blessing played included "Search and Destroy," "Escape from Wrath," "Mind Bender," and their theme song, "Deadly Blessing." The most impressive part of the band is the lead singer's intense vocal range.

Savatage hit the stage, starting a long show with one of their oldest songs, "Sirens." The foursome from Florida is currently on tour in support of their latest, high-selling album, Hall of the Mountain King. The Band went on to perform an excellent combination of old classics and newer tunes that kept the audience high-strung and wanting more.

Savatage is driven by the team effort of Jon Oliva (vocals) and his brother, Criss Oliva (guitar), Johnny Lee Middleton (bass) and Steve "Doc" Wacholz (drums). All four contribute equally to their music and offer a different blend of heavy metal and hard rock.

One thing that must be noted is the power with which Wacholz commands his customized triple-bass drum kit, as shown in his solo and in the unique way he pounds the drums, never stopping. Maybe that explains why they call him "Doctor Killdrums."

Savatage played only five songs from Hall of the Mountain King in their 13-song set. The best of the five were undisputably the title track and "Beyond the Doors of the Dark," two that stand apart from the rest because of Criss Oliva's riffs and Middleton's pounding bass.

Jon Oliva proved his best on some of the older songs, such as "Power of the Night," "Warriors" and "The Dungeons are Calling." I cannot even begin to explain their on-stage aura.

After the show, talking to Wacholz and Middleton proved to be an opportunity to learn new things about Savatage. The most important thing to watch out for from the band is the video for the title track to their latest release. Filmed in Hell's Caverns in New York, the video features elaborate sets, many special effects and the midget whom Ozzy Osbourne used on his tours cast as a dwarf who invades the Mountain King's domain.

The band was amazed at how the video turned out and described it as a mini-movie. If you look carefully when the "movie" appears on MTV, the band members are splotched in mud because of the conditions far underground where the video was shot.

Savatage has pulled out all of the stops in the past few months and are storming into the future well-prepared. The band are a rare treat live, and rock just as hard on Hall of the Mountain King. Expect Savatage to be invading your TV screen soon, and listen to their latest album, which includes "Prelude to Madness," a fusion of the classical version of the title track with Savatage's talent.

W.A.S.P.'s live album offers their best material

By JEFF GILLIES

Live ... In the Raw
W.A.S.P.
Capitol Records

Live ... In the Raw, the latest release from W.A.S.P. offers their fans a collection of the band's best material recorded in concert. Keeping with their usual style, the music is loud, offensive and unrefined.

Along with the older material, the album also contains three new songs which are the crudest and sickest since "Animal [F* Like A Beast]."

If you are not already a W.A.S.P. fan, or are easily offended, this album is not for you. The Parents' Music Resource Center (P.M.R.C) should have a field day with this one.

"Inside the Electric Circus," the first track, introduces W.A.S.P. as "the most outrageous band in the world." Proving this statement to be true appears to be the band's main objective.

"Inside the Electric Circus" — opens the album on a rapid pace. The song displays some solid guitar work from Chris Holmes. Lead singer Blackie Lawless carries the song with powerful vocals.

A continuous flow of music emerges with "I Don't Need No Doctor," which is somewhat disappointing. It is not played as enthusiastically as the rest of the album. The vocals are drowned out by drums and guitars, giving the feeling the band is not in the mood to play the song at all.

For the most part, the older material is played much better than the songs from Inside the Electric Circus. This is probably because of the fact that special effects and polished material were used on Inside the Electric Circus that were not used on the other albums.

"L.O.V.E. Machine" is performed with energy, power and style. Steve Riley hammers away on the drums and Lawless' glass — shattering screams make this song one of the best. The audience gets involved by singing along to the chorus.

The raw power that W.A.S.P. emits is most evident in the version of "Wild Child." Holmes and Lawless wailon guitar. Once again, the drumming is incredible.

"9.5. — N.A.S.T.Y." also shows the band in raw form. Lawless screams and shrieks through the entire song, and W.A.S.P. clearly could have done a better job with the song. Even Holmes has trouble with feedback on his guitar.

Closing the first side is "Sleeping [In the Fire]," W.A.S.P.'s attempt at a "ballad." It is a pleasant surprise, as the song seems well rehearsed. Lawless sounds great. Holmes' talent shines in a dazzling solo, and Johnny Rod's bass provides a hard steady backbeat. The live version is much better than the studio version.

W.A.S.P. makes it through the entire first side without being obnoxious, perverted or vulgar. This is quickly made up for as the band explodes into "The Manimal." Lawless explains how the song is about his obsession with sex.

Frankly, if you can understand the words, the explanation is completely unnecessary. Despite the obscene lyrics, the song is actually an impressive metal tune.

Moving back to songs from their first album, W.A.S.P. gives a forceful rendition of "I Wanna Be Somebody." A resounding drum solo, flashy guitar licks and Lawless' boisterous vocals combine to make this one of the most spirited on Live ... In the Raw.

W.A.S.P. goes on to attack the P.M.R.C., telling them exactly what they can do in explicit detail. Lawless dedicates one of the new tunes, "Harder FAster," to the organization.

"Harder Faster" is extremely lewd and perverted. However, if you can handle the lyrics, the song is W.A.S.P. at their best. After all, W.A.S.P. at their best is obnoxious, raucous and bold heavy metal.

"Blind in Texas" is about drinking as much as possible and then some. Lawless cries out at the top of his luhgs and the band turns the amplifiers up to 10. The crowd's energy can be heard through their level of noise. The song ends with cannons being set off, causing the crowd to go wild.

Returning to their distinct tongue-in-cheek perversion, W.A.S.P. ends the album with "Scream Until You Like It," the theme song for the movie "Ghoulies 2." Holmes is spectacular with a repetitive riff that echoes through the arena. The studio version of the song should be released soon on the movie soundtrack.

Live ... In the Raw is certainly not for everyone. However, W.A.S.P. fans and headbangers should enjoy it. The new songs are impressive and the new studio album seems promising. Live ... In the Raw is an excellent album, but it is rude, crude and obnoxious.

"Princess Bride" is an innocent fairytale

By RICHARD ABRAHAM

"The Princess Bride" directed by Rob Reiner
Twentieth Century Fox

Sweet, charming, enjoyable and humorous it is. Hilarious, subtle and dramatically involving it is not. "The Princess Bride" has all the qualities of a cinematic "Cosby" show. It has a gentle, charming touch that wins you over.

Rob Reiner, whose earlier directorial efforts include "This Is Spinal Tap," a docu-satire on rock-and-roll and "Stand By Me," a sleeper smash from the summer of 1986 that evoked and romanticized childhood memories, combines his earlier interests to poroduce "The Princess Bride."

In doing so, he lets the viewer sit through his film with a darling smile on his face thinking, "This is so sweet and nice." And it is, which is no small accomplishment.

Written by William Goldman of "Butch Cassidy" fame, it concerns the true love of a man and a woman in medieval fairy tale land. Buttercup (Robin Wright of the daytime soap "Santa Barbara"), the prettiest woman of this land, falls in love with Westley (Cary Elwes), her farm boy, while he is falling in love with her.

The two are separated when Westley decides to seek his fortune on the high seas. A while after Westley's departure, a reluctant Buttercup is chosen by Prince Humperdinck (Chris Sarandon, a handsome villain) to become his bride.

Soon afterwards, Buttercup is kidnapped by an odd threesome. Andre the Giant, appropriately enough, portrays Feezik, a kind-hearted giant whose sole talents are your basic "giant" abilities, such as strength and height.

He and Inigo Montoya can also form a fine rhyming duo. Montoya (Mandy Patinkin of "Yentl") is a Spanish swordsman who has become part of the kidnapping group so that he can gather enough money to continue his search for a six-fingered man, the killer of his father. The brains of the outfit is Viccini, a Siccilian 'mastermind' energetically portrayed by Wallace Shawn.

Through the adventures of Westley and Buttercup and the various captors, we encounter such places as The Cliffs of Insanity, The Fire Swamp and The Pit of Despair. Through such wonderfully colorful names and in the way they are presented, Reiner holds and heightens fairy tale custom for some time, but then his tale becomes sentimentally familiar once again.

Reiner's characters all have the capability of churning out wicked satire and yet, they are only occasionally allowed to do so. Most of the time, they are encapsulated within the director's remembrances instead of being part of a dream.

Montoya, with his six-fingered search, has more emotional heart than any other character in Reiner's gallery, and Mandy Patinkin's portrayal is easily the most satisfying with his delivery of nonchalance and passion. His Montoya of energy and desire easily overshadow a pleasant performacne by Cary Elwes as the dashing Westley. His pleasant performance fits nicely into Reiner's sweet and charming film.

Although Christopher Guest as Count Rugen, Montoya's nemesis, seems to thoroughly relish his role as well, the film shows its fullest potential when Billy Crystal and Carol Kane flash onto the screen as the ancient Miracle Max and Valerie, his wife who is not so very young herself. The duo inject a spark of activity and higher humor (as in laughter) into the film.

One is not asking for a Monty Pythonish pure farce. (Indeed, that would be inappropriate. But, although Goldman has given Reiner a successful script to work with, Reiner seems intent on confining us with his story's lack of reality. Strangely enough, sometimes this impresssion may be unintentional.

Reiner filmed "The Princess Bride" in what seems to be a non-réality even for fantasy and fails to create a new world. The camera direction seems awkward and fails to invent or heighten emotion where it could be done. In addition, many sets are so manufactured-looking that, disappointingly, they fail to truly exist, even in the flight of imagination.

In the end, one may find "The Princess Bride" supremely engaging, but do not expect a wondrous creation to enter the imagination.

New album brings R.E.M. deserved recognition

By ANDREW MATHIS

Document
R.E.M.
IRS Records
* * * *

Document is the fifth album from R.E.M., the all-American rock-and-roll band from Athens, GA. It is also the album that may bring R.E.M. the recognition that they have deserved since their beginning.

"Finest Worksong" opens the album and is a very powerful anthem of the American working-class and their struggle between what they want and what they need. The strong lyrics are backed by an equally striking rhythm and guitar riff throughout the entire song. It is a good example of how R.E.M. combines deeply meaningful lyrics with soulful music to create an impressive product.

The next truly impressive work on Side One is "Exhuming McCarthy," which may also be the best song on the album. Once again, lyrics that hit home are effectively combined with an extremely catchy tune for optimum effect. The interludes are also extremely good examples of R.E.M.'s musicianship, complete with great bass lines and a very bluesy guitar riff.

Side One ends with "It's the End of the World as We Know It (And I Feel Fine)," which is very possibly their next radio exposure. It stands separate from most of the album by being extremely upbeat as compared to the rest of the songs, perhaps even danceable.

Still, this does not mean that there are not striking lyrics prominent throughout the album. The other three songs on Side One, "Disturbance at the Heron House," "Strange" and "Welcome to the Occupation," are all also very good songs, but unfortunately tend to sound a bit alike, even after a few listenings.

Side Two opens with "The One I Love," which is R.E.M.'s first radio hit from Document (or from any other of their albums for that matter). At any rate, this honor is well-deserved because "The One I Love" is among the finest songs on the album. It pleasantly combines lead singer Mike Stipe's vocals with the steady pace of the rhythm section of Mike Mills and Bill Barry and guitarist Peter Buck. It is also distinguishable among the other songs on the album in that it is one of few, if not the only, love song on the album.

Unfortunately, the rest of Side Two is not as noteworthy. Like Side One, most of the songs sound similar, with perhaps the exception of "Lightnin' Hopkins," which is more upbeat than the rest of Side Two.

Despite its slow points, Document is still one of the best albums released by R.E.M. to date. While it is true that a good bit of the material sounds somewhat similar, they are still achieving a very pleasing sound and, as usual, are carrying across some very good points in their music.

Songs like "Exhuming McCarthy" and "The One I Love" only further complement this album. Document is an album good enough to compare with R.E.M.'s older albums, and, more importantly, it just may be one to take them over the top.

Kurt Vonnegut's Bluebeard updates the tale

By JIM CROSSAN

Bluebeard
By Kurt Vonnegut
Delacorte Press
* * * *

Kurt Vonnegut has once again proven himself to be one of the wittiest writers in America. Bluebeard is his 13th novel, and his unique style is prevalent as his humor produces common sense through seeming ambiguity.

The legend of Bluebeard, a children's tale, claims a "murderous nobleman" hid something mysterious in his castle. This nobleman would romance and marry young women, and then escort them to his evasive castle. He would explain to his brides that they could venture anywhere in his home except for one room.

Curiosity would overcome each impetuous maiden, and she would expose her unknowing eyes to the contents of the forbidden room. In the room, all of Bluebeards' previous wives lay ruthlessly murdered. In her horror, she turns to see the fiend behind her ready to dispose of her (all with the exception of his first wife).

Vonnegut takes the connection one step further in the story of Rabo Karabekian, a 71-year-old, one-eyed abstract expressionist painter who has his secret hidden in a potato barn on his elusive estate in East Hampton, N.Y.

Bluebeard is his "hoax autobiography" which Karabekian narrates during one summer on his estate. Karabekians life has some great moments: He is highly decorated in a special camouflage unit in the armed forces. However, he also has fought devastation — the suicides of three close friends, and never becoming the outstanding painter he hoped to be.

When the summer during which he writes this autobiography begins, he is living on the aforementioned estate with a neighbor Paul Slazenger, who lives close by, but never leaves the estate.

The characters have, like many of Vonneguts' main characters, been devastated by war and are stereotypes of "wounded World War II geezers." They often talk of the most pervasive American disease: loneliness.

Writing may be very difficult, but with Vonnegut, it seems to flow with ease.

At one point, Karabekian characterizes himself by saying, "If anyone has discovered what life is all about, it is too late. I am no longer interested."

One day Karabekian spots a stranger on his private beach. He says hello to her and she audaciously replies, "Tell me how your parents died?" Thus Karabekian's autobiography and the transformation from no purpose to a new awareness begins.

The woman is Circe Berman, a 43-year-old widow who has become a successful, yet controversial writer. Her pen name is Polly Madison, and she is a parallel to Judy Blume. Berman moves into Karabekian's estate and criticizes his expressionist art by saying, "All anybody could do with a picture like that is illustrate an advertisement for a hangover remedy or seasick pills." Berman challenges Karabekian to paint a picture he could build a whole new religion upon.

It is not through clairvoyance, but common knowledge that one realizes Bluebeard deals with not only the life of a painter, but also the life of a writer.

Discussions arise between Slazinger, who is an unsuccessful novelist; Berman and Karabekian expose a major theme indubitably reached: Writing is the hardest thing there is. Berman adds, "Particularly so, if you have absolutely nothing to say!"

Vonnegut does not try to trick the reader with grandiloquent language, but he discusses serious issues such as the reality of time, the nature of the pluralistic universe, man's ability to live with his own illusions and the quality of life in the United States.

Bluebeard depicts a United States where television is hiding a Great Depression, and possibly a World War III, and for Karabekian this has been the only real change in society since the 1930s.

Writing may be very difficult, but with Vonnegut, it seems to flow with ease. His books are a delight to read, and always take you around winding roads and slippery corners that are so unexpected that you begin to expect them.

Bluebeard may not be his best novel, but the style is in short, pure Vonnegut. I reccomend this book to everyone, especially those few who have not read one of his books. I will end this review with the words Vonnegut puts at the end of his list of published works, "Enough! Enough!" (Let's hope not.)

Bad Animals attack the Spectrum

By SIOBHAN A. RODER and DANTE J. SCALA

Heart is a band that has seen the up side and the down side of the rock-and-roll scene. On the way, they have learned their lessons well. Now on a defi-nite up swing during the tour for their most recent album, Bad Animals, Heart gave an electrifying concert at the Spectrum Sunday night.

As the Spectrum lights dimmed and hundreds of lighters glowed in the cavernous arena, the crowd roared in anticipation of the five-member band.

The already-excited crowd erupted when they recognized the opening guitar chords of Heart's third offering, "Barracuda," one of the group's most popular songs. Lead vocalist Ann Wilson's high-powered voice elicited strong emotions from the crowd. The song as also highlighted by fine guitar playing from Ann's younger sister, Nancy Wilson, and guitarist and keyboardist Howard Leese.

"Barracuda" clearly showed why Heart is such a powerful live band. Ann Wilson held the crowd's attention as she confidently strolled the stage in a nearly full-length black smock, which added to her already imposing stage presence. Her vocals held their own without losing quality against the loud instrumentals.

Heart followed up "Barracuda" with "Nothin' At All" and "What About Love," two cuts from their 1985 album Heart, which marked their recent resurgence.

The hard-rocking group displayed its musical versatility in the ballads. "Dreamboat Annie" and "These Dreams." The two sisters blended gently rolling harmonies as Nancy Wilson sang and strummed the guitar, and Ann Wilson's beautiful harmony added to the song's dreamlike atmosphere.

"Who Will You Run To," one of Heart's newest releases, marked the beginning of a concluding series of songs which kept the crowd on its feet. Ann Wilson really showed off her impressive voice and stage presence during this song. She was accompanied by strong guitar playing from Nancy Wilson, Leese and bassist Mark Andes.

The intensity built as the band rocked the Spectrum with such hits as "Never," "Crazy On You" and "If Looks Could Kill."

The band members wandered around the three-tiered stage throughout the performance, while drummer Denny Carmassi kept a steady beat behind his wall of percussion instruments.

During the first encore, the group played "Bebe Le Strange" under a spray of green spotlights, and gave a delightfully wicked version of "Magic Man."

After the first encore, the roaring audience sat in the dark arena begging for a second. Heart made its final return and played a beautifully lyrical and yet powerful version of "Alone," a song many in the audience had been anticipating all evening.

Heart's high-voltage one hour and 40 minute performance was preceded by an opening set from Bourgeois Tagg. The group, whose most recent album was produced by local songwriter Todd Rundgren, generated only mild applause from the audience members, who were still filing in during their act. One of their better offerings was the recently-released, "I Don't Mind At All."

Heart brought their high-voltage tour to the Philadelphia Spectrum last Sunday to promote the Bad Animals album.

'Baby Boom'

on Park Avenue, who prefer mothers to stay out of the workforce, and businesswomen to stay out of family life.

J.C.'s new approach to life and work, both inwardly and outwardly, is a funny and fantastic thing to watch. It is these scenes that make the film worth seeing. While J.C. tries to juggle the demands of a full-time career, she finds herself weighed down with nanny applications, pre-school programs and dirty diapers.

Structurally, "Baby Boom" deserves moderate acclaim. It is not a movie aimed at presenting beautiful scenery, dashing heroics or space-age technology. Instead, the writers have attempted to provide a picture of modern life for the modern woman — a simple concept, which incorporates a vast number of emotional, practical and spiritual factors.

The acting in "Baby Boom" is not something to shout about, but every character has a message. Ramis, as the stuffy live-in lover Stephen, projects the busy businessman as he truly is; boring, unromantic, disinterested and terribly practical.

Keaton, on the other hand, defines the dilemma for women of life at home versus life at work. For years she had trudged along, happy with her Park Avenue penthouse and her six-digit salary, all the while knowing deep inside herself that something was missing. Elizabeth, the adorable child that awakens this buried part of J.C., is just that something.

Keaton provides comedy and warmth, without upstaging her co-workers. There are many other characters that add to the film, and each is portrayed realistically. Sam Shepherd, for example, does a splendid job of playing J.C.'s love interest later on in the film. He is certainly a fine actor, and he lends his talents to "Baby Boom" in the role of Dr. Jeff Cooper, a New England veterinarian.

"Baby Boom" will never be considered one of the great films of our time. It will not even be considered as one of the best of 1987. It is, however, a delightful, mild comedy about women and men and work and babies and it is a film worth seeing.

Newcomers Tesla out-rock Def Leppard at concert

By RUSS CECCOLA

Despite the fact that Def Leppard has not been on tour for a few years, I could not get over how boring the band was when they came to the Philadelphia Spectrum to support their latest album, Hysteria. Opening up for the quintet were a band from California called Tesla. Tesla was easily more entertaining and rocked harder than Def Leppard. Def Leppard has been resting on their laurels too long, especially during the recording of the latest album.

Despite the fact that Def Leppard has not been on tour for a few years, I could not get over how boring the band was when they came to the Philadelphia Spectrum.

Tesla is a relatively new band from the West Coast. Their first album, Mechanical Resonance, is doing quite well on the Billboard charts and runs the gamut of the different approaches to hard rock.

Currently on tour with Def Leppard, Tesla has been seen by thousands who probably went right out and bought their album after seeing them live. Because Def Leppard's stage was built in the middle of the Spectrum, all members of the audience had equally good seats and a great view of Tesla.

Opening with "Comin' Atcha Live," Tesla went on to perform eight songs from Mechanical Resonance. Lead singer and frontman Jeff Keith seemed to be very pleased with the way that Philadelphia responded to a band that they knew nothing about.

Tesla is very talented musically, and proved it, especially in such hits as "Modern Day Cowboy" and "Little Suzi." This West Coast band will jump to greatness in the next few years.

Def Leppard, on the other hand, made me yawn. As a general rule, yawns are a good way to judge how bad a band performed. What they were lacking was the edge that they originally had when the band was first formed, lost partly because of the huge success of Pyromania, which was essentially a pop album. Even though drummer Rick Allen only has one arm to hit the skins with now because of a serious accident, he cannot take all of the blame for slowing the band down.

None of Def Leppard, which also includes Joe Elliott (vocals), Steve Clark (guitars), Rick Savage (bass) and Phil Collen (guitars), seemed to enjoy themselves. Rather, the band appeared to be performing out of duty or contract rather than because they like to play.

Even during their biggest hits, such as "Photograph" and "Rock of Ages," Def Leppard was mundane at best. With the performance of "Good Golly, Miss Molly" as their last encore, it was proven that the band sold out.

The only songs from Hysteria that Def Leppard performed were the title track, "Women," "Animal" and "Pour Some Sugar On It." The rest of the show focused on Pyromania hits, including "Foolin'," "Too Late For Love" and "Die Hard the Hunter."

Allen deserves a lot of credit for continuing his drumming after the accident. A special drum kit was built for him that uses electronic drums and foot pedals. Allen was the most energetic of the five and if this is any indication of the future of Def Leppard, they better pack their bags and go home now before it is too late.

Def Leppard disappointed Philadelphia fans in recent concert promoting Hysteria.

Lynryd Skynyrd re-forms to tour America

By TIM DANIELS

Philadelphia unfurled its Confederate flags as Lynyrd Skynyrd invaded the Spectrum for an emotional sold-out show Oct. 11. This show marked the halfway point of a 32-date tribute tour for the flagship band of southern rock.

The band was struck with tragedy in 1977, when singer Ronnie Van Zant and guitarist Steve Gaines were killed in a plane crash, ending the band's flight of stardom, but creating a legend that would flourish 10 years later. Reforming initially for Charlie Daniels' benefit concert, Skynyrd confirmed the many rumors by entrusting the vocals to Ronnie's brother, Johnnie Van Zant.

Opening up the Oct. 11 show, was The Rossington Band. Led by Skynyrd guitarist Gary Rossington and fronted by his wife, Dale Grant-Rossington, the group provided a fine performance that warmed up the Spectrum.

As the stage crew re-prepared the stage, concert footage of the old band was shown on the video screens above the stage. Five songs from various performances displayed the energy of the band and the commanding presence of Ronnie Van Zant, who received ovations for every video appearance during the night.

Lynyrd Skynyrd appeared as a huge Confederate flag rolled down providing a backdrop across the entire stage (blocking the view of those seated behind the stage). The band opened with a rocking version of "Working For MCA" that sent its long starved fans into a frenzy immediately. After the song, Johnnie Van Zant had to reprimand a few over-enthusiastic fans for brawling in the front row.

Johnnie Van Zant aimed his imaginary gun into the growd for "Saturday Night Special." Ed King then talked about his recovery from drug problems and urged the audience to heed the message of the next two songs. The ensuing tune, "The Needle and the Spoon," one of five from Second Helping, featured the driving drum beat of Artimus Pyle.

The backup singing of Dale Grant-Rossington and Carol Bristow rang forth the chorus of "That Smell." They also led the singing crowd through the especially fun tune, "I Know a Little." In addition, one of the roadies joined Pyle on drums for the opening of "Gimme Three Steps." During that tune, the boogie piano playing of Billy Powell was exceptional.

"Call Me The Breeze" pointed out that Johnnie Van Zant lacked the free spirit of brother Ronnie Van Zant. Johnnie Van Zant was, for the most part, unanimated. His vocals were enjoyable in that they matched his brother's accurately, but he did not convey the emotional charge of the group's exciting music. Nevertheless, the great drum and piano tandem, along with the horn threesome's only appearance, made "Call Me The Breeze" an unforgettable highlight.

Rising up out of the bayou came "Swamp Music," as each member of the band enjoyed a short solo. "You Got That Right" featured Rossington laying out the superb lead. The four-beat delay of the cymbal crash conclusion was very effective.

"What's Your Name" was played very slowly until the three guitars and bass broke into their solos, speeding the tune up to the frantic average pace.

"Gimme Back My Bullets" followed a similar format, reaching its climax with Rossington playing his gibson les paul with his teeth, captured beautifully on the video screen. Bassist Leon Wilkeson and guitarist Randy Hall held the rhythm as they did marvelously all night.

Johnnie Van Zant turned in his best vocal performance for the slow and emotional "Simple Man." This song was dedicated to former guitarist Allen Collins, who was paralyzed in an automobile accident. Unable to perform, Collins now works the mixing boards.

With Van Zant's plea "Turn it up!," the drums awoke and the flag rolled down once again to proclaim "Sweet Home Alabama." After asking what old Neil [Young] said, the four guitarists assumed their lined-up position across the front of the stage to jam into another guitar stretch. The band then left the stage, though everyone in the arena knew that they would return for one more song.

"Free Bird!" was the reply as Johnnie Van Zant returned to ask the famed question, "What do you want to hear?" As the rest of the group filed out on stage, Johnnie declared, "Only one man can sing this song — so y'all will have to help the boys out." The familiar piano intro was greeted with a tremendous ovation, and as the drums joined with Rossington's slide guitar the crowd issued forth the opening verse.

The Spectrum crowd's singing performance was a bit disappointing, causing this classic opening to become tedious. But once Gary jumped from playing slide to lead into the solo section, "Free Bird" took off. A giant mirrored ball spun from the bottom of the scoreboard for the first time, casting shards of light onto the video screen that alternated between the live performance and old footage.

The old footage remarkably paralleled the live action with Gaines and Ronnie Van Zant further provoking the frenetic crowd. During the incomparable jam, each member of the band took the spotlight while being featured on the screen.

Lynyrd Skynyrd wound down out of its jam the same way it had started 15 minutes before, with Billy Powell's piano. The band took its final bows, and stated that Philadelphia had provided the warmest reception of the tour. The fans left content after the outstanding "Free Bird," which closed a show that included all of the band's hits.

Skynyrd put on a simply amazing display of foot-stomping southern rock, as only they could do. They kept the audience up for the entire show by playing only their greatest songs. In addition, the band played with a tightness and energy not to be expected after years of being apart.

Johnnie Van Zang did an admirable job. Although his low-key demeanor expressed that he was trying not to upset any ghosts by taking control of the show, as his predecessor would do. The resurrection of Lynryd Skynyd was a great and well-appreciated endeavor, and in no way could be called disrespectful to the band's deceased members.

Lynryd Skynyrd re-formed to pay homage to Ronnie Van Zandt, who was killed 10 years ago.

Yes generates

By DAVE MAYLISH

Big Generator
Yes
ATCO Records
* * *½

So you say you are a Yes fan? Well then, Big Generator is here. Big Generator is the band's second album since their reunion in 1982 and a follow-up to their hit album, 90125.

The band consists of Jon Anderson, the lead vocalist; Tony Kaye on keyboards; Trevor Rabin on guitars, keyboards, and backup vocals; Chris Squire on bass guitar and backup vocals; and Alan White on drums and percussion.

All of the members have played with the band at some point in its history except for Rabin, though this does not discredit his exceptional ability to play the guitar.

The album opens with "Rhythm of Love," a quick-rhythmed (appropriately) song focusing on Kaye's keyboards and rising into the harmony so typical of Yes. White's drums offer their first disappointment of the album, as they enter, by defining the word "monotonous."

Get used to the beat, as it hardly changes from song to song and makes you realize how good the drumming was in the days of old Yes. Harmony carries the song as Anderson belts out the verses.

Rabin's guitar, crisp and clean, is accentuated by Squire's bass, a combination that blends these songs well. Rabin easily adds brilliant guitar licks to touch off this generally good song.

"Big Generator," the album's second song and title, starts with the resounding tones of contrasting voices as they lead into the heavy bass, which reinforces this song. A moderately fast song, accented not only by the sound of trumpets but by the annoying beat of White's drum, it has been getting a lot more air play then it deserves.

Good guitar licks and Anderson's clear-cut voice make this a good song. My only complaint about it is Rabin's off-beat, off-key solo which does not complement the song much, and seems to last longer than necessary. Big Generator is a good example of Yes' ability to harmonize.

The next song is one of the best on the album. "Shoot High, Aim Low" begins with a dream-like melody that seems to emanate throughout the song. White's drum keeps the same beat through the whole song though it fits rather well.

Anderson's voice in "Shoot High, Aim Low," as well as on the whole album, comes across amazingly clear and somewhat better than in the past. Rabin's backup vocals sound just as good.

Once again, Yes' harmony comes through in the chorus and Rabin plays his first real solo on the album. By the end of the song, White has begun to hit his cymbal a little more and the drifting melodies fade off in a Pink Floyd fashion. This is a great song.

The Nik Everett Group will kick off Villanova Night on Nov. 5.

It is straight-ahead American rock and roll with the Nik Everett Group and Picture This at Ardmore's 23 East Cabaret on Nov. 5.

The two popular Philadelphia bands kick off a series of Villanova University Nights on Thursdays at 23 East. Co-sponsored by WKVU and the Villanovan, admission Thursdays at the Cabaret will be $1 with Villanova I.D. (not including special shows). In addition, the Cabaret will feature a weekly drink special.

The Nik Everett Group is a quartet that combines original pop and rock songs, as well as a few powerful Marshall Crenshaw, Bruce Springsteen and Beatles covers.

Picture This projects a melodic pop rock sound and some catchy, danceable numbers.

Doors open at 8 p.m. and showtime is 10 p.m.

Trocadero hosted Guns N' Roses and EZO

By RUSS CECCOLA

The Trocadero in Philadelphia could not have expected what was to descend on the club last Tuesday — a raucous show that featured the pounding, heavy music of EZO and Guns 'N Roses. These two bands both have gained great success from the release of their latest albums in the past year. EZO is currently touring with Guns 'N Roses for their self-titled debut album and Guns 'N Roses in promoting Appetite For Destruction.

EZO, which hails from Japan, is currently finishing up their tour. The four members of EZO are: Masaki (vocals), Shoyo (guitar), Taro (bass) and Hiro (drums). The band played all of the songs on their album, starting things off with "Destroyer."

EZO's album was produced by Gene Simmons of Kiss, and they perfect the music even more in a live setting. Although the band members are Japanese, their lyrics are not heavily accented and their vocabulary is not small. Simmons taught each member,especially Masaki, how to speak English, and helped them in writing and understanding the lyrics.

EZO covers a wide area of metal in their songs, from the thrash number "Desiree" to their pulse-pounding hits "Flashback Heart Attack" and "House of 1,000 Pleasures," which were saved for last in their set.

Talking to the band backstage revealed that the four are just normal everyday people who like to play heavy music. In any case, EZO's brand of music is unique and varied enough not to be boring. The band also amazed the crowd at The Trocadero with their rendition of Motorhead's "Ace of Spades," an instantly recognizable tune that was well-performed.

Guns 'N Roses come from a different background than EZO. Growing up in many different places and living a tough life have given the band's five members an attitude all their own. They want to rock hard and cockiness is a part of the package.

Tearing into "It's So Easy," Guns 'N Roses never stopped giving the crowd anything less than their all. The band consists of W. Axl Rose (vocals), Izzy Stradlin (guitars), Duff McKagan (bass), Steven Adler (drums) and Slash (guitars).

The energy that Guns 'N Roses possess is personified in each an annoying drum beat leading a fast, upbeat rock rhythm. Keyboards are present in the background, but are not the main attraction.

Trumpets are featured and played by four musicians called "Soul Lips." As weird as this sounds, they do a really good job in the song. Squire's bass pushed Rabin in his solo, which is only too short.

"Love Will Find a Way" has to be the most popular song on the album and probably everyone has heard it at least once. It blends the sound of stringed instruments which quickly build up into the tones of Rabin's guitar that hold the song together throughout.

White's drumming seems to fit in this song of good harmonies and vocals of Anderson and Rabin. It moves along a little quicker than a ballad, but implies the guidance of love in a relationship. A quick interlude offers a good guitar break which leads into a pretty good keyboard solo.

But whoa, boys, look out! Plug in that harmonica! That is right, you do not want to miss this. Somehow I feel the sound does not quite fit in just right, but this does not lessen the quality of the song at all.

"Final Eyes" features the acoustic guitar known to Yes for so long. Anderson brings the vocals through in this moderate song backed by Rabin and Squire. It is romantic and sadly overtoned as it deals with the splitting of two people. Floating keyboards are featured in the beginning and at the end and help to make this just a really good song.

"I'm Running" leads off with dual guitars into a Latin-American type rhythm generated by guitar licks. The xylophone familiar to "Changes" sounds through, as Yes demonstrates their ability to blend their instrumentation, which they do well in this song. A fairly good song, it awkwardly builds up at one point into a chorus resembling that of the Vienna Boy's Choir, but changes back into its pattern of rock and Latin rhythm.

"Holy Lamb (Song for Harmonic Convergence)" brings back again the acoustic guitar characteristic to old Yes. This song moves along with the backing of varied voices in different choruses

Big Generator may prove to be a big disappointment to those Yes fans who expect to hear songs resembling those of the old "Starship Trooper" days. Back then, keyboards were the main emphasis of their music, and even the acoustic guitar was preferred over the electric guitar and a good keyboard solo.

Obnoxious band was entertaining

By ANDREW MATHIS

The Dead Milkmen headlined a four-band show at Chinatown's Trocadero on Oct. 11 for a rare all-ages performance. Before attending the show, I was expecting a concert as obnoxious or more obnoxious than the Milkmen's latest album, Bucky Fellini. What I got was just that, but also a surprisingly good performance by the Dead Milkmen, as well as their opening acts.

The bands that opened the show were M-Fakter, a hard-core punk band; Angry Red Planet, another hardcore band from Detroit; and Electric Love Muffin, a semi-hardcore, semi-psychedelic band from Temple University which is supporting their first album, Playdoh Meathook. The latter gave the most impressive performance of the opening acts, if not the whole show.

After three acts in about three hours, the Dead Milkmen finally took the stage. Drummer Malory, bassist Dave Blood and guitarist Joe Jack Talcum started into "Take Me to the Specialist" from their latest album and then lead singer Rodney 'Cosloy' Anonymous came out, sporting an "Al Albert is the Antichrist" T-shirt. The band went from the opening number right into their pseudo-Beatles song, "I Am the Walrus."

Among the music of the Dead Milkmen were the antics of lead singer Anonymous. The attention-drawing lead singer came dressed in a few different costumes, the most interesting of which was a papal cloak and mitre. He also insisted on insulting other bands, including U2 and Suzanne Vega.

During these insults, the band played an interesting blues number which they used to move right into their biggest college radio hit to date, "Bitchin' Camaro." It was one of the best received songs of the evening, along with "Beach Party Vietnam" and their other big college hit, "The Thing That Only Eats Hippies."

Some of the other more interesting features of the concert were "Rocketship" and "Surfin' Cow."The former was interesting because it was during this song that Anonymous handed the microphone over to guitarist Talcum to sing. It showed that there was talent elsewhere in the group. The latter was a goodperformance of this mostly-instrumental song from their latest album.

After the Dead Milkmen left the stage for the first time, they were called back for an encore, which they gave in the form of "Instant Club Hit (You'll Dance to Anything)," from the new album. Of course, Anonymous insulted more bands, this time concentrating on The Smiths and Deepeche Mode or Depeche Commode as he calls them.

Much to my surprise, I was very pleased with the Dead Milkmen's performance at the Trocadero on Oct. 11th. While I was also treated to a good show, which was complete with the loud volume that the new album Bucky Fellini lacked to make it truly effective. The impressive opening acts putthe icing on the cake. Whether it is at an all-ages show or a bar show, the Dead Milkmen are an act that everyone should see, whether it is for music or for sheer entertainment.

Steven Adler, Izzy Stradlin, Duff "Rose" McKagan, W. Axl Rose and Slash are Guns N' Roses.

Metal show

member. The guys never stopped moving, and threw themselves to the crowd in stage dives that could even make the best hardcore fans jealous.

The band played almost all of their Geffen debut album. The crowd's favorites were easily "My Michelle," "Paradise City," "Welcome to the Jungle," "You're Crazy" and the number they started the show with, "It's So Easy."

Guns 'N Roses has a style of music that is hard to describe, but it fuses blues, hard rock, punk and metal. Evidence of the blues influence was given in the performance of Dylan's "Knockin' On Heaven's Door."

The band that Guns 'N Roses comes closest to musically is Aerosmith, although they are heavier. This was proven in their single encore, the popular Aerosmith song "Mama Kin."

Any way you look at it, Guns 'N Roses proved live what I already knew from the record — that they have put in a lot of time and effort to try to make it as a band. They will.

Rolling Stone magazine turns 20 years old

By CHRISTINA PROFICO

The year was 1967, a year filled with love-ins, sit-ins, peace signs, peace marches, long hair and the Vietnam War. The '60s counterculture was in full swing, a time of new consciousness and rebellion by America's youth. Among all this turmoil, a rock institution was born, Rolling Stone magazine.

This past week, this symbol of culture turned 20 years old, and it is celebrating by releasing a 314-page, ad-filled anniversary issue that became available last week.

The current issue is a far cry from the first issue of Rolling Stone, which was a 24-page newspaper tabloid with a picture of John Lennon on the cover. That tabloid was formed in San Francisco by Jann Wenner, (who remains Rolling Stone's publisher and editor) with a scant $7,500 of borrowed funds as an undergraduate at Berkeley. It was not a bad start for a magazine that would become one of the most influential in the country, and carry a reputation for being on the cutting edge.

Throughout the past 20 years, the magazine's provocative, mature, gutsy writing has made it a must read for the person truly interested in rock-and-roll, which has always been the magazine's prime focus. But besides rock, Rolling Stone is also a magazine of television, film, sports, politics and, in general, anythig or any person that is hot.

The magazine has covered everything from Bob Dylan and the Beatles, to Bruce Willis and U2. It also covered a more serious side of life with stories on such issues as teen alcoholism and Nicaragua.

Recently, this approach has gotten Rolling Stone in trouble. It has been called the "in-house letter of the MTV generation." People have criticized the magazine for not having the type of "voice of youth" journalism that it began with, saying that it has lost its guts and become banal.

However, in Wenner's estimation, the basic philosophy has not changed. He believes that the magazine itself has changed enough to keep from becoming an outdated relic and that it has effectively changed with the times.

Ironically, getting back to its roots is what this anniversary issue is all about. It contains new interviews with many who have influenced rock over the past 20 years, including Bob Dylan, Bruce Springsteen, Paul McCartney, Mick Jagger and Pete Townshend, who discuss their thoughts about and experiences over the past 20 years.

Do not expect in this issue to find interviews with current pop moguls as Madonna or Prince, who are too young to remember much about the '60s. The exception to this is an interview with U2's Bono, probably one of the most outspoken young musicians of the decade, who talks about rock in the '80s.

Also in this issue, you will find a special pull-out section containing every Rolling Stone cover from 1967 to present date, a definite plus for the collector.

Even though Rolling Stone has had its ups and downs over the years, not to mention numerous changes, it seems that its continued success seems assured, as long as people are listening to music. Judging by its first 20 years of existence, it seems that this magazine will be around for at least another 20 years more.

Watch For Next Week's Theme Issue of the Villanovan:

Providence beats field hockey, 2-1

By AMY C. SPENCER

Despite a superb effort by the defensive players, Villanova field hockey fell by a score of 2-1 to Providence College Oct. 19. Providence, ranked first in the latest NCAA national poll, drew on their quickness and excellent ball-handling skills to take an early lead. Providence's top scorer, Carol Anne Byrne, knocked in one for the Friars only 12 minutes after play started.

Providence dominated most of the first half, rarely allowing Villanova to move into an offensive position. The Friars scored a second time with eight minutes remaining before half time, and the 'Cats were still trailing by a score of 2-0 at the half.

The Wildcats looked like a new team at the onset of the second period. Filled with determination, they charged upfield and scored one minute and 30 seconds later. Ann Dickey put the ball in for what was to become Villanova's only score of the game.

Possession of the ball went back and forth throughout the period, and countless shots just missed going into the goal. It looked like the game was going to head into an overtime period as the 'Cats brought the ball upfield with two minutes left to play. However, a missed penalty corner shattered the hopes of the Wildcat team, and the time ran out with Providence ahead by a goal.

The excellent defensive skills exhibited by Villanova were the highlight of the game. Wildcat defense effectively turned back the strong offensive skills of Providence time after time. Particularly noteworthy were the exploits of goalie Mary Monahan. Monahan's skillful saves were an important factor in the final outcome of the game.

"My goalie's play was spectacular today," said head coach Cheryl Massaro. "She set up some crucial defensive maneuvers. Our defense really was strong today."

In a classic defensive struggle, Villanova's field hockey team was dealt a 2-1 loss at the hands of the Providence Friars.

The loss to Providence was followed by a loss to St. Joseph's. The 'Cats rebounded, though, when they topped Yale, 2-0.

Next the Wildcats faced Rider. They fell behind early, trailing 1-0 at the half, but netted three goals in the second period to earn a 3-1 win. Sharon Seitz had a great game, scoring two goals to maintain her position as team leader. The third goal was scored by Ann Rosato, which was her fourth of the year.

The next team to face the ferocious 'Cats was Holy Cross. These evenly matched teams ended regulation time tied at 1-1, with Villanova's lone goal scored by sophomore Victoria Rife. The Crusaders surged ahead quickly to take a 2-1 lead in the overtime period. Villanova countered this, as Jennifer Peacock shot one in for the 'Cats. A 2-2 deadlock was the final result.

Ruggers trip up Tigers in playoffs, 14-10

By MEL ATKELIES

In the sylvan serenity of Fairmount Park last Saturday, the Villanova ruggers defeated their rivals from Princeton in the Eastern Pennsylvania Rugby Union (E.P.R.U.) playoffs, 14-10.

The win marked the first defeat of Princeton by Villanova in the eight years of playoff competition, and assured 'Nova a berth in the national tournament for the second consecutive year.

Princeton opened the match with an aggressive running game led by flyhalf Desi Quigley. Midway through the first half, Quigley outran 'Nova's McDonnell and added a conversion kick for a 6-0 score.

Later, Quigley scored again, but this time the conversion kick was wide of the goalposts, making the score 10-0.

Undaunted by the score, 'Nova came back hitting hard in the second half. Behind the masterful footwork of Mike Koons, they were able to secure possession deep in Princeton's end.

As the scrum pushed over Princeton, backing them into the goalpost and cracking it into two, wing Tim Whelan fed the ball to flanker Brian Coughlin, who charged in for the score. The post was repaired in time for Mike Koons' conversion, bringing the score to 10-6.

Later, a penalty by Princeton gave lock Mike Burke the chance for a death kick, which lock Joe Staib stole possession for 'Nova. His pass out to the wing set up a 30-meter run for a try by wing Denis Graeber, tying the score, 10-10.

With only a minute left in the game, Coughlin scooped up a failed Princeton pass, and raced 60 meters untouched for a final score, giving Villanova the win, 14-10.

The win, coupled with their previous victories over Temple, 42-3, and Haverford, 24-0, has brought the team to the top of the Eastern rankings.

The team has fared so well that the B-side has taken to its own opponents as well. In the past two weeks, they have beaten Brandywine, 12-0; Temple, 18-0; and Haverford, 12-0.

Against Brandywine Men's Club, center Steve Condi ripped through their defense with teammate Tom Boyle en route to the B's third shutout. Prop Tom Orenbuch has dominated the defensive play, jarring the opponent's front row early, and thereby allowing the backs to score without difficulty.

Orenbuch, explaining his style says, "I have little regard for the other team — I merely play clean and hard, unless we're losing."

Soccer at .500 following break

By MICHAEL GOLDSTEIN

It would seem that the Villanova men's soccer team thrives on nailbiting matches because of the constant close battles they have been fighting on the soccer field the last couple of weeks.

Their games from Oct. 5-9 were no exception to this rule, as the Wildcats played two matches to concluding scores of 1-0 just as they did last week. The only difference this time around is that, on both occasions, Villanova occupied the short end of both scores.

On Oct. 6, the team took to their home field, hosting the University of Pennsylvania for a crosstown rivalry that was indeed a very heated game. Two yellow cards were handed out, one to each side. Villanova's Steve Grello was warned about 12 minutes into the game, followed by a violation by Penn's Paul Mataya to open the second half of play.

The aggressive play by both sides lead to a standoff at the end of regulation with a score of 0-0. The Wildcats fought hard until the 2-minute mark of the first overtime, when Penn's Warren Bieller put a shot past Villanova goalie Ron Klos to hand Villanova their fifth loss of the season, 1-0.

The team was outshot, 10-7 and despite shots on goal by forwards Jeff Collins and John Bond, the offense was not able to generate a goal.

On Oct. 10, the team traveled to Washington, D.C., to take on Big East opponent Georgetown University. This time the tempo was controlled by the Wildcats, who recorded 11 shots on goal by 10 different players.

But, as in the previous game, the team was unable to erase the zero next to their name on the scoreboard. Georgetown's Michael Mills scored at the 4:50 mark of the second half to hand Villanova their second straight 1-0 defeat.

Over Fall Break, the 'Cats battled St. John's to a 0-0 deadlock, but were able to shutout Swarthmore, 2-0. Sophomore Steve Lewis and freshman Mike Deegan netted the two goals for the victorious 'Cats.

Next, the Wildcats travelled to New Jersey, where they suffered a loss to Seton Hall, ranked sixth in the nation. The top-ranked Pirates were playing in front of a packed house where they defeated 'Nova, 6-0.

pass of the game to take the wind out of Villanova's sails.

The turnover returned the ball to Northeastern's strong wishbone, which enjoyed a fine day, running the ball 78 times for 353 yards, in contrast to 'Nova's 17 yards on the ground.

Coach Talley felt that the defense played pretty well, sayng that, "They were just left on the field too long, which you cannot do against a tough wishbone team."

Following a trade of possessions, the Wildcats were set to punt when Hodge's mishandled punt occurred.

This led to a huskie touchdown by Mike White to start their second half of scoring, which was just the beginning of a quick 21 points which the Northeastern team produced. Villanova was able to reduce the margin in the fourth quarter when Bob Brady and Ron Sency each made superb catches for touchdowns, but Northeastern held on for a 41-28 win.

though that the team will get back on its feet and meet the challenge of University of Connecticut, which is having its Homecoming game this Saturday.

White stated, "The game will be a good learning experience if we realize the importance of executing each play with a higher level of intensity and at the same time reduce our turnovers and mistakes to a minimum."

The Games Committee would like to thank all the volunteers, huggers and spectators who shared their time on Oct. 11 at Special Olympics. The day was a huge success, and it could not have been done without your support!!

Men's X-country disappointing in tournament

By TERENCE KELLY

The men's cross country team had a somewhat disappointing performance this past Saturday at the Paul Short Memorial Run at Lehigh University. The team finished in 27th place out of a field of 29 teams with a team total of 756 points.

The meet was won by Brown University, which had an outstanding team total of 54 points. Brown virtually assured its victory by taking the top three places in the meet. The field was led by Brown's Chris Schille who had an outstanding time of 31:03.58.

Unfortunately the Wildcat team did not fare as well in the cold drizzle at Lehigh's Saucon Fields. The 'Cats first runner to finish was Junior Curt Koehler in 119th place with a good time of 33:27.51. Close behind him was freshman John Casey with a time of 33:29 (121st place). Rounding out 'Novas's top three was junior Bruce Harris in 148th place (34:05).

Despite the team's finishing well back in the pack, head track and field coach, Dr. Charles Jenkins, saw reasons for optimism. "The team is still plagued by injuries, and didn't fare as well as we hoped, but we are still running with mostly freshmen."

The team did receive some good news to open this week of practice. Jan Friedli, a sophomore from Dénmark, who is expected to be one of this season's standouts, returned to team practices. Friedli injured his knee earlier in the year and has not been able to run as of yet.

Jenkins also saw hope for the future commenting, "I feel the freshmen did a good job for us, in spite of the fact we did not win."

The team is now looking forward to this week's Big Five Meet on the Belmont Plateau course. With another meet under their belts and more people back from injuries, the team is hoping to do well.

Golf ends fall season

By JIM BOWMAN

What began as a potentially promising fall season ended in disappointment for the Villanova golf team as they failed to qualify for the ECAC Championships.

Penn State and Temple (319 and 322, respectively) easily outdistanced Villanova's team score of 342 to capture the two berths.

The 'Cats officially closed out their fall schedule Oct. 13, with a third place finish in the Big Five Championships held at the Eagle Lodge course in Philadelphia. Senior Tony Corbo fired a 76, capturing an individual third place finish to highlight an otherwise dismal team performance.

"Jim and Kevin [Clarke and Rogerson] didn't play because of midterms, and we went into the tournament with the attitude, 'We'll shoot what we can and try to stay close to Temple,'" commented freshman Jeff Osler. "It was a bad tournament and a bad season, but we'll come back this Spring."

Despite the players' unanimous displeasure about their fall performances, no one is ready to throw in the towel with winter practice and a full spring schedule looming in the not-too-distant future.

"We definitely did not play to our potential," explained Clarke, "but I'm sure we're going to improve.

Athlete of the Week

KIRK SCHULZ

This week's Saco East Athlete of the Week is Wildcat quarterback Kirk Schulz.

In last Saturday's Northeastern clash, Schulz completed 25 passes for 356 yards, thus making him Villanova's all-time leading passer with 3,409 career yards. Kirk passed former Wildcat great Daryl Woodring, who was at the helm from 1969-71.

Although the excellent performance was in a losing effort, Schulz still managed to toss four touchdown passes.

Schulz is currently a sophomore major. A graduate of Mahwah High School in New Jersey, Schulz was a three-year letter winner at quarterback and safety.

Spikers lose six of last nine

By MONICA BYRNE

Over the past two weeks, the women's volleyball team has done little to improve their record. The lady spikers have only defeated three of their last nine opponents. Inconsistency is still plaguing Villanova because the players are not working as a "cohesive unit" according to Coach Dennis McGinnis.

With 14 more games remaining, McGinnis is confident that his team will get on track and "salvage this season." Looking ahead, 'Nova should approach Big East tournament play ranked third. The 'Cats would like to be 21-14 heading into the final stretch of their 1987 campaign.

On Oct. 6, Villanova hosted Drexel but was defeated 3-1 (13-15, 15-6, 13-15, 13-15). Unfortunately, the 'Cats did not serve well against the very persistent Drexel spikers, and were not able to gain any advantages. The Wildcats then traveled to a tournament at Princeton University on Oct. 9 and 10. They were defeated by Princeton 3-1 (15-12, 12-15, 0-15, 3-15) because the spikers could not maintain the momentum they had built up in the first game.

'Nova then redeemed itself slightly by capturing two 3-0 wins, the first over Seton Hall (15-5, 16-14, 15-4) and the second over Fordham (15-5, 15-2, 15-3).

Villanova returned home on Oct. 11 to host George Washington. The 'Cats led their opponent in games 2-0, but allowed their advantage to slip away, eventually losing 3-2 (15-13, 16-14, 8-15, 4-15, 8-15), in a game that truly exemplified the lack of consistency in the lady spikers.

On Oct. 17, 'Nova tallied a 3-0 loss to Georgia (5-15, 8-15, 15-8), but turned around to defeat Furman 3-0 (16-14, 15-8, 15-8) on Oct. 19. Sadly to say, this would be the last of the Wildcats' wins to date.

Villanova has been unsuccessful in their last three quests for triumph. The Wildcats met North Carolina State, and were thwarted 3-0 (11-15, 13-15, 10-15). Then the 'Cats traveled to William and Mary on Oct. 23 only to be overcome 3-1 (2-15, 15-10, 11-15, 14-16).

In their most recent attempt for victory, the spikers fell 3-1 to North Carolina (15-11, 6-15, 12-15, 9-15).

Unfortunately, the women's 7-14 volleyball record is no indication of how talented the squad really is. With a frustrated look, McGinnis admits that, "The team just hasn't jelled yet."

Surprisingly, the players are still in good spirits and, hopefully, within the next few weeks, the team can come together to end their season on a winning note.

Sixth-ranked Wildcats down Yale

By MICHAEL E. JONES

During a busy three-week period, the Villanova women's cross country team established itself as one of the premiere powers of the entire nation. According to the National Women's Cross Country Poll for the week ending Oct. 18, the Wildcats improved their ranking to an impressive sixth, its highest ranking ever, and managed to defeat fourth-ranked Yale in the process.

On Oct. 10 at the Paul Short Invitational, the Wildcats were put to the test against Yale and Georgetown, and responded brilliantly.

Juniors Vicky Huber and Kathy Franey left no doubters in finishing first and third, with Huber setting a personal 5,000-meter best. The remaining Wildcats each ran their best times in what coach Marty Stern called "an extremely satisfying team victory."

One of the secrets of the Wildcats' amazing success this year has been their depth. At the Big Five Championship, the 'Cats proved just how deep they are. Without the services of Huber, they still took five of the first 10 places, and manhandled their competition with an outstanding 22-point total.

Franey broke the tape first, covering the 2.9-mile course in 16:33, while junior Michele DiMuro, running in her second collegiate cross country championship ever, finished three seconds behind to capture second.

Fellow junior Celeste Halliday, also running in her second collegiate cross country championship, took fourth in 16:48, while the ever consistent Jenny Brekhus, also a junior, took fifth in 16:59. Senior Jenny Rahn finished tenth in 17:37 to give the 'Cats their 22-point total.

We can go into the ring with anybody. Franey and Huber are not satisfied with being two of the better runners in the country — they both want to be the best.

—Marty Stern, head women's cross country coach

Stern could not say enough about the performances of his runners, commenting, "We can go into the ring with anybody. Franey and Huber are not satisfied with being two of the better runners in the country — they both want to be the best. Both Brekhus and Rahn have proven to be solid performers and have continuously pleased me with their consistency.

"DiMuro and Halliday are two of the most versatile track performers in the country. With their addition, we went from being a good team to a great team."

DiMuro and Halliday are both 800-meter runners, yet have demonstrated extraordinary range from 400 meters to 5,000 meters.

This talented squad successfully defended their Big East Championship title with yet another impressive win. Huber and Franey duplicated their Paul-Short performances, finishing first and third. The 'Cats managed to place 10 team members in the top 30, which gave them an 11-point edge over 20th-ranked Providence. Nineteenth-ranked Georgetown finished 14 points out of the running.

Stern termed the victory "the best team performance in the history of the program."

The Wildcats have more than met the expectationms of Stern, and will be facing stiffer competition when they travel to Lehigh University in three weeks for the NCAA Region and ECAC Championships. Who knows — another national championship could be looming on the horizon.

Football loses 41-28, now 5-1

By JAY TALBOTT

As the student body enjoyed its Fall Break, the Villanova football team experienced another type of break. In the past 20 games, Villanova has played some Division III and II schools on its way into the IAA Yankee Conference next fall. However, after demolishing Central Connecticut, 52-20, on Oct. 10 and Catholic University 46-7 on Oct. 17, it broke from these weaker opponents as it entered the IAA level of play which the team has looked forward to playing the past three years.

Unfortunately, on Oct. 24 the Northeastern Huskies were anticipating their arrival in Brookline, Mass. with bated breath. The Huskies (4-3) outplayed the Wildcats (5-1) last Saturday as their wishbone-oriented offense controlled the ball and the time effectively to outscore the Wilcats, 41-28.

The 'Cats' greatest advisory was probably not Northeastern, but instead their own offense, which uncharacteristically turned over the ball five times. Twice in the third quarter, when the offense had gained some momentum, Kirk Schulz was intercepted, and a third time, when punter Perry Hodge was attempting a punt, Northeastern's 17 yard line he was sacked on.

Northeastern was able to capitalize on these miscues by quickly running the score from a close 20-13 to an unreachable, 41-13, by the middle of the fourth quarter.

Head coach Andy Talley called it "the worst game we have played" since the program was reinstated. "We turned the ball over way too many times to win against a good football team like Northeastern."

The loss stopped an 11-game Wildcat winning streak which began last year against Fordham. As the Cinderella story was shattered, the amazing Schulz broke Daryl Weeding's record for passing yardage of 3,171 yards.

On a third quarter pass to Greg Downs, Shulz became Villanova's all-time leader in passing yards, he put it into perspective, saying, "Football is a team-oriented game, not an individual one, and it [the record] would have meant more if we had won."

At halftime, Northeastern had a 20-7 advantage after a 65-yard pass from Rodriguez to Mike Williams and a second field goal by Gordon from 44 yards out.

The Huskies opened the second half by intercepting Schulz at midfield, but came away empty after a missed field goal.

Schultz replied to this by driving the 'Cats 80 yards for a four-yard touchdown pass to Greg Downs, making the score 20-13.

The team really appeared to be in control when, on Northeastern's next possession, John O'Brien recovered a Huskie fumble on the 33-yard line. Two plays later, however, Chris Demarest intercepted his second Schultz Mike Williams (pictured above), Northeastern's most feared deep threat, runs on the receiving end of Dickie Dwyer's 48-yard scoring catch. Williams, a junior, has led the Huskies in receiving two years straight.

BEHIND the Lines

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

Behind the Lines takes on a different tone this week. The topic has surfaced because of a recent personal experience and is dedicated to all athletes who have given their mind, their soul and their heart to sports, only to suffer a disabling injury.

Each one of us has someone or something that touches us so deeply that it gives us a way to express our inner-self, a reason to live and the ability to persevere.

For most of us, we have our family and friends, but for some, there is something different — the love of sport.

Some people can express themselves, their thoughts, feelings and efforts, through the use of words. Some can express themselves through their work. Some express themselves through sports.

However, sports are not merely expressions of physical talent. They reach deeper — often to the heart. They can become expressions of what is inside someone, a way to share ourselves with others and to give a little of our heart.

There is no greater pain, physical, mental or emotional, than the loss of something this close to us. The hand of God can, within a matter of seconds, steal away your hopes and dreams, and replace them with a bitter reality.

One realizes, quickly, how frail the human body is and how much the human spirit can endure. One realizes that sport is not done for love of school, country or money, but because it expresses who and what we are.

What I have just tried to make you feel is the mental and emotional anguish of an athlete being injured and the possible end of a career.

What hurts most is not the end of participation or the injury itself, but the torture of feeling you have so much yet to give, and somehow, somewhere, someone has stolen your ability to show the world what you are inside.

The ramifications run much deeper than a selfish desire for expression. It touches family and friends as well.

It hurts those who are close to you to see you suffer the pain of watching others do what you once did so well. It hurts them to see others waste talent that you worked so hard to develop.

However, there is one bright side to all of this. One realizes in this dark and gloomy time that the world around us cares not what you are as you perform on a diving board or playing field, but rather they care what you are inside. Often we don't feel that the easiest way to express ourselves is through a smile, a hug or a tear.

Academic freedom debated

By JENNIFER REIDY

In early 1986, Pope John Paul II issued a pontifical schema, an outline of ideas about Catholic higher education, that provoked national criticism as an obstacle to academic freedom.

The schema was subsequently reviewed by presidents of 110 Catholic universities throughout the United States. A synthesis of their reactions was prepared by Sister Alice Gallin, O.S.U., executive director of the Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities (ACCU) for the April 10, 1986, edition of Origins magazine.

According to the article, "The real crux of the document [the pontifical schema] is perceived by many to be the assertion of a power on the part of the bishop to control theologians (Norms, Chapter IV, Article 31) and to assure 'orthodoxy' in their teaching."

Gallin's article said on behalf of the presidents that "what is proposed here is contrary to the American value of academic freedom ... The university is the home of the theologian, not the bishop, and the bishop must respect that fact."

The Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, former president of Notre Dame University, in an interview with a New York Times reporter, charged, "The schema is an attempt to lay down universal rules to define Catholic education for all areas of the world — and that just isn't realistic."

"The pontifical schema does indeed have a chilling effect on Catholic universities," commented Dr. Charles L. Cherry, associate vice president for Academic Affairs. "In the document there exists the potential for intrusion

Greeks to support football

By K. DILLENSCHNEIDER

In response to decreased football attendance, the Villanova Greek organizations will launch a spirit campaign tomorrow at the Homecoming game.

These efforts are a result of a plea made by Andy Talley, head football coach. Talley spoke at a joint Interfraternity/Panhellenic (IFC/Panhel) councils meeting Oct. 8, where he encouraged Greeks to attend the games and show support for the football team.

According to Marie Collevecchio, Panhel secretary, there will be a spirit contest. Collevecchio said there will be a small entrance fee for each Greek organization that wants to participate, and there will be a cash prize for the fraternity or sorority that shows the most spirit. "Frats and sororities are encouraged to sit together, wear their letters and colors, make posters and show spirit."

Collevecchio feels that the reason many students are not attending the games is because they are upset about having to pay $3 to park for the day when they already pay $50 for a yearly parking permit. "It's like saying, let's see how much money we can make off of this," Collevecchio said.

Lee Donair, Villanova athletic ticket manager, reported, "The big games like Homecoming and Parents' Weekend are usually sold out." A sellout in the stadium is 11,823 tickets. Donair said that, for all other games, approximately 7,000 to 7,500 tickets are sold.

Donair estimated, "At least 25 percent of the students who have tickets do not go in to the games, or they walk in and walk out." She added, "But they'll all be there for the basketball games, that's for sure."

According to Robert J. Capone, director of alumni, the Villanova Financial Club, the Wildcat Club and the Varsity Club all support Villanová football.

Commenting on the student support, Capone said, "I think the students have been great and supportive." Capone said there was a good student response the first game, it rained the second game and the students were on break for the third game.

"I think that at the Homecoming and the Holy Cross games you'll see where the student support is," Capone concluded.

Campus rezoning planned

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

Villanova officials met with Radnor Township commissioners Oct. 27 to discuss rezoning the Morris tract on the University's west campus to permit the future construction of dormitories and academic facilities.

To encourage the rezoning, the Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., assistant to the vice president for Student Life, and Marc Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center, unveiled the University's long-range plans for full utilization of the west campus land. The plan includes housing for 1,200 students and offices for faculty or administration.

If rezoning the area is approved, these plans will be implemented incrementally, as funding is available, explained Martin.

Martin stated, "Our intent is to have 4,000 beds [on campus]. The goal is to accomplish what the township and University want — to increase campus housing and to reduce the number of students who live off campus." He emphasized that Villanova will not increase the student enrollment beyond its current number.

The west campus area, consisting of 62.5 acres which lie north of the railroad tracks and west of Spring Mill Road, is comprised of the St. Mary's tract and the Morris tract. The 16 acres of the St. Mary's tract are part of Villanova's original property purchased in 1842. The St. Mary's tract is zoned institutional, allow-

V.U. students surveyed on Catholic issues

By THE NEWS EDITORS

A recent Villanovan survey suggests that Villanova students disagree to some extent with Church teachings on a number of controversial moral issues.

Males, females, freshmen and seniors alike took dissenting positions on such subjects as birth control, premarital sex and the infallibility of the Pope on moral matters. Significant amounts of dissent existed on such issues as abortion and the ordination of women.

Furthermore, over 97 percent of those polled believed it is possible to be a good Catholic even if one disagrees with Church teachings.

Dissent on sexual issues

The majority of students surveyed disagreed with official Church positions on all sexual issues in the poll, except for the morality of homosexual activity.

For example, over 84 percent said that premarital sex is not wrong in all circumstances. Ninety-four percent disagreed that using artificial means of birth control is wrong.

Also, only 14.3 percent believed that "abortion should be illegal in all circumstances." About 57 percent said that it "should be legal only in certain circumstances, such as when a woman's health is endangered or when pregnancy results from rape or incest."

Twenty-seven percent, including 38.5 percent of the women surveyed, agreed that a woman should be free to get an abortion if she wants one.

Men and women hold strikingly different views on the matter of the morality of homosexual activity. Over 84 percent of males said that homosexual activity was immoral, while women were almost evenly divided on the issue. Overall, 70 percent agreed that homosexual activity is morally wrong.

Questioning of papal views

The students' dissent on sexual issues ran hand in hand with their questioning of the Pope's infallibility.

Only 20 percent of students believed that the Pope was infallible "when he teaches formally on matters of morals." This belief in papal infallibility rose to 41.4 percent on "matters of religious faith, such as the divinity of Christ," but a majority still disagreed with this view.

Furthermore, only about 47 percent found Pope John Paul II's warnings on "the moral dangers of consumerism, materialism and a life too centered in temporal pleasures" relevant to their own lives.

Perceptions of Pope John Paul II

A majority of students described Pope John Paul II as "too conservative," but not as "someone who is out of touch with the modern world." Over 58 percent said the former description was true, but 65.7 percent disagreed with the latter perception.

Students polled were almost equally divided on whether the Pope was out of touch with American Catholics, with 44.3 percent agreeing and 50 percent

The advisor for off-campus housing is the Rev. Francis Farsaci, O.S.A. His office hours are Monday, Wednesday and Friday: 9-11:30 a.m. and 12:30-3:15 p.m. On Tuesday and Thursday, he will be in his office from 9-11:30 a.m. and 12:30-5 p.m.

Essay Competition

The English department announces competitions for two prizes: 1) award for the most distinguished scholarly or critical essay written by an undergraduate student at Villanova, and 2) award for the most distinguished scholarly or critical essay by a graduate student at Villanova. The winner of each competition will receive $100. Deadline for submissions to the English department secretary in 201 Vasey, is April 1. For more information, contact the English department.

London Trip

Dr. Joseph Kinney, English professor and Shakespeare specialist at Villanova, will accompany travelers on a trip to London and the English Countryside (including Stratford, Shakespeare's birthplace and Bristol from March 25-April 1. The trip includes roundtrip air fare, three first-class hotels, meals, theatre, all transfers, sightseeing and tours. The cost is $1,095. To obtain a flier about this trip, please call Dr. Kinney at 645-4799. Reservations are limited.

Tuition, salaries discussed

By JOHANNE C. SHARP

Senators participate in the Oct. 30 University Senate meeting.

Student Senator John B. Lewis presented a student-recommended tuition increase of 4 percent for the 1988-89 academic year, and Faculty Senator Dr. Harry R. Strack, political science professor, submitted a survey of faculty salaries of competing institutions at the Oct. 30 University Senate meeting.

Villanova tuition should only increase if costs increase, said Lewis. According to Lewis, economic data shows the tuition should not exceed 5 percent for next year.

Lewis cited the Chronicle of Higher Education and said, "This year's not a year for 10, 11, 12-percent tuition increases."

Under the student recommendation, tuition for undergraduate arts and commerce and finance students would rise from $7,820 to $8,130, a $310 increase.

Tuition rates for nursing, sciences and engineering students would rise from $8,080 to $8,400, a $320 increase, under the recommendation.

The recommendation also states that tuition for law students should increase $335, from $8,420 to $8,755 for the 1988-89 academic year.

The recommendation included a 3 percent increase in Villanova room and board. The rationale behind the increase, according to Lewis and Phil Brach, Student Government president, is that room and board should rise according to the projected increase in the Consumer Price Index (CPI).

"The increases we [Student Government and student senators] are recommending are being kept within the mission statement of the University," Lewis said.

Lewis explained that the University should compare itself to other institutions that have a similar cost structure.

"Villanova is not under-priced when you compare it to other comprehensive schools," he stated.

Lewis said that, while schools like Georgetown Univeristy and the University of Notre Dame cost more than Villanova, the average tuition paid by each student after financial aid is similar. For example, Georgetown's tuition is $10,950 and the average student pays $7,821. Villanova's tuition is $8,000 and average tuition paid is $6,867, a difference of $954.

Strack introduced a survey of faculty salaries of competing institutions and said, "Fifteen of the 18 schools pay their professors more than Villanova."

The survey submitted included a list of comparable schools according to the deans of the College of Arts and Sciences, College of Nursing, College of Engineering and the College of Commerce and Finance.

The average Georgetown full-professor's salary was $60,900 for the 1986-87 academic year, while the average Villanova full-professor's salary was $47,200.

Dr. Philip A. Maurone, chairperson of the Senate, announced that the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, will address the Senate at their next meeting Nov. 20. Alvin A. Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance, said he will give the Senate Budget Committee's report at the next meeting.

Default rate remains low

By NOEL E. FALCO

While the Nov. 2 issue of Insight magazine said that the default rate of Guaranteed Student Loans (GSL) is again climbing, Gary B. Fenner, vice president for University Financial Affairs, said Villanova has one of the lowest default rates among students.

"Our students always tend to pay," said Fenner.

He stated that GSLs do not impact the financial situation of the University, as these loans are given by the government and are not on the University books.

However, Fenner said the University has been impacted through increased financial aid. The policy is to increase the amount available for student aid by at least the same amount, if not more than, the amount of a tuition increase.

"We may have to do even more as it [financial aid] is becoming a higher priority. We are seeing a loss in applicants because of financial aid," he said.

According to Fenner, the University's two main problems are the inadequacy of financial aid packages and the lack of on-campus residency.

"That's always the standard response, and it's a true response," said Fenner.

Financial aid is one of the increasing costs of the University. Also, the institution had to upgrade laboratory equipment, maintain faculty salaries and physical facilities, he said.

"It's difficult to maintain a good faculty as businesses offer high salaries to attract them. We must also maintain attractiveness of the campus to students in order to maintain competitiveness in the marketplace. Operating costs are going up," stated Fenner.

Government requirements also cost money, as the University must fulfill certain standards and programs, such as the Office of Safety and Health, Affirmative Action and environmental safety.

Fenner said, "There are so many regulations that you end up hiring more people who understand these regulations. There are a lot of reports to be filed. The government wants more and more information."

Gary B. Fenner, vice president for Financial Affairs

Another problem the University has is that it has a "miniscule endowment for its size," $20 million in total, which puts pressure on tuition, according to Fenner.

"Bryn Mawr has $110 million in endowment ... Princeton has a billion and a half endowment," he said.

Insight magazine stated that private colleges of this type are faulted "with significant endowments for building financial reserves rather than putting a greater share of investment gains into operating budgets to restrain tuition increases."

Furthermore, according to Insight, some administrators believe that "larger classes could bring in economies of scale."

However, Villanova has a 14-1 student faculty ratio, said Fenner.

"Some people believe the smaller the student-faculty ratio, the higher the quality. Others believe just the opposite. You have to look at the institution. We're right about where we should be," he said.

Insight also stated that rising tuitions could affect smaller private colleges with enrollments of 1,000 or less.

Fenner said of Villanova, "Enrollment is holding steady."

Homecoming events announced

Villanova's 1987 Homecoming Weekend, Nov. 6-8, will include an array of sports events, receptions, dances and professional workshops. On Nov. 7 the Homecoming parade and football game between the Wildcats and the University of Massachusetts Minutemen will be held at the stadium. The weekend will culminate Nov. 8 with a Sunday brunch sponsored by the College of Nursing Alumni Association.

Of the 31,000 expected for the occasion, six alumni will be recognized for exceptional career performance during the Eighth Annual College of Arts and Sciences Alumni Medallion Awards dinner Nov. 6.

"Scandal" scheduled at V.U.

The Villanova University/Theatre will present "School for Scandal" from Nov. 18-21 and Dec. 1-6.

Cast in the production are: Elizabeth K. Walsh, John Rhein, Edward O. Flick Jr., Maryann Sollami, Jill DeForte, Gerre Garrett and Michael Foley.

Also cast are Tom Large, Cynthia Angst, Beth Dannenfelser, Michael Hollinger, Thomas Basile, Sean P. Murray and Matthew G. Giggins.

Others cast are T. Richard Greene, Timothy C. Cully, Alcide Hobbs, Michael Guerriero, Kristen Robacker and Monique Blank.

Sigma Nu brother wins award

Nick Worthington, a member of the Sigma Nu fraternity and a student at Villanova University, has been named this semester's recipient of a scholarship from the Zeta Rho/Sigma Nu Alumni Scholarship Fund.

Worthington a junior political science major from Allentown, Pa., was selected for the award based on criteria including academic achievement, University involvement, fraternity activity and personal interviews with the scholarship fund board of trustees.

He currently serves as Sigma Nu's representative to the Interfraternity Council (IFC), captain of Sigma Nu's intramural football team and chairperson of the fraternity's service committee.

Competitors listed

By KEVIN C. HEIL

The faculty affairs committee of the Villanova University Senate recently completed a survey determining which schools are in direct competition with the University in order to determine whether faculty salaries should be increased, according to Michael Hones, physics professor and vice chairperson of the faculty council.

"The purpose of the study is to see how the salaries of the faculty at Villanova University compare with those of faculty at other competing institutions," Hones said.

The Senate's constitution states that one of the committee's responsibilities is to make recommendations to the Senate regarding salaries, compensations and fringe benefits.

Ten years ago, a resolution was passed requiring the faculty council to make its salary recommendations to the vice president for Academic Affairs. Historically, though, this is the first time the faculty affairs committee has been charged with determining the information needed for the survey.

The goal of the University is a good undergraduate education. Therefore, improving faculty salaries is a good way to improve faculty quality, according to Hones.

The list, presented to the Senate last Friday, states that the schools in direct competition with Villanova regarding faculty salaries are Boston College, Bucknell University, Carnegie Mellon University, Cornell University, University of Delaware, Drexel University and Fairfield University.

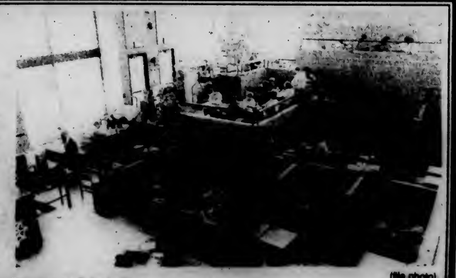
Also listed are Georgetown University, College of Holy Cross, Lafayette College, Lehigh University, University of Notre Dame, University of Pennsylvania, Penn State University, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Rutgers University, Tufts University and University of Virginia.

The faculty council has scheduled a meeting for Nov. 9 to consider a recommendation for a salary increase.

Jake's Place stays closed

By DEBBIE GROSS

Jake's Place, a non-alcoholic pub in the Belle Air Terrace, is currently undergoing a re-valuation, and there is no definite plan for its continuation, stated Lucyna J. Gorski, director of Student Activities, this week.



Although it began with much success, Jake's Place was not accomplishing its basic goal as an option for social activity during its two-year existence, said Gorski. "When people became more settled in their activities at Villanova, Jake's went downhill," she said.

Even though funding was good and bands were brought in to perform, students would come in for a few minutes in groups to eat free pizza and then leave, Gorski explained.

According to Gorski, the idea of regrouping Jake's Place is discussed at committee meetings, and although it's future is uncertain, there is a wish to continue something like it at Villanova.

Since it was created for students, Gorski believes that students should have a greater input in its reorganization. Ideas for new entertainment or additional suggestions are very welcome, she said.

If anyone has an interest in working toward the future development of Jake's Place, they should contact either Chris Lysionek, assistant to the dean of students, or Gorski.

Academic freedom in Catholic colleges reviewed

[by the Church] in regard to the appointment of faculty, among other things."

Cherry's fears are echoed by Gallin in her article. She wrote, "It would indeed be unfortunate if Roman regulation were to force our best theologians to seek employment in secular rather than Catholic universities to avoid harassment. This fear is expressed by many respondents [Catholic university presidents]."

A recent example of the intrusion by the Roman Catholic Church hierarchy into Catholic higher education is the controversy surrounding the Rev. Charles E. Curran, formerly of Catholic University. Pope John Paul II "had judged Curran 'unsuitable' and 'ineligible' to be a professor of Catholic theology, because of his personal views on sex, abortion and birth control which clash with Church doctrine," according to an editorial in the Sept. 6, 1986, issue of America magazine.

The editorial stated, "Father Curran is not so much the initiator as the articulator of such widespread doubts about some official teachings. To discipline him is to execute the messenger who brings upsetting news."

America magazine editorial
Sept. 6, 1986

Dr. Michael E. Burke, director of the honors program, expressed concern that the Curran incident has had a "dampening effect" on many professors of theology. Cherry agrees that it is "a negative blow to academic freedom" and that "Rome has no clear sense of higher education in the United States."

In regard to Villanova, Burke stated, "Classes and curriculum are not interfered with by the Church here. Our Catholic identity outlines our agendas and priorities, but the professors here are relatively free to teach as they desire."

A theology professor, who declined to be identified, stated, "Though I cannot speak for all of my peers, I feel that a theologian at Villanova University has relatively total academic freedom to teach and to conduct his class as he sees fit."

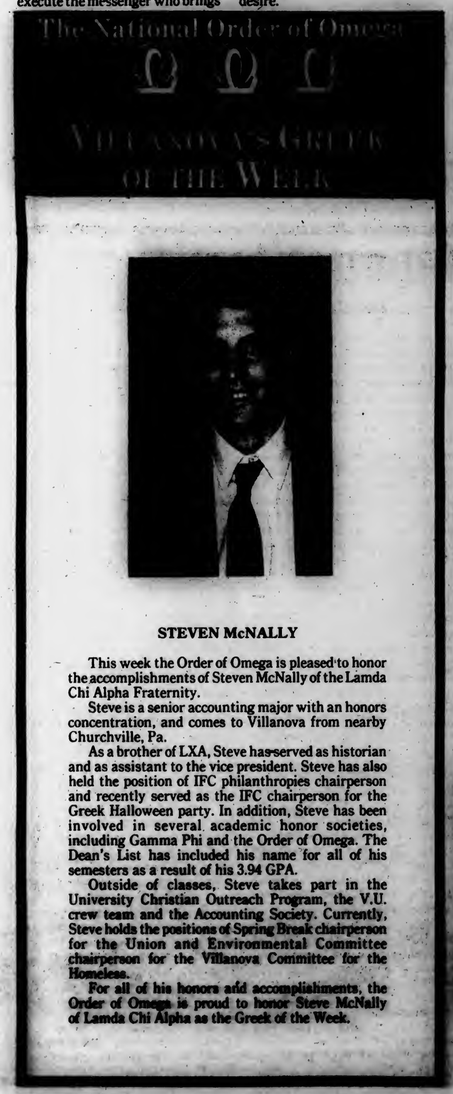
Burke named, however, one exception to the usually liberal academic environment at Villanova. In 1986, the Rev. Daniel McGuire of Marquette University in Wisconsin was scheduled to lecture at Villanova. His appearance was later cancelled by the administration because of the controversial reputation McGuire had acquired because of his views on abortion.

Burke speculated that the administration came to this decision because of the potential negative publicity that may have resulted from McGuire's high visibility and reputation, thus provoking an angry reaction from elements of the Philadelphia archdiocesan community.

The American Association of University Professors (AAUP) subsequently held an investigation at Villanova regarding the McGuire matter, suspicious of a violation of academic freedom, according to Cherry.

"Villanova was not censured in this case," Cherry added. He also revealed that Boston College had been investigated by the AAUP for also cancelling a McGuire lecture.

Hesburgh, in the New York Times interview, stressed the importance of the laity in ensuring academic freedom. "If the church tries to interfere in a university like this one [Notre Dame], which has a lay board, the board can say, 'We have academic freedom — we are autonomous.' " Conversely, "When someone tries to interfere on a religious basis, and your board of directors consists of cardinals, bishops and archbishops, like at Catholic University, then you might have to go along when word comes from headquarters."



Cherry agreed with Hesburgh's idea that lay boards help guarantee academic freedom. "Right now, the majority of members on the Board of Trustees of Villanova are lay people. According to University law, one-third plus one member must be Augustinians," Cherry stated.

Dr. Charles L. Cherry, associate vice president for Academic Affairs.

Hesburgh also accounts for the financial aspect of this situation. "We [Catholic universities] would stand to lose a lot of government assistance if we conformed to the dictates of the Church." He cites this amount to be approximately $500 million nationwide.

STEVEN McNALLY

This week the Order of Omega is pleased to honor the accomplishments of Steven McNally of the Lamda Chi Alpha Fraternity.

Steve is a senior accounting major with an honors concentration, and comes to Villanova from nearby Churchville, Pa.

As a brother of LXA, Steve has served as historian and as assistant to the vice president. Steve has also held the position of IFC philanthropies chairperson and recently served as the IFC chairperson for the Greek Halloween party. In addition, Steve has been involved in several academic honor societies, including Gamma Phi and the Order of Omega. The Dean's List has included his name for all of his semesters as a result of his 3.94 GPA.

Outside of classes, Steve takes part in the University Christian Outreach Program, the V.U. crew team and the Accounting Society. Currently, Steve holds the positions of Spring Break chairperson for the Union and Environmental Committee chairperson for the Villanova Committee for the Homeless.

For all of his honors and accomplishments, the Order of Omega is proud to honor Steve McNally of Lamda Chi Alpha as the Greek of the Week.

West campus rezoning

ing the University to use the land for any housing or academic purposes, according to Martin.

Villanova acquired the 46.43 acres of the Morris tract about 10 years ago, and it is zoned R-1, or Residential-one acre, Martin said. Under this zoning, only single-family dwellings are permitted on this land. The University hopes to change the zoning from residential to institutional, which would then make construction possible, said Martin.

The overall plan for the west campus area includes a proposal to build dormitories or apartments for 400 students on the St. Mary's tract of land. In addition, the University proposes to construct dormitories or apartment buildings to house 800 students on the Morris tract in the area where Donnellon and Klekotka halls currently stand, Martin said.

When these facilities are built, the University plans to reduce the number of men housed in St. Mary's Hall from 290 to 166 because the rooms are small and were originally designed as singles. The west campus area will ultimately house 1,366 students.

The second building use in Martin and Tuchman's master plan is for a two-story student services building. The building will include a dining hall and indoor recreational facilities, such as basketball and tennis courts, since, according to Martin, "it is a long trek to the duPont Pavilion."

Martin and Tuchman plan to use the land west of the present soccer fields on the Morris tract for the construction of administrative or academic facilities. Martin stated, "We envision it as faculty offices . . . as yet unspecified."

In addition to the buildings outlined in the plans, "about 35 acres [of the 46.43 acres on the Morris tract] will be dedicated to fields, open space and setbacks," according to Martin.

About 17.7 acres are marked for a setback area, a zone of land which borders all non-Villanova property and upon which the University will not build at all.

About 4.2 acres are intended for open space that will serve to make the area pleasant and function as an additional setback region. "We want to be good neighbors [by providing an adequate buffer zone], said Martin.

Another 14 acres will be set aside for outdoor recreation space. A varsity baseball field and relocated varsity tennis courts are planned, along with intramural fields and outdoor basketball and tennis courts for general student use.

Also, additional space must be set aside for parking to meet student and faculty needs. One parking space is required for every three residents; therefore, at least 266 parking spaces would be needed.

The timing in beginning this construction if rezoning is approved depends on fundraising efforts. "We would build on west campus consistent with the results we have in the next Covenant campaign," said Martin.

Martin stated that the Radnor commissioners were "pretty receptive" to the University's rezoning request. He said that Villanova is trying to meet the concerns of neighbors. Last night University officials met with neighbors to discuss these plans.

The plans for the University to eventually reduce the number of men residing in St. Mary's Hall from 290 to 166 if the rezoning plans for west campus are approved to allow construction of additional dormitories.

dissenting.

Slightly under 3 percent said that "too liberal" was an apt description of the pontiff.

Changes approved

A majority of students polled favored a change in Church rules on three issues that have been recent subjects of debate among Catholics.

For instance, four out of five students approved of "allowing divorced Catholics to marry in the Church."

Changes in the rules on matters of ordination were also favored. Over 68 percent, including about 73 percent of women and nearly 66 percent of men, approved allowing women to be priests.

Students were more evenly split on the issue of allowing priests to marry, with 54.3 percent favoring this change.

Uncertainty over future

Students were generally not sure about what changes might occur within the Church in the near future.

The majority of students saw allowing divorced Catholics to marry in the Church as the only change likely to occur within the next 25 years.

Students were evenly split on the likelihood of the ordination of women and the Church's approval of Catholics using artificial methods of birth control. Almost 63 percent said it was unlikely that priests will be allowed to marry within the next 25 years.

Over 95 percent stated the Church will probably not approve of abortion by the year 2012. Also, nearly 80 percent said it was unlikely that an American will be chosen as Pope by that time.

Parking stickers stolen

By SABINA PIERCE

Fifty-five parking permits have been stolen since the beginning of the semester, and "it [the rate of robberies] seems to have picked up since Fall Break," said Lt. John Harrity of Villanova Security.

Villanova's policy on parking permits states that if a student loses a permit, he must purchase a new one for $50. However, if a student reports it stolen, he can file a theft report with the police department in the municipality in which it has been stolen.

It costs $5 to file a report with Radnor Township and $10 with Lower Merion Township.

The student must then bring a copy of the theft report to the Security office, where they will put the student's name on a list. The student will not receive a new sticker, but having his name on this list will entitle him not to be ticketed or towed away from the main lot.

"This list does not entitle them to park where they like, though, just in the main lot," said Harrity.

"Most of the permits seem to be reported stolen from the Regency Apartments," added Harrity.

Sgt. John Rutty of the Radnor Township Police Department disagreed. He said, "Most of the permits reported stolen have been from the main lots on campus."

There have been so many students filing theft reports with Radnor that they will only file a report if the complainant has the permit number, he said.

The Radnor Police Department is not doing any investigative work on the stolen permits. "We are not doing anything about the stolen permits because we basically let Villanova [University] handle problems like this internally. We will only step in if Villanova asks," said Rutty.

An exact count of how many theft reports have been filed in Radnor was not available, as this information is not kept on the computers. Rutty estimated, though, that around 50 reports have been filed.

An officer from the Lower Merion Township Police Department stated that they have had no complaints and they have not written any reports on parking permits stolen in Lower Merion.

A few parking permits have been recovered. "We are handling each case individually," said Stephen McWilliams, the University's judical affairs officer.

McWilliams stated that there would be a standard fine of $100 charged to students caught with a stolen permit. Of that, $50 would go to replacing the permit to the student from whom it was stolen. The convicted student would also be put on probation.

"The hardest thing is to prove that the permit was stolen by the individual, or if it was bought off someone else," said McWilliams.

Rutty suggested that a way to alleviate the problem would be to revert to the old bumper stickers and, for the time being, to have a guard checking permit numbers in the main lots.

Eysenck to speak

By CAROLYN R. MIRABILE

The third annual Fritz Nova Lecture will be held Nov. 10 at 8 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema. Dr. Hans J. Eysenck will be speaking in a colloquy for members of the psychology department and invited guests.

Each year, a member of the Social Science Forum is asked to invite a distinguished speaker to speak at the Fritz Nova Lecture. As a member of the Social Science Forum, Dr. Justin Green, a political science professor, arranged for Eysenck to speak on the "Decline and Fall of Sigmund Freud."

Eysenck was a fellow student with Dr. Fritz Nova, a former political science professor at Villanova, in Berlin, Germany.

Eysenck studied French literature, history and literature at the university of Dijon, France. He later obtained his doctorate in psychology in London.

Eysenck organized a department of experimental psychology at the Maudsly Hospital in London, and later founded the department of psychology at the Institute of Psychiatry at the University of London.

Eysenck also founded two journals: Behaviour Research and Therapy, and Personality and Individual Differences.

Eysenck studied and compared mental patients who received psychoanalysis with other mental patients who did not receive any psychoanalysis. His research showed that a greater percentage of those who did not receive treatment were cured.

Eysenck wrote a book, The Decline and Fall of Sigmund Freud, detailing evidence of the ineffectiveness of Freud's psychoanalysis. In addition, he attacked the underlying theories that Freud used as his basis.

Green stated, "Eysenck was chosen because he has made a great impact on the social sciences."

Green added, "Eysenck's findings can have broad implications on the validity of psychoanalysis. In turn, medical and nursing treatments would have to be re-evaluated. Social sciences in general that provide a strong support of the theory of 'nature vs. nurture,' would also have to be questioned.

National News Notes

Cut in college loans considered

A bill introduced last week by the Reagan administration to Congress would cut off students from their Guaranteed Student Loans (GSL) if they attend a college where the default rate is high.

The bill would drop colleges from the GSL program that do not pursue defaulters actively enough to collect on the loan.

"It really is a disgrace, schools with 50-, 60- or 70-percent default rates," stated William Kristol of the U.S. Department of Education. The schools with the highest default rates are private trade schools, community colleges and predominantly black institutions.

The GSL program is the most widely used financial aid.

Market crash affects colleges

When the Dow Jones Industrial Average plummeted 508 points Oct. 19, the value of many stock portfolios held by schools across the nation also fell precipitously.

Colleges typically own portfolios full of stocks and other investments. The profits from the portfolios are used in a number of ways, which include payments for big-money construction projects and providing financial aid to students frozen out of federal aid programs by budget cuts.

Most observers say the stock market should not have an immediate effect on tuition, salaries and other education costs. However, donations and other long-term commitments by contributors who have investments in the stock market could be affected.

Col. North presents contra slides

Lt. Col. Oliver North is taking his message of aid for the Nicaraguan contras to college campuses through a videotape of Central American slides. The videotape was barred by the congressional committee investigating the Iran-contra affair during North's testimony.

The videotape has been shown at the University of Maryland, the University of Southern California and the University of Texas, as well as other college campuses.

The slides show Soviet ships patrolling the Caribbean Sea, Cuban children learning addition with guns and grenades, war-torn Central American families, strategic airfields and the graves of Nicaraguan contras.

North allegedly used the same slide show to solicit funds from private donors for the contras, despite a congressional ban on such activities.

Many prominent Republicans feel that the slide show makes a more convincing argument for contra aid than the efforts of President Reagan's administration.

Columbia U. $100,000 offer critiqued

By SHARON A. WATERS

Alvin A. Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance, called Columbia Business School professor Asher Edelman's recent $100,000 offer to students "unethical as far as education is concerned." In his class about corporate raiding, Edelman offered $100,000 to any student who could pinpoint a possible takeover target for his company.

Clay also said there was "no way anything like this would happen at Villanova."

New York businessperson Edelman, who teaches the class part time, developed the offer as part of the final exam, with $100,000 being paid to the student if Edelman actually decided to purchase the company that the student suggested.

Columbia Business School Dean John Burton banned the proposal on the grounds that students might ignore other courses in their pursuit of Edelman's cash incentive, and that academics should be undertaken in order to learn and enrich oneself, not to obtain a cash reward.

Considering the cash offer "very unprofessional," Clay felt that good grades should be enough of a reward to a student.

Clay said the College of Commerce and Finance's goal is to "teach them [students] to be ethical businesspeople" and stated that the College "only hires people that share our mission and our goals to teach ethical business practices."

In accordance with this goal of ethics, Clay suggested that a class concerning corporate takeovers should address such issues as why a company should merge with another, which firms put themselves in a position to be taken over and how to avoid a takeover if it is not a beneficial one.

Clay deemed studying the effects of a merger on the employees and management of a company and its customers as important also.

If the professor wished to discuss the actual process of a takeover, he must first identify a good merger in order to teach good business ethics, according to Clay.

Clay felt that any investigative work between a student and professor in search of a suitable merger target should be conducted outside of the classroom. If a student working for a professor was also in his class, there could be the danger that a professor "may not be as objective in grading the student," according to Clay.

C. Gerald Walsh, economics professor, termed Edelman's offer "a corruption of the intent of academics by focusing on narrow profit gain over the general pursuit of knowledge."

When asked if he thought a student could learn while at the same time working under a cash incentive, Walsh said that the two "do not necessarily go hand in hand."

Walsh, however, felt there "might be an element of hypocrisy by universities pursuing money from the Asher Edelmans of the world," and added that to some it might seem a matter of difference in degree and not in kind.

Dr. John F. Stehle, economics professor, considered Edelman's $100,000 proposal "very appropriate" under the circumstances but felt that Edelman was not very clear in explaining his offer.

Stehle stated his interpretation of Edelman's proposal as offering the money only to a student who met the difficult requirements. Citing the long, random process and intense study to find a suitable takeover target for Edelman's specific company, Stehle considered it "pure luck" and about a one in 1,000 chance that a student would be successful.

After multiplying this low probability by the $100,000 offered and assuming a class size of 10 students, Stehle felt that the resulting $10 expected value to each student was reasonable and would not be high enough to cause students to neglect other courses.

Stehle said that a "professor should be allowed to offer any reasonable incentive" to his students, and if a professor felt that a student was worth $100,000, then he would have a "moral obligation" to pay that student $100,000.

Stehle further speculated that universities are afraid to offer material incentives to students. He added that this "alleged fear of financial incentives just might be an intent to coverup the fact that a university is acting as a cartel purchaser of expensive advertising input, such as athletes."

Rankings disputed

By J.M. RUBIN

(CPS) — Stanford is the best of the 10 best "national universities" in the country, U.S. News and World Report asserted in its new issue, but college presidents — stung by the ever-growing numbers of unscientific "rankings" of their schools — begun blasting the article as unfair four weeks ago.

"Yours is a highly superficial but highly visible analysis that helps those who don't need it and makes it harder for those who need help," Middlebury College President Olin C. Robinson wrote the magazine's editors, asking them not to publish their list anymore.

Indeed, more than 65 of the presidents asked to rank colleges by the magazine tried to stop U.S. News & World Report from releasing the results Oct. 17, but the magazine ignored their pleas.

"We use the same categories to rank the schools as the Carnegie Foundation [for the Advancement of Teaching]," U.S. News' Paul Vizza said in defense of the magazine's annual ranking of campuses.

U.S. News asks college presidents — "the best informed judges of American education," Vizza claimed — which schools they consider best in various categories.

The presidents said they are fed up with the proliferation of rankings of colleges by sources as diverse as the Dow Jones Company, Spy Magazine, the Yale News and Playboy.

Here's to Villanova

All too often, when Villanova students are discouraged by the University's visitation policy, single-sex dormitories and other restrictions, they tend to focus on the negative aspects of attending a Catholic university. While this emotion is understandable, it should not overshadow the positive aspects of Villanova. For, in an increasingly secular world, Villanova provides its students with an education grounded in values and a commitment to beliefs.

Perhaps the greatest asset of our Catholic university is that teaching can take a Christian intellectual and moral perspective without the fear of violating the separation of Church and state that is present at public universities. Villanova graduates thus bring not only knowledge to the working world, but a sense of values and ethics and an enlightened social consciousness as well.

Villanova is also enriched by the fine teaching tradition of the Augustinians. The University's emphasis on the humanities, including philosophy and religious studies, is held in high regard, as evidenced by Villanova's No. 1 ranking in the U.S. News and World Report's recent poll. Villanova students also have the chance to take valuable courses in the peace and justice program.

In addition, Villanova students are offered many opportunities to help their fellow man through the program for the homeless, Special Olympics and other service organizations. And students' spiritual needs are well-tended to, with daily Masses, the sacrament of reconciliation and Gospel study groups readily available.

Yet, while Villanova has many strengths, it faces a substantial challenge in the 1980s — remaining open to new ideas. Tradition is a valuable gem, but it loses its luster if it is used as a defense against necessary, progressive change. If visiting hours and single-sex dormitories are retained solely because Villanova is a Catholic university, and it is tradition, we will not meet the challenge. For Villanova to grow, an awareness of issues and changes in the Catholic Church and the secular world is vital.

While attending a Catholic university may at times have its drawbacks, the benefits reaped from a Villanova education are many. Here's to the growth of our Catholic university, Villanova, with best wishes for successfully meeting the challenge of change through the 1980s and beyond.

Revive Jake's Place

As a result of Villanova's stricter alcohol policy, the number of on-campus parties has sharply decreased during the past few years. Villanova opened a non-alcoholic pub, Jake's Place, to standing-room-only crowds two years ago. However, because of its dwindling popularity last year, the pub did not re-open this semester, and there are no definite plans for its continuation. Its continuation, though, is a must, and the University should make every effort to reopen Jake's Place.

Dr. Arthur Shriberg in his recent evaluation of Student Life recommended that the University "work very hard to demonstrate non-alcoholic options." He said that Jake's Place should be open more often and given more resources. His suggestions should be followed.

Jake's Place should be open not only on Wednesday, as in the past, but on one weekend night as well, when on-campus residents without transportation would have the time to utilize it. Furthermore, the pub should be consistently opened on the specified nights. Part of the reason for its decline was the random nature of its hours.

Other universities, including Notre Dame and Fordham, have found repeated success with their non-alcoholic pubs. The administration should investigate these pub operations at other schools. In the meantime, adding an inexpensive menu of appetizers and a non-alcoholic bar along with the pizza, would definitely attract more students.

The administration should certainly take some steps if they seriously want to curb alcohol consumption and abuse and at the same time want to offer some social alternatives and entertainment.

Letters to the Editor

Students encouraged to unite

To the Editor:

We are writing in reference to the increased difficulties students are having with Security, particularly involving the parking tags. This innovation of the Security department, or more accurately of The Rev. Patrick J. Rice O.S.A., vice president for administration, and Rowan Kelly, head of Security, has caused nothing but frustration, aggravation, and of course, if stolen, an additional $50. By the way, for those of you who do not know who Rice is, he is the person responsible for such areas as Food Services, the bookstore, Housekeeping and Maintenance, as well as Security.

Problems with Security are certainly not new to Villanova. However, the institution of parking tags and the ever-increasing negative attitude the Security department is expressing toward students is an issue that needs to be addressed and brought to the attention of the administration. The increased occurrences of towing, ticketing and overall inconsistencies in the application of policies need to be looked at with a serious eye by Rice and other key administrators.

Our purpose in writing this letter is to encourage anyone who has had problems with Security, especially concerning the parking tags, to bring it to the attention of any of the leaders of campus organizations (Villanova Union, IFC, Panhel, Student Government, RSA and ACS). It is only by uniting all of our grievances that we will be able to create an impact that will make the administration take notice.

The Villanova Student Union Executive Board

Our purpose in writing this letter is to encourage anyone who has had problems with security, especially the parking tags, to bring it to the attention of any of the leaders of campus organizations.

The Villanovan will print "Letters to the Editor" received at its offices in 201 Dougherty prior to the weekly deadline, Tuesday at 5 p.m. All letters must be typed and double spaced. The editors will withhold a name upon request, but all letters must be signed and should include the writer's telephone number. Because of limited space, not all letters can be printed. Others may be edited. Letters may be sent by mail to: the Villanovan, Villanova University, Villanova, Pa. 19085.

Op-ed

What is life at a Catholic university?

By SUSAN TOLVE

Catholic universities are often perceived as institutions that are lacking — lacking in coed dorms, lacking in liberal ideals, even lacking in birth control dispensers. Villanova's rich Catholic tradition, however, adds a unique flavor to college life which has many positive aspects — aspects most secular institutions lack.

It is said that the little things in life are what matters. Villanova has all the small touches of Catholic institution. The bells at Corr Chapel ring out "Amazing Grace," religious statues are located throughout campus, crosses are engraved in buildings and crucifixes hang in classrooms. All serve as an outward sign of Villanova's Catholicity and also a reminder of what is really important in life.

It is only fitting that we celebrate life with the people we live, work and party with. Mass is such a celebration at Villanova. The standing-room-only masses at the V.U. chapel unify the Villanova community. Students of diverse backgrounds with different ideas come together to worship one God. Many students take an active role in the masses, serving as lectors, eucharistic ministers, ushers or musicians.

In addition to weekly celebrations, masses also highlight important events at Villanova such as the start of a new school year or Parents' Weekend. Incoming freshmen unite with their new classmates and parents at a welcoming Mass on the first day of orientation. Shortly afterwards, the students say goodbye to their families. Four years later, these same students will celebrate a Baccalaureate Mass, and soon after end their Villanova education.

Education should not center exclusively around the classroom. Students need to be aware of the world around them to gain real knowledge. Among V.U. students, participation in activities such as the Sunshine Project, Special Olympics, Balloon Day and Hunger Awareness Week spur learning and awareness. Year after year, the large number of student volunteers for these activities show a sincere willingness on the part of Villanovans to reach out to others.

Many students feel like they need help themselves during final exams in December, with Christmas right around the corner. This can be a difficult time for all students, especially freshmen who are away from their families for the beginning of holiday festivities. Most Villanovans quickly get in the holiday spirit, however. Each year the annual tree-lighting ceremony is held in Kennedy Mall with music and speakers. In addition, students deck the dorm halls for the Christmas decorating contest and hold holiday parties.

If a student ever is experiencing problems with his or her faith, or having a personal problem, there are clergy and other staff members at Villanova willing to listen. Sometimes they can be of more help to a student than a peer would be. Even if a student does not use these resources, it is comforting for him or her to know that they are available, if needed.

Villanova lacks some of the aspects of secular university. But the opposite is also true. At Villanova, Catholicism and college life are successfully blended together to create an atmosphere of community absent from other institutions.

Villanova may be more restrictive than other universities, but no one is restricted from leaving. We are all here by choice.

Dealing with communism

Sane options available to U.S.

By JOE BLACK and MAUREEN VAUGHAN

In an op-ed article in the Oct. 30 Villanovan, Lou Meshon, senior political science major and College Republican, posed that the United States should abandon the zero-zero option plan for the elimination of Intermediate Nuclear Forces (INF) in Europe, and instead should "... drive the Soviets into an arms race that they cannot win unless they further starve the already desperate population of their country." Apart from the moral questions raised by urging the United States to "starve" another nation, there are political flaws in what Meshon says.

First, reliance on nuclear weapons to defend Europe is tactically and strategically ludicrous. NATO commanders have, for years, stated as much. To paraphrase former NATO Commander General Sir John Hackett, from statements made on PBS' "War: A Commentary": Nuclear was is the ultimate obscenity, and anything which tends toward it makes me very nervous ... I do not think you can stop it, once it has started.

The NATO philosophy of "flexible response," using nuclear weapons to defend Europe, is flawed at a basic level, best expressed in the famous quote from the Vietnam War, "To save the village, we had to destroy it." NATO would be forced to destroy the very land it was trying to defend.

Looking at INF weapons as political bargaining chips, a view both sides have taken since the Soviet SS-20 and U.S. Pershing 2 missiles were introduced to the European theatre, shows that a zero-zero plan effectively nullifies any advantage either side could have.

If anything, the West would have a rough advantage in nuclear weapons, and a corresponding political advantage. The advantage would come from the British and French nuclear forces not included in the zero-zero plan. Although it is true that these forces are not attached to NATO, they are Western-oriented and represent a force that the Soviets must contend with politically and militarily.

There are also U.S. Navy ballistic-missile firing submarines, which are a considerable nuclear deterrent in themselves. There would, therefore, be a rough parity in nontheatre nuclear weapons in the wake of a U.S.-USSR zero-zero option agreement.

The argument that "superior" Soviet conventional forces pose a threat to Western Europe is a valid one, but to purely state this in terms of numbers, as Meshon does, is misleading. Meshon fails to take into account such things as Western technological superiority, better noncommissioned officer leadership at the company level, the greater subsidiary that exists in Western armies, the unreliability of the Warsaw Pact allies and NATO's basic mission as a defensive force.

Although it is obvious that the Soviets possess numerical superiority, the placing of nuclear weapons in Europe is not the answer to the inevitable collapse of NATO defenses under a massive Soviet assault. This doctrine realistically offers the NATO commander only two options: to surrender Europe or to destroy it — options being both politically, militarily and strategically unacceptable.

The only answer, then, is to strengthen NATO's conventional forces, with the understanding that the Western European members must make a greater commitment to their own defense, at the very least, matching the percentage of GNP that the United States spends on mutual defense.

With nuclear war ruled unacceptable as a solution to a European conflict, both from a sense of survival and from basic reason, the defense of Europe must still be provided for until the United States and the Soviet Union can negotiate a lasting agreement to remove all troops from the heart of Europe. Substantially strengthening NATO's conventional defenses is the best way to ensure Western European security at present, while lessening the very real danger of nuclear war and eliminating the ridiculous quandry the NATO commander is placed in.

Engaging in a new arms race with the Soviet Union at this point would be destablizing at best, and an invitation to nuclear holocaust at worst. Though the United States should not bend to communism, the United States and the USSR must recognize the huge responsibility that they share in ensuring the peace and survival of mankind. There are much saner ways of dealing with communism than inviting the Soviets to join in an orgy of mutual destruction.

Students urged to voice complaints

To the Editor:

To all students: Have you ever been a victim of one of the following problems?

—Your car is towed after your sticker has been stolen and you are told that you must purchase another parking sticker.

—You live in St. Monica's Hall and every morning you see the Security guard's car parked illegally in the fire lane — a place where a student would be ticketed after 10 minutes of parking.

—It is 3:30 a.m. and you have parked your car in the Main Lot. After studying in Tolentine late at night, you come to a ticketed car even after you paid $50 for a sticker.

—You have been confronted by rude office help when attempting to visit the Security office during lunch hours.

All of these and many other instances have occurred on this campus. They are actual accounts. Furthermore, over the past four years, these incidents involving Security have increased in variety and frequency. While some are more severe than others, everyone at one point during his or her four years at Villanova will have experienced some type of negative confrontation with V.U. Security.

It is time for Villanovans to voice their opinions and complaints on such campus issues. We need the support of fellow Villanovans. We are willing to spearhead this issue, but we need your help. We encourage you to contact us or write a letter to the Villanovan. Remember — nothing will change unless we all work together.

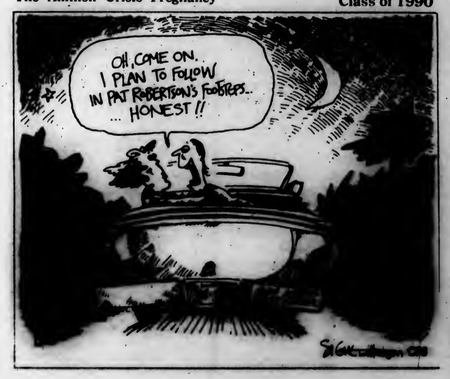
Do not censor ideas

To the Editor:



I believe that the authors of the Oct. 30 letter to the editor "Replace Abortion Ad," have forgotten the importance of an unbiased education. The alumnae authors suggest that the advertisement for the Amnion Crisis Pregnancy Center is inconsistent with Villanova's Catholic philosophy.

I had always been taught that the best education is one that is all-encompassing. Villanova is a Catholic campus, but does that mean that all non-Catholic ideas should be kept from the students?

One service of the center is informing students about abortion before they make a hasty decision. It is a place for pregnant women. The Amnion Crisis Pregnancy Center does not perform abortions, but offers guidance and aid to pregnant women in need, whether they are Catholic or non-Catholic. After all, we must not exclude the students attending Villanova who are not Catholic.

Villanova offers students an excellent education in peace and justice, along with teaching the Catholic tradition. This education will help students to make morally sound decisions on a wide variety of topics. We should be careful not to censor ideas that may be different from our own, and to provide both sides to every story. In this case, the Villanovan should continue to run the advertisement.

Be open to all viewpoints

To the Editor:

This letter is a response to the Oct. 30 letter "Adhere to Catholic Values," in which the author objected to the presence of the National Organization for Women (NOW), a group which supports abortion, on campus. She went on to write, "To my mind, they have absolutely no business recruiting on a Catholic campus — or is there any such thing anymore as a Catholic campus?"

Though this woman is concerned with upholding "Catholic values," more specifically official Church doctrine, she fails to recognize an essential point: Villanova is a university, not an instrument through which the beliefs and opinions of one interest group are professed.

The purpose of a university is to help stimulate and facilitate intellectual growth among its students. Furthermore, in order to achieve this new knowledge, all theories and ideas must be allowed to be freely expressed, even if they conflict with generally accepted beliefs.

Intellectual progression is often the result of controversy, and this has been illustrated throughout history on numerous occasions. Therefore, it is up to the student to analyze and speculate upon these theories and conclude his or her own personal truth from them.

Intellectual progression is often the result of controversy, and this has been illustrated throughout history on numerous occasions.

Though I personally do not agree with the pro-choice movement, this group, as well as students, have a right to expose and be exposed to their ideas. The author of the previous letter truly degrades the Villanova student body in that she feels that the administration must "guard against losing our values in the modern candy-shop, pick-and-choose style of morality."

Does she feel that we are not capable of maturely addressing the pro-choice movement, reflecting on it for ourselves and reaching an intelligent and morally self-respectable answer? Surely she must realize that religious belief cannot be forced upon a person. Indeed, a healthy faith is not afraid to approach controversial and opposite ideas.

The author of the previous letter feared that Catholic universities were losing their Catholic ideas and transforming into "secular-humanist environments." I feel this is not the case because, for modern Catholicism to thrive and progress, we must be open to all viewpoints of a specific issue and not attempt to force-feed beliefs into mature adults.

That mentality is archaic and destructive. Therefore, I find people such as this author subversive to the religious and academic freedom to which the Villanova community is entitled.

Def Leppard misrepresented in Villanovan concert review

To the Editor:

We are writing this letter in bitter response to last week's review of the Oct. 13 Def Leppard concert, which proclaimed that Def Leppard gave an uninspired performance and was "outrocked" by Tesla at the Spectrum. We consider this to be a thoroughly inaccurate depiction, and fear that any Villanova students reading that article may have walked away with the impression that Def Leppard's rocking days are over. Nothing could be further from the truth.

We want all Villanova students to read this letter and be notified that Def Leppard is alive and well, and rocking better than ever. To even suggest that Def Leppard was "mundane" leads us to believe that the writer of that article either was not at the same spectacle that we witnessed or was in a coma.

We were tingling with excitement when we first heard about Def Leppard's Spectrum stopover, and were treated to an electrifying, sizzling performance that had us standing, stomping, rocking and rolling for the duration. Def Leppard was overflowing with energy, and, for any true fan, it was an inspiring, memorable exhibit of true rock-and-roll. Lead singer and spokesman Joe Elliot even said, "Playing live seemed the only thing that's really worth it."

We wonder where the writer was when the four sections of the audience engaged in a decibel contest during the smash hit "Rock of Ages." Maybe the writer was getting a hot dog or in the restroom when the audience was treated to a spectacular remix of "Bringin' on the Heartbreak," the blockbuster from High n' Dry, which was mysteriously not mentioned in the article.

From the opener of "Stagefright" to the final encore of "Good Golly, Miss Molly," Def Leppard's thunderous presence was felt by those fans. We were hardly "disappointed," and we are certain we speak for the majority. Tesla merely whetted our appetites for the main course, and after Def Leppard's final encore, we walked away bloated and satisfied.

To maintain that the band has "slowed down" or was performing "out of duty or contract rather than because they like to play" is ridiculous. We were appalled when the writer stated that drummer Rick Allen "cannot take all of the blame for slowing the band down." As the band inexhaustibly cranked out one hit after another, we hardly believed them to be "slowing down."

If anything, Def Leppard has demonstrated remarkable durability and range, with Hysteria the latest indication of their extraordinary abilities. According to Elliot, "We just didn't want to make 'Son of Pyromania,' so we kept throwing out tracks until we finally came up with an album we could be proud of.

The tightly knit quintet has grown closer because of their misfortunes during the last four years between Pyromania and Hysteria. This closeness was clearly evident on the stage, and any hint at their "selling out" is an outrage.

The fact that the band has remained together through all of the rough times they experienced says a great deal about their character and justifies the fact that they do indeed love to play.

Allen, the source of strength and inspiration for Def Leppard, never even considered quitting after the auto accident in which he lost his left arm and broke his right arm which will never be the same. Although doctors predicted six months of rehabilitation, he was out of the hospital in three and one-half weeks, devising the electronically triggered drum kit he now plays. Allen himself says, "I have no patience for people who treat me any differently [than before the accident]."

Commenting on the success of Hysteria, which sold an astounding 2 million copies in the first two weeks following its release, Allen and bassist Rick Savage emphasized their eagerness to play Hysteria's songs live on their concert marathon. "We're very happy, very relieved and very thrilled, and can't wait to play live. Making records is boring."

Last week's article did not do Def Leppard justice, and we wanted to set the record straight. Said Elliot, "It was like we'd never been away." Well, Def Leppard, it is great to have you back.

Thanks to greeks

To the Editor:

This is an open letter to all greeks who hosted last week's Halloween party.

You made a four-year-old boy's Halloween a very special night. I took my grandson Christopher to your party, and he and I were entranced! The room was decorated beautifully and each table was too. The competition of the sororities and fraternities made each table a visual and edible delight.

The best part, though, was the spirit of fun and friendliness of the Villanova students, including the gals and guys who "helped" each child win at the games and earn a prize. Thank you all for a memorable night for a lot of kids and parents. It just proves what I have said all along — Villanova has the best students anywhere.

Judicial program spurs response

To the Editor:

The response to the Bicentennial Celebration Program has been so large that we have had to make some adjustments to the location of the events. The lecture by Justice Antonin Scalia will now be held in Appellate Court Rooms 239 and 30 of the Law School. For two weeks, we have been telling individuals who requested tickets to only the Scalia lecture that we could not guarantee tickets.

With this change, we will be able to accommodate a larger number of individuals than the Cinema, the original site, would have allowed. Unfortunately, the Law School rooms are the only alternative site we could obtain, and, even now, they have proven to be smaller than our current requests. We are sorry that some people who are now requesting tickets will be unable to get them.

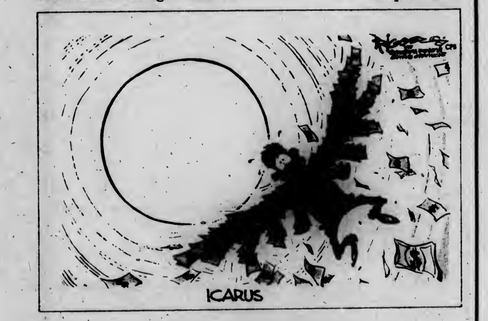
We knew when we started planning the program that a location problem might arise if we had a good response. There has been a greater response for both the lecture and the dinner than was ever anticipated. As a matter of fact, we just did not know when we got started what the response would be. After all, the program is for late on a Friday afternoon.

The banquet has also received a larger response than anticipated. Fortunately, the Villanova Room has a larger capacity than the original lecture site, so that all we have to do is see to it that all available space is effectively utilized.

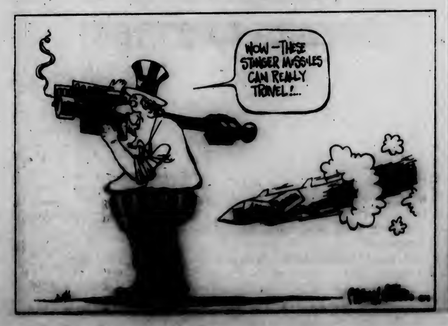
When we originally planned this program, Scalia had graciously agreed to present the bicentennial lecture and to make a few remarks at a banquet, though not to present a second lecture.

When Attorney General Edwin Meese III and T. Kenneth Cribb, assistant to the president of the United States for domestic affairs, agreed to present a banquet address and to serve as master of ceremonies, respectively, the program was completed beyond anything we ever imagined, making it possible for those paying for the dinner to also have some banquet cerebration along with the celebration.

The differentiated costs for the banquet reflect an effort on our part to make it possible for students to attend. The $15 for student tickets certainly does not even cover the costs of the dinner entree. Both those purchasing tickets at the normal fee and the student fee know a bargain when they see one. At the time that I write this, it was still possible to obtain tickets for the banquet, although by the time this is read, that may no longer be the case.



While we celebrate the bicentennial of the United States Constitution at Villanova University, we should celebrate it in such a successful manner. The response and cooperation has been outstanding from the very beginning, which makes an awful lot of hard work seem easy.



Our part in the program has been shared with James Gaston of the Intercollegiate Studies Institute, who has worked as hard as, or harder than I, in arranging this event. The Intercollegiate Studies Institute, of which I am a faculty associate and which just happens to have its national offices in Bryn Mawr, is cosponsoring this entire program with Villanova. Both Villanova and the Institute saw the wisdom of having this celebration.

I might point out that along the way we were able to obtain official United States Bicentennial Commission recognition of this event and the three bicentennial lectures presented by the political science department. It is because of this recognition that the "We The People" logo appears on the various notices announcing the event. We can be justly proud of this recognition.

I have found a marvelous spirit of cooperation from every area of the Villanova community in working through this program. The effort has been to make a program of which we all can be proud. Thanks to the help of many and to a great response, we think everyone will be pleased.

University alcohol policies compared

By R. MICHAEL BULLOTTA

How do Catholic universities deal with the issue of alcohol?

The two schools I chose for consideration are Villanova University and Georgetown University; both are Catholic universities roughly the same size.

While there are significant differences in many aspects of these two schools, there are also many similarities, enough, at least, to warrant a comparative look at how two responsible Catholic universities deal with the formidable issue of alcohol.

Villanova's alcohol policy needs little in-depth explaining. Most people are quite aware of the stance of the University — no person under the age of 21 is permitted to possess or consume alcohol. This rule is in compliance with the state laws of Pennsylvania.

Furthermore, consumption of alcohol by those of legal age is restricted, in an effort to prevent the possibility of underage students from illegally consuming alcohol. What this means, in practical terms, is that there are very few functions or parties on campus where alcohol is permitted.

The purpose of this article is not to argue the alcohol policy, and how it might adversely affect students' social lives, although strong arguments in this case could be made. The purpose, rather, is to examine how two Catholic universities approach the alcohol issue, and to determine whether or not their Catholic nature plays a role in their policy.

Gary Bonas, Villanova's assistant director of Student Activities, said that he believes that Villanova's alcohol policy would still be the same, even if we were not a Catholic institution.

Bonas stated, "The most important reason for Villanova's alcohol policy is the state law of Pennsylvania." He thinks that, although the mission statement of Villanova is important, even if it did not exist, underage drinking would still be against Villanova's policy because of the legal liabilities that underage drinking carries.

Asked if Villanova's current alcohol policy reflects the Catholic views on alcohol consumption, Bonas replied: "Yes, because our policy is in accord with the Catholic teachings about doing anything, including drinking alcohol, in an abusive manner."

Bonas acknowledged that allowing the tailgates to occur in their present fashion is clearly against the ideals and views of Villanova University. However, he explained that organized, school-sanctioned tailgating is a necessary evil.

Bonas feels that, if tailgating was not permitted and regulated, people would simply find their own place to tailgate, and would do it in a more hazardous manner.

We realize that alcohol must be put in its proper perspective. We stress that, while alcohol is not always evil, it is also not always necessary for good times.

Martha Swanson,
Assistant Director of Student Activities,
Georgetown University

Bonas and Villanova administrators favor giving structure and sanction to tailgating in order to minimize the detrimental effects of such an activity.

Martha Swanson, Georgetown's assistant director of Student Activities, described an alcohol policy very different from the one that we are accustomed to at Villanova. Swanson said that the campus at Georgetown is anything but a "dry" one.

It is important to note that Washington, D.C., where Georgetown is located, has just recently raised their drinking age from 18 to 21. However, there is a grandfather clause in effect that permits those who turned 18 on or before September 30, 1986, to continue to drink legally.

This low drinking age means that, currently, the only students under age are freshmen and about half of the sophomore class. It is no wonder that Georgetown is not a dry campus.

There are no Greek organizations at Georgetown. Instead, there are many parties and functions held in the dormitories and apartments on Georgetown's campus, where alcohol is permitted. These include the school-sponsored Homecoming and Halloween dances.

There are certain rules which the University implements to keep the drinking under control. All parties where there will be 40 or more attending, or the presence of a keg of beer, must be registered with the resident's hall office 72 hours in advance. This allows the Georgetown University Security to have a list of all the parties so that they can control them. Swanson indicated that it is a rare occurrence for a party to be broken-up by security.

Additionally, all school dances

Duchamp's unusual art discussed

By KRIS RYAN

There is some truth to the idiom, "One man's trash is another man's treasure." A prime example of this was presented on Oct. 28 when Villanova, in collaboration with the Philadelphia Museum of Art, helped to commemorate the 100th birthday of Marcel Duchamp.

Duchamp was an early 20th century artist who collected ordinary, everyday objects and displayed them as art. He wanted to communicate that art was not just canvas and paint, but something that should appeal to the mind as well as the eye.

Duchamp's most famous work of this kind, "Fountain" consisted of a mounted porcelain urinal. Other works incorporated kitchen stools, bicycle wheels and bottle-drying racks.

Duchamp was not always the avant-garde artist that he is celebrated as. His career as an artist began in his teens when he practiced painting in the realistic style.

He eventually employed impressionist, cubist and futurist techniques. The most famous works during these periods were "Nude Descending a Staircase," "The Passage of the Virgin to the Bride" and "Large Glass."

Duchamp's work was not widely accepted by the American public. In fact, America viewed his work in a similar manner to how they viewed him--bizarre and ridiculous.

Duchamp was different. He used to disguise himself as his alter ego, Rose Selavy, which means in French "the only thing in life is sex", and attended his own exhibits to discover the public's reaction to his art.

Duchamp signed his "Fountain" using a different name, R. Mutt, which, when pronounced with a German accent, means courage, implying that only he had the nerve to display a urinal as a work of art. He claimed that under a new title and point of reference, he created a new way of looking at it.

Duchamp's art reflects the message that was also the basis for the establishment of a group called DADA. DADA was a coalition of writers, intellectuals and artists who joined together in February 1916 in Zurich, Switzerland. Their purpose was to eliminate the seriousness in their art.

The DADA believed that World War I, taking place at that time, was caused by the virtues, such as pride, character and duty, that they had been taught to respect.

They felt what was needed in the world was a humorous type of disposable art, anti-art if you will, that mirrored the unusual and unpredictable in life. Thus they formed DADA, which comes from the German word meaning "baby-talk."

DADA's aim was to poke fun at the art world. As a result, their bizarre works were often highly political. They attacked anything connected with the bourgeois, or that contained sexual or religious connotations, using Freudian concepts or that were simply ambiguous and contemplative.

This can be seen in the outrageous quotations that became the Long before there can be any lights, camera or action to bring Villanova's stage to life, it is necessary to construct the appropriate scene.

Costuming is an integral part of the scene creation. The creative costumes are put together right here on the Villanova campus. The costume shop can be found in Room 205 Vasey Hall. There, among costume sketches, fabric, wigs, hats and sewing machine, all of the necessary costumes for upcoming productions are prepared.

Corinne Mendell is the costume shop's manager. While it is her first year with that job, she is no newcomer to Villanova's backstage. This is her ninth year working in the shop in some capacity. She did both her undergraduate and graduate work here.

Mendell calls Villanova's productions "completely in-house" in that everything needed for the show is built here. Starting four to six weeks prior to the show's opening, Mendell and her staff of three graduate students and one undergraduate student begin preparing the costumes.

These costumes are made to the exact specifications of the directors. Mendell adds that, while some of the costumes must be made especially for a certain show, many of the designs, with necessary changes and alterations, are re-used in many productions.

Ten days before the play opens, "tech week" begins. The staff of the costume shop, during this time, works, at a minimum, 12 hours a day. Last-minute alterations are made during this time.

Making the costumes is only part of the job. Once the play opens, the costume shop takes responsibility for the daily laundering of the costumes and the necessary repairs. The person mainly in charge of this is Ellen Teegarden, a Villanova junior.

After a production finishes, there is very little time before the next production. Therefore, the costuming for the next production begins immediately. The work in the shop is non-stop.

Currently, the shop is preparing for the show, "School for Scandal." The costumes needed for this are very elaborate, 19th-century designs.

The Villanova Theatre costume shop is a center for creative talent, that while very essential, many times goes unnoticed. For any production to be successful, all contributing factors must do their best possible work — and there is no doubt that the Villanova Theatre costume shop does their share.

Fraternity provides for needy

By SAMANTHA FORLINI

That time of year is approaching again. The hustle and bustle of the oncoming holidays are already upon us. Yet, despite the joy that the season brings, it unfortunately does not affect everyone. For the homeless, the holiday season is no different from any other time of year.

The Sigma Nu fraternity at Villanova is making great strides to enhance t'.e happiness of the homeless during this season. They will be holding their first "Can-Do" food drive on Nov. 7, in the main parking lot, across from the stadium. The collection will be held from 11 a.m. until 2 p.m., to coincide with other Homecoming events. Donations of canned food or money may be made at this time.

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, will serve as honorary chairman of the event. All donations contributed to the food drive will be given to the Archdiocese of Philadelphia, which will distribute them to the homeless. Most of the contributions will be given to the homeless on Thanksgiving and Christmas, although some will be distributed sooner in especially needy cases.

Corporate donations have reached 200 cases, and Sigma Nu hopes to collect 400 cases through the event. Corporate sponsors include John T. Cope & Sons, who have already donated 300 containers of soup (a total of 1,200 pounds of soup), Seneca Mushrooms and Hatfield Packing. Many other companies are in the process of responding to the drive, ensuring that the hopes of the fraternity are not far out of reach.

Sigma Nu fraternity at Villanova boasts many brothers who are looking forward to the success of this "Can-Do" food drive. In an attempt to publicize the Drive, the Channel 17 program, "Reel to Real," will film the event, and use it as material for a six-minute segment on a future show. KYW-TV's 6 p.m. and 11 p.m. news will also be broadcasting the event's progression.

As members of the Villanova community, we are not usually confronted with the plight of the homeless. However, a short walk down almost any street in Center City Philadelphia, or in a city near your hometown, can bring this problem quickly to your attention. So, as you think about all you have to give thanks for this holiday season, stop and think about the homeless. Your donation tomorrow really could make a difference to someone, and it would be a very special way of giving thanks.

'Nova Dance Ensemble steps out

By CINDY CLEMENT

The Villanova Dance Ensemble strutted their stuff in Kennedy Mall last spring.

This fall marks the seventh year of the Villanova Dance Ensemble's existence and it promises to be their busiest and brightest yet.

Under the new direction of Lois Quay, the ensemble has increased its corps to an all-time high of 31 members, including 11 new members. Rehearsal time has been increased and more performances have been scheduled.

After auditions on Sept. 6, the ensemble began rehearsing a variety of numbers for a Parent's Weekend exhibition, a performance of Super Sunday in Philadelphia, an appearance at Special Olympics and participation in the Allentown Regional Dance Festival. Most importantly, the group will be presenting a Student Choreography Showcase at 8 p.m. on Nov. 21 in the Villanova Room.

The showcase will give the members the opportunity to display their own choreography, costuming and staging to the Villanova community.

The creation of the Showcase is an example of the Dance Ensemble's enthusiasm to demonstrate their growth as a group since their inception. According to Quay, "We have started to find our identity and are going for it."

The ensemble's impact will not be contained to this campus, however. Groundwork is being laid for a tour of Europe. A 13-day trip beginning the weekend of May 22 will take the dancers to perform in England and Scotland.

The most unique facet of this tour will be the combination of efforts of the Villanova Jazz Band with the Dance Ensemble. The jazz band, led by Mario Puzo, will accompany the ensemble and provide the music for some of their numbers.

Together, the group will give five or six performances in London, York, and Ayre as well as in Bath for The Bath Music Festival.

The itinerary, tentative at this time, may also include shows in Edinborough and Glasgow, Scotland. In Quay's words, the ensemble intends "to give a program that will show the high caliber of American-style dance."

American-style dance incorporates a wide variety of ballet, modern dance, tap and musical comedy. Jazz, from Duke Ellington to jazz fusion, will be in the spotlight however.

The trip will be funded by the participating students. M.T. Leitner, a member of the ensemble, is in charge of fundraising for the tour. The group hopes to raise $30,000 to help defray expenses.

The Dance Ensemble, which rehearses from 7:30-10 p.m., two nights a week in St. Mary's auditorium, is led by four officers: Nancy Hensler, ensemble president; Mary Deluzio, vice president; Meg O'Connell, treasurer; and Laura Adornetto, secretary.

Duchamp exhibit

trademark of the group: "The aim of DADA is the destruction of DADA;" "The true DADA are against DADA;" and "DADA is definitely against the future."

The Oct. 28 presentation consisted of a series of skits and slides as well as two films, "Entr' Acte" and "Un Chien Andalou," and was organized by various professors of modernism here at Villanova. These "provocateurs" were John Green, English; John Carvalho, philosophy; Joan Lynch, communication arts; Mark Sullivan, art history; and Charles Grimes, English.

The provocateurs employed the aid of various students to help relate what DADA and Duchamp represented. The extravaganza was, like the art, very bizarre, unusual and confusing for beginners like myself who were introduced for the first time to the DADA concept.

However, it did fulfill its purpose of communicating that art is more than paintings and pictures, and could also be found in everyday life. It is not so new or far-fetched an idea as it appears to be. We, ourselves, are subject to this "Dadian" interpretation almost everyday in life.

Pop-artists such as Andy Warhol, the Marx Brothers, and even cartoonists received their materials and ideas by poking fun at the world in the same manner as DADA.

Duchamp and DADA had a valid concept when they invented the idea of impromptu art. Their outlandish mode of communication proved effective as they succeeded in expanding the view of art to incorporate the beauty of the outside world.

DADA's idea was a fresh and innovative one, but when does the genius of pop-art become a cop-out? Which do you consider the greater work of art, DaVinci's "Mona Lisa" or Duchamp's "Fountain?" I suppose it's a matter of perspective, since one man's treasure is another man's trash.

at which alcohol is served have a system to prevent underage drinking. Hospital security bracelets are issued upon admission. The bracelets are in two different colors, indicating whether or not a person is of legal age to drink. It should also be noted that the freshmen's dormitories are "dry" and separated from the upperclassmen dormitories.

When asked whether or not Georgetown's alcohol policy would be different if it were not a Catholic institution, Swanson simply said: "No, not in the least."

When asked if the University's policy toward alcohol reflects the Catholic viewpoint, Swanson replied: "Yes, because the Catholic view is not very different from the average responsible person's view. We realize that alcohol must be put in its proper perspective. We stress that while alcohol is not always evil, it is also not always necessary for good times."

Swanson further indicated that Georgetown's policy finds alcohol consumption by students acceptable if done in a responsible manner. Furthermore, alcohol consumption of this kind is believed to be in keeping with the Catholic Church's teaching on the subject.

It is true that the two schools are operating in different areas of the country and under different state laws. Nonetheless, it is still striking that two universities with such different alcohol policies both claim to be reflecting the Catholic viewpoint.

Leadership society formed

By ELKE JONES

Last spring, advisors and faculty nominated approximately 30 student leaders from campus organizations for membership in the Villanova Leadership Society (V.L.S.). These students were nominated on the basis of their scholastic and leadership achievements at Villanova. The V.L.S. is a national honor society that will later come under the name Omicron Delta Kappa (ODK).

According to Mike DeRosa, a Villanova graduate student who was inspired to have a chapter of the society on campus, membership in the V.L.S. is not a title such as Who's Who. On the contrary, he feels that the honor society will provide service, knowledge and leadership training to others from various campus organizations — organizations that range from athletics to the performing arts.

Equivalent to the National Honor Society in high school, ODK plans to have an active role on campus with alumni, faculty and staff as well as undergraduates as members.

Through V.L.S., Villanova hopes to colonize ODK by establishing a preliminary petition including three sections (institutional data, student services and student organizations) as well as a visit from a national officer of ODK. The officer will assess the status of V.L.S. through meetings with the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice-president for Student Life, and other prominent members of the Villanova community.

After this, a final petition will be drawn up, and letters of recommendation and colonization will be added next semester.

An altered Mac returns to Spectrum

By KEVIN HECHT

Fleetwood Mac, a band written off as dead after the departure of singer/lead guitarist Lindsey Buckingham, returned to the Spectrum Oct. 28 to prove the group is still very much alive, and better than ever.

Although the band has undergone many changes throughout its 20-year history, Buckingham was thought by many to be a band member that the group could not go on without. In his place, the band added two musicians, Billy Burnette and Rick Vito. Fortunately, the guitarists adapted to the band magnificently and were immediately accepted by the near capacity crowd.

After an overly loud and unimpressive opening set by the Cruzados, Fleetwood Mac took the stage and exploded into its opening set with "Say That You Love Me" featuring Christine McVie in good voice. The band then continued with songs from the 1977 smash album, Rumours, including "Dreams" and "Go Your Own Way."

The songs were performed well and came across nicely in a live setting, but at times the music was too loud and distorted through the sound system. Leading the band at the front of the stage was Stevie Nicks, who was also in great voice, and who went through many impressive costume changes during the show.

The highlight of the evening came from Nicks who was accompanied by Christine McVie on piano as she sang a touching rendition of her solo effort, "Has Anyone Ever Written Anything For You." Nicks later sang another solo song, "Stand Back."

Vito and Burnette handled Buckingham's compositions very well during the concert. The addition of the extra guitar also gave the band's sound an extra edge that was not before present.

The impressive performance of the new Fleetwood Mac lineup shows that the band that has weathered many changes in its career has successfully weathered this one as well.

Perhaps the only lowlight of the evening was an inane drum solo by Mick Fleetwood, who took the stage by himself in the middle of the show adorned with electric drums hidden under his vest. Fleetwood's act did nothing but bore the audience, which responded with merely polite applause when he finished.

Among the new songs performed from their latest release, Tango In The Night, were "Seven Wonders," "Big Love," "Isn't Midnight" and "Little Lies." The crowd responded to "Little Lies" and Nicks' passionate rendition of "Seven Wonders."

It is no surprise that the band picked Vito and Burnette as replacements for Buckingham. Burnette toured with Mick Fleetwood's side group, The Zoo, and he also co-wrote material on Christine McVie's self-titled solo album. Vito, an artist who has played with Jackson Browne's band, recorded music in the mid '70s with the group's bassist, John McVie.

After finishing the concert, the band responded to the crowd's applause with several more songs, including the popular "Gypsy."

The impressive performance of the new Fleetwood Mac lineup shows that the band that has weathered many changes in its career has successfully weathered this one as well. The popular group should be around for quite a while, composing original compositions based on their ever changing style and look.

Entertainment at Villanova: Is it restricted?

By KATHRYN QUIGLEY

Villanova is a Catholic university. This may seem like an obvious statement, but the fact that V.U. is Catholic permeates every aspect of campus life, even entertainment.

This is not to say we have May processions for fun, or play Catholic trivia, instead of Trivial Pursuit. Also, while Mass is a good place to "scope," most students go for religious reasons.

However, because Villanova is a Catholic school, we follow a mission statement, which sets forth the objectives of the University. It reads in part: " ... this community seeks to reflect the spirit of St. Augustine by the cultivation of knowledge, by respect for individual differences and by adherence to the principles that mutual love and respect should animate every aspect of campus life."

The Villanova Union plans the social activities on campus. They are the people who bring such performers as Robin Williams to campus and movies to the Connelly Center Cinema.

Because Villanova has a religious affiliation, does this mean there is a list of movies that can not be shown? Pete Burke, visual arts coordinator of the Union said this is not the case.

Beth Naughton, president of the Villanova Union said that, "We try to look at the big sellers and try to bring them here. We don't worry about 'Can we show this here because we are Catholic?' "

Burke added that the Union is thinking of showing the movie "Fatal Attraction," which contains nudity and violence, next semester.

Garry Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities, said that there are no printed guidelines. He said that Student Activities basically tries to follow the mission statement.

"There is no real censorship; we just try to use good judgement," commented Bonas.

He said that certain occassions on campus, not just the ones planned by the Villanova Union, can get out of hand. He cited Lip-It and the Greek god and goddess contests as examples. "If that happens, we then ask the group to review it and possibly change it," said Bonas.

The University of Pennsylvania is a non-religious school. As such, their entertainment opportunities are a little different.

The organization on campus that is similar to the Villanova Union, is the Penn Union Council (P.U.C.) Every year, the P.U.C. schedules an X-rated movie on campus. This year's film is "Debbie Does Dallas."

Grace Lao, movies chairman of the P.U.C., said the movie is shown because it doubles the usual attendance. She said they try to schedule movies that people want to see, and that people want to see this film.

In keeping with their goal to show a diverse program, the P.U.C. is showing "Triumph of Will," a film that is official Nazi propaganda. Lao clarified that the P.U.C. is not endorsing the film; she said that they are showing it because it is an acclaimed piece of cinematography.

Villanova is a Catholic University. We differ from other non-religious colleges in terms of our outlook. X-rated movies will probably never be shown on this campus. However, the fact that we follow a mission statement that says that " ... respect should animate every aspect of campus life," is not necessarily negative, is it?

Belinda Carlisle's album is heaven on earth

Heaven on Earth
Belinda Carlisle

Former Go-Go's vocalist, Belinda Carlisle, offers music fans a sentimental and harmonious collection of songs on her latest album. Heaven on Earth is a showcase for Carlisle's charming and gentle singing ability. Love is the dominant subject of the album, and Heaven on Earth reveals the happy and cheerful personality of Carlisle.

Carlisle has good reason to be happy, as she is more popular than ever. Recently, she appeared on the David Letterman show where she was repeatedly told how great she looked. The very next night, while on Live At Five, a New York news program, she was pulled back up to the Late Night studio. Apparently, Letterman wanted to tell her that she looked great a few more times.

Carlisle's new video for "Heaven is a Place on Earth" has been receiving heavy airplay on MTV and is currently in the top 20.

Carlisle also has an up-coming appearance on MTV as a guest V.J. on Nov. 24 at 10 p.m.

Her latest single looks like it should do well on the charts, and the album seems to be headed for financial success.

Opening the first side is the album's best song, "Heaven is a Place on Earth." The music is lively and upbeat, but it is Carlisle's singing that makes the song. Carlisle possesses a soft, melodic voice that you would love to be sung to sleep by. This song was released as the album's first single and is doing well on the charts. If you have seen the video, you already know that Carlisle really does look just as great as she sings.

Cryer is still a teenager in new movie 'Hiding Out'

By KATHRYN QUIGLEY

"Hiding Out"
directed by Bob Giraldi
De Laurentiis
Entertainment Group
••½

Jon Cryer portrays a 27-year-old stockbroker in "Hiding Out," a movie directed by Bob Giraldi that opens today. However, for most of the movie, Cryer plays a 17-year-old high school senior. Will he ever get the chance to play an adult in a movie?

Cryer has had a string of roles in movies ("No Small Affair" and "Pretty In Pink") in which he portrays sardonic, love-struck teenagers. In "Hiding Out," he is Andrew Morenski, a stockbroker, for the first part of the movie.

Morenski becomes involved in a mob bonds scandal. Hitmen are after him, so he is taken into protective custody by the FBI. However, the FBI wants to put him into the Witness Relocation Program. This could entail the alteration of his facial features, which does not thrill Morenski.

While in custody, mob hitmen kill one of the FBI agents assigned to protect him, and Morenski is forced to flee. He escapes to his Aunt Lucy's house (Lucy is played by actress Gretchen Cryer, who is John Cryer's mother.) En route, he sheds his expensive threads and picks up some pseudo-punk clothing. He also streaks his hair blond.

Andrew Morenski changes his name as well, to Maxwell Hauser (inspired by the coffee), and enrolls as a student in high school.

This is where the movie started to bother me. If I were hiding out from the mob, with the threat of death continually hanging over my head, I would not choose to spend my time going to high school.

However, high school is the tool screenwriter-producer Jeff Rothberg used to have Morenski/Hauser re-examine his values.

As a stockbroker, Morenski had a monetarily comfortable, but empty life. As a high school senior, he makes friends and falls in love with 17-year-old Ryan (Annabeth Gish).

I think screenwriter Rotheberg's theme behind "Hiding Out" is that the problems of teenagers are as important to them as are the problems of adults. That may be true, but it makes this movie slightly schizoid.

Half of the scenes involve Morenski being chased by the mob and the other half consist of his cousin Patrick's (Keith Coogan) pursuit of girls and a learner's permit.

While "Hiding Out" does an adequate job depicting high school life, John Hughes' movies (including "The Breakfast Club") with their studied adolescent angst, were much better.

There are a few good scenes in "Hiding Out" that make it worth the price of a ticket. Morenski/Hauser's scenes with Ryan are especially good. He is torn between his attraction for Ryan, their age difference and the fact that he could have his head blown off at any minute.

There is also a slightly implausible subplot about a group of rappers who want Morenski/Hauser to run for senior class president. The rappers are quite good — but why they are in this movie is a mystery to me.

"Hiding Out" is an okay movie. Cryer is a great actor, but he is hampered by a script that does not always gel and can be implausible.

One of the best parts of the movie is the music. Most of the songs are from artists from the Virgin Record Company who are not that well known, although Boy George is one of the artists. He sings "Live My Life."

Pretty Poison, one of Philadelphia's newest bands, sings their latest hit, "Catch Me I'm Falling." The video of this song was directed by Giraldi.

Now Commodore 128 users can have the full power of the Graphic Environment Operating System (GEOS) from their computers in GEOS128. Combining a MAC-like system with the capabilities of the Commodore 128, GEOS128 offers a complete utility and creativity package ideal for advanced users and beginners alike. Icon-based and menu-driven. GEOS128 contains a word processor, graphics workshop, organizer and file manager.

The word processor, geoWrite, is a "what-you-see-is-what-you-get" word processor. This means that the text will be printed exactly as you see it on the screen. You can choose from six fonts with geoWrite and combine these fonts with a variety of point sizes and styles. Basically, geoWrite is one of the better word processors for the Commodore 128.

The graphics program, geoPaint, is a full-color utility that uses 80 column resolution, 14 graphic tools, 32 brush shapes and 32 painting patterns. You can cut and paste pictures, copy them and zoom into a picture to draw pictures as detailed as you would like.

These two programs, geoWrite and geoPaint, are the main parts of GEOS128. Still, there are so many other options to use that I can hardly mention them. Pictures can be inserted into text and vice versa, files can be sorted, and support is included for over 70 printers, to name a few.

REBEL CHARGE AT CHICKAMAUGA •••• SSI C64/128, AP, AT IBM

With the release of Rebel Charge at Chickamauga, SSI has produced yet another excellent war game for the computer user. Reproducing the geography and feel of the Battle of Chickamauga, this game pits blue against gray once again. Chickamauga pits two players against one another, one as Major General William Rosecrans of The Federal Army of the Cumberland and the other as General Braxton Bragg of the Army of Tennessee. Both players commend all forces that the actual generals did.

Chickamauga takes place on a 64 by 54 square-grid map. A unique part of the map is the fact that you can zoom in or out to see either the tactical version of the map or the strategical version. The strategic map shows a larger part of the complete Chickamauga Creek area. The tactical map is a close-up of a section of the strategic map.

The historical accuracy achieved in Chickamauga is very good. The game simulates very well the inability to see in the woods surrounding Chickamauga Creek. This cat-and-mouse feel of the original battle is therefore preserved.

Chickamauga is really three games in one. The basic game is for anyone who wants to play the game immediately, without complex commands. The intermediate and advanced games are for those war game aficionados who need a strong challenge. In any case, by playing the scenarios, you can reproduce history or change it entirely. The power is in the game to do both.

Other features of Chickamauga that make it attractive to potential users are the command card/map that comes with each game and the all-inclusive manual. The map on the command card depicts the entire area in which the game takes place.

The manual has a complete description of the historical conflict and a set of maps of the region that show how that battle took place. These features just add to the reason for getting Rebel Charge in Chickamauga.

Street Sports is the new series of games from Epyx. Street Sports Baseball is the first in the series and an excellent addition to any sports gamer's collection. Bringing together all of the elements that made playing baseball in the street enjoyable with Epyx's unique graphics and packaging, Street Sports Baseball is a welcome release in the market..

As I remember in playing baseball in the street when I was a kid, finding the right things to use as bases was always a problem. Street Sports Baseball has an old tire and a tree stump as a couple of the bases and turns a backyard into a baseball field. The graphics in which the game is played are a lot like your best friend's yard back when you were kids.

Atmosphere is not the only thing that makes Street Sports Baseball unique. The game is easy to play and a challenge because of the setting. Do not expect a game made just for kids, because Street Sports Baseball is easy to learn, but tough to master.

Knowing when to slide and when to take your time comes into play in the strategy part of the game. You should read the profiles of the players on the disk. These profiles indicate which kids are more suited for a particular skill. With names such as Bojo, Butch and Magic, you cannot resist the pure entertainment value of Street Sports Baseball. It is fun to play and a great way to escape the world for a few minutes and return to your childhood.

AMNESIA •••• ELECTRONIC ARTS C64/128, IBM, AP

Amnesia is the first computerized novel, according to Electronic Arts. I agree with this classification because in playing Amnesia, all of the elements of a novel unfolded before my eyes. The game is a text adventure written by Thomas M. Disch that places the player in the heart of Manhattan, completely devoid of all knowledge of himself.

When the game opens, you are in a hotel room with no money and no clothes, and you must find out who you are soon, because a strange woman wants to marry you, a strange man wants to kill you and the state of Texas wants you for murder. To avoid all of these potentially harmful people, you had better find out who you are very quickly.

Amnesia offers many features that initially attracted me to the game. The first is the number of disks it takes — only four disk sides, two disks. I would expect more from such a game, but was surprised. Since the game takes place in Manhattan, you need to know how to get around. A complete street and subway map comes with Amnesia and the game itself covers 4,000 separate locations in New York, including 650 streets.

Unique also to Amnesia is the recognition of many words, an internal clock that brings the muggers out at night, a novel-length manuscript and a scoring system that awards points for character development, survival and solving the mystery. In any case, Amnesia will allow you to forget your life for a while as you try to discover the secret of someone else's.

ROAD TO MOSCOW ••• GAME DESIGNERS' WORKSHOP/ELECTRONIC ARTS C64/128, AP

Road to Moscow is yet another entry in the collection of games that detail the war that took place far in the East between the Germans and Russians in World War II. The difference with this game lies in the way it is presented. Road to Moscow offers many options to the player so that the game does not become boring or tedious.

Road to Moscow covers the complete War in Russia between 1941 and 1945 by including five diffeerent scenarios/games on the disk. This option alone lets you play through the entire war. Because of the amount of time that the war took, there are many different kinds of units and armies contained on the disk for various challenges.

The manuals that come with Road to Moscow detail the history of the entire war and explain how to play the game. The graphics are simplistic and only serve as a means of playing the game. Road to Moscow is easy to play and offers all of the things that both amateur and professional war gamers like to see in a game.

'Broadway Bound' comes to the Forrest Theater

PLAYBILL

FORREST THEATRE

By BARBIE CHAREST

"Broadway Bound," the third play in Neil Simon's "Eugene" trilogy that also includes "Brighton Beach Memoirs" and "Biloxi Blues," details the life of Neil Simon's Jewish family who lived in Brighton Beach, NY, in the late 1940s.

Carole Shelley, who won a Tony Award for Best Actress for her performance in "The Elephant Man," did a superb job in her role as Kate, the dedicated mother and disheartened wife.

Salem Ludwig played Ben, Kate's father. he cannot hear too well, cannot see to well, cannot remember too well, wets his bed, falls asleep a lot, is a little grumpy and has got to be the second cutest grandfather I have ever had the pleasure of knowing, with mine, of course, being No. 1. I loved Ben. Can I adopt him?

Stephen Mailer was superior as Kate's second son Eugene, an aspiring comedy writer. He often spoke directly to the audience and brought to our attention the funny little things about his family. In addition to being funny, his performance was also heartwarming when he cheered up his unhappy mother and even got her to dance with him.

Other cast members included Jack, the father and unloyal husband, played by David Margulies; Stanley, Eugene's hyper older brother and writing partner — a real go-getter (played by Nathan Lane); and Blanche, Kate's rich sister, (played by Bernice Massi).

All in all, the performances by the actors were quite good. However, I cannot say the same thing about the play itself. Categorizing "Broadway Bound" as a comedy is wrong. Sure, there were some funny parts, but others were lacking or slow. At other times, the play was a trifle too dramatic for a comedy. Expecting a comedy, I was a little disappointed.

Now, let us discuss the title, "Broadway Bound." Stanley may have mentioned Hollywood two, maybe three times, but Broadway was never mentioned. Certainly, his brother Eugene and he wanted to be comedy writers/playwrights, but the play's emphasis was not on going to Broadway, or even to Hollywood for that matter.

Like every play about family, it depicted the funny times and the sad times, the sweet times and the bitter times, their hopes and dreams and their triumphs and disappointments. Stanley and Eugene may have been "Broadway Bound," but the play had little to do with that.

Oh yes, I should mention the scenery. When the curtain opened at the beginning of the play, I turned to my associate and said, "Wow, I have to give credit to the scenery director." David Mitchell, who also designed the sets for "Brighton Beach Memoirs" and "Biloxi Blues," was recruited again for this third play. He has received Tony Awards for "Annie" and "Barnum," among other honors.

For "Broadway Bound," the setting was in the family's home. The house was like a dollhouse with the front wall removed, opening the interior of the two-story dwelling to the audience. It was truly grand.

Douglas is the object of a fatal attraction

By MEGAN GUIDERA

"Fatal Attraction"
directed by Adrian Lyne
Paramount Pictures

Have you ever felt the rage of rejection? Do you dislike bunnies? Do you enjoy being thrilled to the edge of your seat; and, do you receive pleasure out of wild elevator rides? If you answered yes to any of the above questions, you are sure to get a thrill out of the chillingly successful film, "Fatal Attraction."

This masterpiece of mystery grossed $45.4 million in its first three weeks and is well on its way to the top.

"Fatal Attraction" casts the prominent Michael Douglas and Glenn Close as professional executives whose adulterous weekend tryst turns into an intense one-sided obsession.

For Close, "Fatal Attraction" is a switch from her typically innocent characterizations. Close is best known for her roles in "The World According to Garp," "The Big Chill" and "Jagged Edge."

In "Garp," Close played the comic role of Garp's nutty mother. In "The Big Chill," Close portrayed the warm host to old college friends gathering for a funeral. "Jagged Edge" cast Close as a lawyer who fell in love with her murderous client.

Although she was excellent in her previous films, Close transcends her past superiority by doing an outstanding job depicting the passionate Alex in "Fatal Attraction."

Douglas, best known for his previous film "Jewel of the Nile," did a top-notch job portraying the happy, yet unsatisfied, husband who risks his life and family for his libido.

This, you say, is all very nice and fine, but what is it about "Fatal Attraction" that causes theaters to sell out right and left, entire audiences to scream in fear and men to vow eternal faithfulness to their wives? It is called reality. "Fatal Attraction" hits home and it hits hard.

Not many people can identify with Hollywood's recent thriller characters Freddy Krueger and Jason Voorhees, but many women can identify to an extent with Alex. Everyone has felt the pain of rejection and the anger of unrequited love. Thus, many of Alex's emotions stir identical feelings in the audience, scaring viewers into reality, and making "Fatal Attraction" not just a horror in the theater, but an eye-opener in the real world.

The plot of "Fatal Attraction" is uncomplicated and simple to follow. The married Douglas and the single and sexy Close have a wild weekend of unconditional sex. When Douglas' wife returns home from her weekend trip, he ends the affair, but Close tries continually to rekindle the dead flame.

"Fatal Attraction" also hits a national nerve; that of safe sex. For the past few years campaigns have been waged to deter unfamiliar and promiscuous sex to minimize the spread of AIDS and assorted venereal disease.

"Fatal Attraction's" message is that safe sex does not just mean using a condom. It is knowing the past and present of the individual before physical involvement transpires.

People magazine recently cited several examples of true-to-life fatal attractions in which jealous ex-lovers damaged the lives of their previous loves.

All in all, "Fatal Attraction" is an incredible thriller that is both exciting and frightening to watch. Close and Douglas were dynamic as they enacted a film with a highly important message.

White Lion displays different brand of metal

By ALLEN AMBROSINO

In their latest album, Price, White Lion displays a different brand of heavy metal music that they term "Rock N' Roar." Their music is very mellow at times and it never becomes too loud to handle. Also, the lyrics they sing are not obnoxious and offensive like some other popular heavy metal bands.

In contrast, White Lion sings about the beauty of love and the part that today's youth will play in America's future. The group has been together for four and one-half years, and are finally beginning to make a name for themselves.

Vocalist Mike Tramp begins the album by singing "Hunger." It is a very upbeat song about a man who would do anything to get the woman he loves. During the song, he says "when your love is mine, I'll be feeling fine."

"Lonely Nights" is about a young girl who was in love with a boy back home until he broke her heart. She felt that she was all alone and ran away from her old life to try and find something better. However, the girl finds that life in New York City is very difficult and that it is hard to find a friend. Because of her loneliness, she becomes a prostitute on 42nd Street to support herself and to look for someone new to love. During the song, White Lion switches from a fast pace to a slower one effectively. The guitarist, Vito Bratta, contributes to the song with some incredible guitar licks.

The next song, "Don't Give Up," is a much happier song that urges everyone to fight through their problems and succeed. It is a very spirited song that is sung enthusiastically by Tramp. Everyone in the band combines in the chorus of "Don't Give Up," and this helps make the song.

"Sweet Little Loving" and "Lady of the Valley" are both mediocre songs that are carried by the vocals of Tramp and the guitar playing of Bratta. The latter of the two is the longest song on the album by well over two minutes, and this takes away from its quality. However, at times it is a very touching song that will bring out the sentimental feelings in

Love and Rockets release Earth Sun Moon

By ANDREW MATHIS

Earth Sun Moon is the latest release from Great Britain's Love and Rockets, one of the best, but still unfortunately unknown, underground bands.

The band consists of guitarist and vocalist Daniel Ash, bassist David J, and percussionist Kevin Haskins, all of whom played between 1979 and 1983 in the British underground band Bauhaus along with a singer named Peter Murphy.

Murphy and David J left the band to pursue solo careers, after which Haskins and Ash formed the short-lived Tones on Tail. In 1985, David J rejoined his former band mates to form Love and Rockets.

Earth Sun Moon is the third release from Love and Rockets in three years, and gives a very good mix of new material reminiscent of 1985's Express, which was upbeat and strong, and last year's Seventh Dream of Teenage Heaven. Earth Sun Moon shows the versatility of this band's songwriting and musicianship by presenting its music in a much wider scope.

The music on Side One tends to resemble that of Express. It opens with "Mirror People," a song which is quite characteristic of Love and Rockets' more upbeat, perhaps danceable music. A loud and steady drumbeat and equally blaring guitar line automatically catch the listener's ear and prepare him for the rest of side one.

"The Light" is a song not nearly as upbeat as the first, but is pleasant in that it is very reminiscent of the music of Bauhaus. The blaring guitar is still there and still effective, but "The Light" already shows the band's sense of variety.

The third song on Side One is "Welcome Tomorrow" and is one of the best songs on the album. It is still quite upbeat despite the absence of the familiar guitar sound. Instead, it includes a few great bass lines and some interesting vocal arrangements. Lyrically, it is the only collaboration on the album between David J and Daniel Ash and is also the best on the album.

"No New Tale to Tell" is also one of the more interesting songs of the whole album. Although the chord progressions are a bit monotonous and somewhat predictable, the lyrics and the flute solo in the interlude are a saving grace. The singing harmonies are also a big plus.

Love and Rockets' versatility is shown again in "Here on Earth." The slow but steady beat of the song is well complemented by David J's lyrics, which really hit home. The song speaks of the irony and silliness of everyday

White Lion's lyrics in Pride reflect love and style

everyone about past lovers.

The first song on the second side of Pride is without a doubt the best song White Lion has ever released. In the last few weeks, "Wait" has received some airplay on MTV and is rapidly gaining popularity. The song is filled with great lyrics about a man who tries to stop his girlfriend from leaving him by proclaiming his love for her.

He wants more time to show her how much she means to his life and happiness. In this respect, "Wait" and "One More Night" by Phil Collins have a great deal in common.

"Wait" also displays the immense talents that Bratta and Tramp possess. This particular song is tailor-made for Tramp's singing style. This makes the song very good, but Bratta makes it complete by finishing with an unbelievable exhibition of guitar wizardry.

Although "All You Need Is Rock n' Roll" is not as electrifying as "Wait," it is still a quality metal song. The lyrics show how music can be the key to feeling good. Tramp feels that, "It's your destiny. It'll set you free."

The beginning of the song is dominated by a strong beat that the drummer, Greg D'Angelo, hammers out powerfully. Overall, "All You Need Is Rock n' Roll" demonstrates many of White Lion's strengths and few, if any, weaknesses.

The story of Romeo and Juliet's love affair is retold in White Lion's version of "Tell Me." A teenage couple was forced to run away from home to be together. Their parents were against the relationship from the beginning, but had no control over the situation after they left. The boy keeps asking his girlfriend to tell him she will stay with him forever and always love him.

Once again, both the vocals and the background music make this song into a winner. "Tell Me" is another example of the superior music that White Lion has produced over the last few years.

"When The Children Cry" is a fitting way to end the album. It is White Lion's slowest paced song and is the total opposite of heavy metal songs that have no meaning. The song begins with a more relaxed, acoustic style of guitar playing that is present throughout the song.

The lyrics become philosophical as they reflect on the failure of the older generation to keep the world from falling apart. White Lion shows that the children are the future and it is their responsibility to repair all of the damage that has been done.

I am not a great fan of heavy metal music, but White Lion took me by surprise with their lyrics about love and mellow music. Every one of their songs was easy to understand and the music had an impressive style all its own.

I wish there were more heavy metal bands around today who played with the same excellence that White Lion demonstrates in Pride.

McCammon's novel deals with nuclear horror

By ROBERT DUGGAN

Swan Song
Robert R. McCammon
Pocket Books
★★★½

Robert R. McCammon's Swan Song is one of the most ambitious works of horror to be written this decade. It lives up to its cover's bold statement of being "the year's most frightening book" not only because of its own literary power but also because of the horrifying reality of its subject — nuclear war.

McCammon has been writing horror novels since 1978. Such notable horror masters as Dean R. Koontz and John Saul have complimented his work and some critics place him on a par with Steven King and Peter Straub, the acknowledged masters of the genre.

In Swan Song, McCammon creates a terrifyingly believable vision of a post-nuclear war America. McCammon describes the possible consequences of a nuclear attack on our environment with horrifying starkness and clarity. His graphic detailing of the nuclear carnage is chilling, to say the least. The desolation and awesome waste of the scenario he presents leaves an indelible impression on one's mind.

Out of this wasteland rise the survivors of the attack. They "awaken" to a world of endless winter, endless pain and endless desperation. In the midst of this darkness, a glimmer of hope shines in the person of a young girl called Sue Wanda, or Swan for short.

Swan has the power to communicate with nature, to hear the suffering of dying plants, as well as to calm the wildest of beasts. By merely touching the soil, she is able to reawaken the earth and make the land productive again. After her mother dies from radiation sickness, she is "adopted" by Josh Hutchins, an ex-pro football player turned pro wrestler.

Hutchins is told by a speaking corpse to, "Protect the Child!" He vows to keep Swan free from harm not only for her sake, but for the sake of all humanity. Travelling the country with Hutchins, Swan becomes a modern messiah, saving the world from starvation by making the crops grow again.

While this pair crosses the barren countryside, an old New York City bag lady named Sister who survived the attack finds a glass ring with strange powers in the rubble. While holding the ring, Sister is struck by visions of a destiny she cannot understand, but feels compelled to follow — to find the magical child named Swan shown to her by the ring and to protect her from those who would rather see mankind die out completely.

One of those who want to finish what the holocaust has begun is a nameless demon who is able to change his appearance at will. His goal is to eradicate man by crushing all hope of recovery, thrusting Earth into perpetual despair. Frantically he chases Sister across the country before she, the ring and Swan can be united.

McCammon has crammed enough material into Swan Song to fill two or possibly three average novels. On this grand battlefield of 956 pages, he pits hope versus despair, good versus evil and love versus hate without ever once dragging on or losing sight of the significance of his chosen topic of nuclear destruction.

Fans of literature will find special points of interest in the book. Passages of T.S. Eliot's "The Waste Land" and "The Hollow Man" play significant roles in the story. Also, the author invokes many of the devices of epic poetry such as "in medias res," the theme of a journey and the use of the supernatural in this epic tale of horror.

Swan Song should catapult McCammon into the upper echelon of horror writers. Although the book's size may seem intimidating to those who do not have a lot of time for pleasure reading, I assure you that the hours you give to McCammon will be very well spent.

British band's new album needs former singer, Murphy life. Once again, pleasing harmonies are present along with an equally pleasing saxophone solo.

Side One closes with "Lazy." Although it starts slowly, "Lazy" soon picks up and becomes a competitor for the best song on the album. The song has a sort of '50's type rhythm and sound, although the lyrics are a bit confusing at points.

Side Two opens with "Waiting for the Flood," which although considerably slower than the songs on Side One (which most of Side Two is), is still a very likeable song. A sax solo is also featured in this song, but is in no way monotonous or repetitious.

While saxophone is not one of the major instruments that Love and Rockets usess, it is a nice touch for a few songs on this album, including "Waiting for the Flood."

"Rain Bird" is the next song on Side Two and is very characteristic of Love and Rockets' mellower side. It is a nice combination of acoustic guitar and interesting little electric guitar solos thrown in here and there. Although the lyrics are once again a bit hard to follow, the melody compensates for it.

"The Telephone is Empty" is definitely a song to be listened to through headphones. The best point about this song is the production, supplied by Love and Rockets. Although the song is not particularly exciting, it does contain the best sax solo of the album and shows the band's talents as producers, if nothing else.

Unfortunately, Earth Sun Moon does have one dark spot, "Everybody Wants to Go to Heaven." There is no saving grace for this song. It is, at best, a poor imitation of poor music and I am not exactly sure why it is included on the album.

My confidence in Love and Rockets was restored with the next song on Side Two, the title track. "Earth Sun Moon" is the best example of Love and Rockets' mellower side on the album. Although there is little percussion, the song is a great melange of acoustic guitar, bass and keyboard melodies. It earns its place as title track.

The album closes with "Youth." Though there is nothing particularly outstanding about "Youth," it is still a pretty good song and a good way to close the mellower Side Two as well as the album. It is, as you may guess, an anthem for the young, and its lyrics are actually pretty inspiring.

All in all, Earth Sun Moon is really a very good album. Though none of the songs are as striking as some of Love and Rockets' earlier work, especially that on Express, the album as a whole stands equal with Express and Seventh Dream of Teenage Heaven.

Aside from "Everybody Wants to Go to Heaven," every song is good in its own way, and every aspect of the album, including lyrics, music and production, show the truly versatile talents of this band. Still, Haskins and Ash are as usual, missing just one thing, and his name is Murphy.

Carlisle's album

The next two songs are not nearly as good as "Heaven is a Place on Earth," but Carlisle's talent manages to save them. "Circle in the Sand" has a mysterious element to the music that does not flow with Carlisle's singing or the rest of the album.

"I Feel Free" has a Bangles style melody that also fails to complement Carlisle's voice. The song is probably the worst on the album. Even Carlisle does not sound as good as usual. Because she takes a different approach to her vocals, Carlisle's beautiful voice does not come through on the song.

Returning to the style of "Heaven is a Place on Earth," is "Should I Let You In?" Zealous and energetic music gets the tune off to a good start and provides a good background for the vocals. Carlisle returns to the form of singing that she does best. In the song, Carlisle wonders if it is worth the risk to open yourself up to love.

"World Without You" opens with soft music, which when combined with Carlisle's vocals almost sounds like a mother singing a lullaby to her child. Once again, the singing is brilliant, as Carlisle flows effortlessly through love-sick lyrics.

Side Two kicks in with "I Get Weak." An upbeat melody with well-written lyrics that make this song (which is also about love) one of the album's best. Carlisle sings the chorus with a forceful and authoritative voice, but quickly returns to a gentle tone. This change in tone provides an interesting combination that really gives the song a distinct style.

"We Can Change" is also an excellent display of Carlisle's enchanting voice. Although the music could have more vitality, the song is still very entertaining.

In "Fool For Love," Carlisle uses a strong voice throughout the song that contrasts brilliantly with her normally delicate and sweet style of singing. The only complaint that one could have is that maybe Carlisle could sing about something other than love.

Some solid guitar playing and a steady, single drumbeat lead into "Nobody Owns Me." The music blends well with the vocals, but slows down in the middle when it could be more spirited. However, because of Carlisle's enormous talent, the song grows on you. This is the case for most of the album.

Ending the album on a sentimental note is "Love Never Dies." The song is a slow and moving ballad with tranquil lyrics. "Love Never Dies" is generally a sad song that fades out slowly to close the album.

For the most part, Heaven On Earth is an impressive album in which Carlisle tries to expand her musical horizons from her past efforts. She sounds better than ever, and one can very easily fall in love with her voice. If Carlisle could only have kept the musical approach she uses on "Heaven is a Place on Earth," the album could have easily been No. 1 by now. However, even if Heaven On Earth does not bring the success Carlisle deserves, you can bet you will hear more from her in the future. In addition, as Letterman would say, she looks great.

Film displays immigrants' struggle in the U.S.A.

By DINA INNELLA

"Living on Tokyo Time" directed by Stephen Okazaki
Shouras Pictures
½

When immigrants come to America to live, the cultural gaps are hard to overcome. It is especially hard when the foreigner is alone and has no one that understands what they are saying. There are also people in America who have no sense of their cultural background. These people sometimes want the best of both worlds, which is not possible. The blending of these two subjects provides the basic premise of "Living on Tokyo Time."

Cultural differences, learning and love are a sampling of some of the themes throughout the movie. Right from the beginning, we learn that Kyoko, played by Manako Ohashi, has left behind her fiance in Tokyo.

Kyoko has come to America to start a new life. At the moment, though, her new life includes washing dishes in a Japanese restaurant and learning to speak English from a book and a tape recorder in her room at the YWCA.

We find that Kyoko's visa has run out. Kyoko is also getting a lot of letters from her family and friends back in Japan encouraging her to come home. But Kyoko wants to stay in America, and her friend Lana has an idea.

Ken, played by Ken Nakagawa, is a Japanese-American bore who has just been dumped by his girlfriend. If Ken was any more passive, he would probably be dead. He works as a janitor, but is a rock star hopeful, playing in a go-nowhere band. Ken is also a friend of Lana's and is easily suckered into a marriage of convenience to Kyoko.

The marriage takes place, and Kyoko moves into Ken's cramped apartment. The cultural differences become apparent from the start. Kyoko hardly speaks English, and Ken does not speak a word of Japanese. Kyoko enjoys Japanese food while Ken enjoys fast food. Kyoko learns about American rock-and-roll and Ken learns about love.

Kyoko, surrounded by Ken's enormous collection of albums and magazines, begins to learn about American music. Ken, for the first time in his life, has fallen in love or has cared enough to fall in love. This unlikely marriage is an education for both.

Ohaski and Nakagawa are in their first major movie roles. "Living on Tokyo Time" was about learning, so it seemed appropriate that these newcomer actors should have these roles. Ohashi was cute and charming and acted her part excellently. Nakagawa at first seemed like he was not acting well at all, but we find that his character is supposed to be inert and boring.

"Living on Tokyo Time" proved to be an enjoyable, light comedy with a few surprises. Filming with a low budget, director, writer and photographer Stephen Okazaki should be commended for this piece of work. New ideas and innovative thoughts prevailed throughout the movie and it was refreshing to see something different for a change.

"Living on Tokyo Time" premiered last Friday at the Narberth Theater. The workers there were friendly and ready to discuss the movie with me. A synopsis of the movie, along with two buttons promoting the movie, were given out to everyone. I got a pleasant feeling after leaving the movie and the theatre.

Higgins' Outlaws presents a tale of crime

By THERESA JONES

Outlaws
George V. Higgins
Henry Holt and Company

With a title like Outlaws one might expect a novel full of cops and robbers and shoot-em-up, bang-em-up scenes. While Outlaws does indeed have its share of good guys and bad guys, George Higgins presents this tale of crime in such a way as to make one sometimes wonder just who the good guys and bad guys really are.

The novel begins with a precise description of an armored car robbery in New England in 1970. This is the first in a string os successful heists pulled off by this group of outlaws, yet it is the only one presented in a firsthand account.

The rest of the five-year streak of stickups, including the mass murder that finally leads to their arrest, is revealed through police briefings and memos, offhand comments and witness' testimonies. Higgins is far from following the norms for a crime novel, but this is no typical crime novel.

Higgins focuses not on the crimes themselves, but on the moral foundations and consequences of crime. He is not speaking to us about the gun-wielding psychopaths, but about everyone who commits an "act of crime" who is convinced that he or she is not acting solely out of self-interest, but in the best interests of everyone.

Higgins is speaking about the distinction between ends and means. As one of the characters, a professor who also is a spy on occasion, puts it: "If we are, in fact, all outlaws, then it has been of necessity."

It is around this thought-provoking, somewhat frightening concept that Higgins spins his tale, which is almost disturbingly realistic. We see a variety of characters in different situations justifying their means via the ends.

We have the upper-class, young, urban terrorists — intellectual and talented — formed against and around the politics of the 1960s.

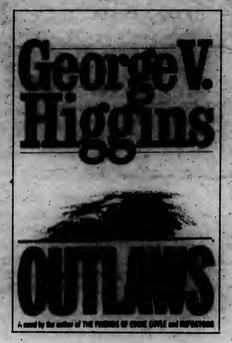
Then there is the district attorney, a man of law, whose fatally ill wife pleads with him to allow her to take an overdoze of narcotics to avoid a slow and painful death. An FBI agent commits her "crime" by spying on citizens and through foreign espionage, quite outside her duties in the bureau.

Higgins focuses not on the crimes themselves, but on the moral foundations and consequences of crime.

A state policeman with a vengeance for one of the urban terrorists oversteps his bounds in a personal pursuit of justice. An assassination is arranged by a group of friends some 40 years after the firendship is formed.

While it may sound as though Higgins has too many stories and characters running in too many directions, it is his skill at writing that allows him to present so much, and still tie it all together in sometimes surprising clarity. He crosses the country and the continents, reaches back to World War II and brings us up to 1985, and includes a number of characters, yet leaves nothing isolated or unexplained.

The final scenes accomplish a more artistic and satisfying ending than a mere final look at what has already been revealed, as is the case in some crime novels.



Aside from Higgins' talent at creating engaging content, he is also to be praised for his skill at presentation, for "Outlaws" is good simply because it reads well. His characters are, though numerous, fully alive. His scenes are carefully constructed to include the necessary while avoiding the superfluous.

Higgins' dialogue is excellent, though his style of presenting the New England accent is at times too exaggerated and a bit tough to follow — and that is coming from a New Englander.

I still have not even mentioned the trial, which is a masterpeice in itself and a cornerstone of the novel. Higgins shows us the legal ceremonies of jury selection, motions, objections and out-of-courtroom intricacies with wit and drama. Here again the characters are truly alive, from the charismatic terrorist leader, to the laughable defense attorney, to the judge you cannot help but like.

Part of the reason I enjoyed Outlaws so much is that Higgins is skilled at doing the unexpected without leaving his reader disappointed by what might be thought to be missing.

If you do not think you have the time to invest in a novel during the semester, I would urge you to consider Outlaws as potential Thanksgiving entertainment. Or make it a Christmas present to the family's avid reader, and then read it yourself! Personally, I plan to dig up a few of Higgins' previous 14 books to keep myself busy while waiting for his next.

Klos receives Big East honor

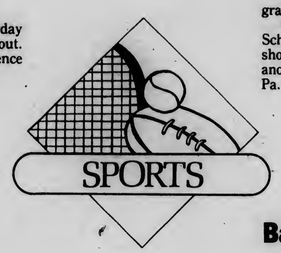
In last Saturday's soccer win over Pitt, junior goalie Ron Klos chalked up his eighth shutout of the '87 season. The 1-0 victory enabled Klos to break the V.U. record of seven shutouts in a season set by Pete Jirak in 1980.

In addition to this honor, Klos was named the Big East Athlete of the week, making him the first Villanova male to achieve that honor in the 1987-88 athletic season.

Men's swim team places second

The Wildcat men's swimming and diving team was able to capture second place in the duPont carnival relays. The 'Cats, who scored 100 points, were topped by La Salle who finished the relays with a score of 112.

Three walk-ons join Wildcats



The Villanova basketball team recently announced three additions to the team, walk-ons Rob Tribuiani, Tim Muller and Chris Mosotti.

Tribuiani, a sophomore, is a 5-foot 11-inch guard who graduated from Malvern Prep.

Muller, a 6-foot 2-inch freshman from Pascack Hills High School in New Jersey, is a guard who possesses excellent outside shooting ability along with good ball-handling skills. Mosotti, another guard, is a freshman from Hickory High in Hermitage, Pa.

Football tickets available

Contrary to popular belief, the football game this Saturday at 1:30 p.m. between Villanova and U. Mass. is not sold out. The 'Cats need your support to down their Yankee conference foes, so pick up a ticket right away.

Ward leads way for ice hockey

Bob Ward came up with a hat trick to lead Villanova's hockey team to their first win in 1987 beating Scranton 10-3. Next, the 'Cats suffered a defeat at the hands of Roger Williams, 8-1.

The team's record now stands at 1-2.

Basketball set to begin

This Saturday at 10:30 a.m. the Villanova basketball team will participate in the annual Blue-White game. The game, to be played at duPont Pavillion, will be free. Fans are encouraged to come and check out the 'Cats.

Paul Vrind adjusts to life at Villanova

By JOHN G. RICCO

Late last summer the Villanova basketball team picked up a late recruit in 7-foot center Paul Vrind. Vrind, who is 19 years old, grew up in the Netherlands in Gouda, Holland. Though his first love was hockey, four years ago he started playing basketball, and he soon felt that it was the sport for him.

For three years, Vrind played in a high-school-age league. Though the teams had coaches, and the league was fairly organized, the competition was subpar. "If I was to play a pick-up game here [at Villanova] in the gym, it would have better competition," remarked the left-handed center.

Vrind remained in this league until last year when both his size and his talent enabled him to switch to a semi-pro team, the highest level of basketball in Holland. Though he did not play for the team (which included ex-Wildcat Gary McLain), and thus did not get paid, Vrind did practice with them.

"I had to travel two hours to get to a practice," commented Vrind. "I was traveling four hours every day."

It was around this time (last October), that Vrind decided he would like to play basketball in the United States. "I thought it would be a great experience," he said.

Fortunately, Vrind's coach was good friends with Villanova Head Coach Rollie Massimino, and plans were made to send Vrind to the Main Line. "I didn't really look at other colleges," Vrind said. "I went on what I read about Villanova and what I heard about from American coaches who were coaching Dutch teams."

Vrind's impact on the Wildcat team will probably not be immediate, as Massimino plans to red shirt him for the 1987-88 season. "We didn't want him to be thrown right into the competition that quickly because of his studies and everything else," Massimino said.

Vrind's impact on the Wildcat team will probably not be immediate, as Massimino plans to red shirt him for the 1987-88 season.

Vrind has definitely had to make some adjustments since arriving in the U.S. this summer. He has had to get used to new kinds of food, a different language and college life in general.

On the basketball court, Vrind will have to make adjustments of a different variety. "Coming from Europe, he hasn't played a great deal and obviously is not used to our style of play," commented Massimino. "He's 7 feet [tall], and over there, there are not that many 7-footers."

Massimino believes that Vrind's greatest strengths are his shot and his will to learn. He is very intelligent (Vrind is a mathematics major) and has the desire to be the best player he can be.

"He's a great kid," praised Massimino. "Regardless of whether or not he ever becomes a great basketball player, I'm just happy that he's part of this fine university."

Field hockey ends on down note

By AMY C. SPENCER

Villanova field hockey had a tough week as they continued a losing streak which began against Virginia on Oct. 25. The team lost two games in a row to Lock Haven and West Chester before achieving a victory over Ursinus on Saturday. The recent downward slide has brought their season record to 11-7-2, a disappointing end to a season that had the promising start of 6-0-1.

Lock Haven downed the 'Cats, 4-1, on a rainy Tuesday afternoon. The players, accustomed to playing on the turf, found it difficult to compete on the wet grass of Lock Haven's field, and their game was adversely affected.

Lock Haven managed to outshoot the 'Cats by almost a 2-1 ratio, taking 37 shots on goal as compared to 20 by Villanova. Ann Dickey scored the Wildcats only goal, her fourth of the season, to avoid being shut out. The team was disappointed by their performance, which included the allowance of the most goals given up in one game all season.

The 'Cats fell again Thursday by a score of 2-1 at the hands of West Chester, which is ranked fifth in the nation. Defensive skills shone as Villanova allowed West Chester only four shots from inside the circle and 14 total. But the offense was not on the ball, only taking six shots during the whole contest.

Villanova's lone score did not come until the halfway point of the second period when Anita D'Ascenzo drove the ball past the opposing scorekeeper to ruin the chance for a West Chester shutout. The 'Cats had not been able to score more than one goal in any of their last three games at this point, and this game only extended that unfortunate streak.

Luckily, the Wildcats overcame their difficulties when they faced Ursinus Saturday. For the first time in Villanova history, they came away with a victory from a match with the Bears. The 'Cats scored two goals en route to a shutout victory.

The game was scoreless at the half, but the Wildcats exploded in an offensive frenzy early in the second period that led to the two scores.

Sharon Seiz, team leader in goals scored, notched her ninth of the season at 26:57 in the second period, with the assist by Ann Rosat. Victoria Rife followed this up at 22:02 with an unassisted goal.

Welcome Wildcat Basketball Fans to a new column brought to you by the Wildcat Basketball Executive Board. The 1987-88 executive board members are: Rob Nobile- president, Jay Talbott- vice president, Ron McKay- secretary, and Curt Krause- treasurer. We will be presenting this column to express the views of the Wildcat Basketball Club.

The column will be strictly positive oriented because we feel that the students should support the basketball program rather than criticize it. There is no place for criticism towards amateur athletes especially from their peers.

This season started out with the annual basketball season ticket sale. The basketball club showed a strong response selling 1,400 tickets. The season tickets will be distributed to the controllers at 9:30 a.m.-1:30 p.m. November 9-11, in our office, 108B Dougherty Hall. If your controller does not pick up your package by 1:30 p.m. Nov. 11, you forfeit your season tickets.

Last week, the executive board members met with Coach Rollie Massimino to discuss different ways to boost the spirit during the upcoming basketball season. As a boost to morale, the team and basketball club would like the fans to wear blue clothing to all of the games. Also, we urge the fans to stand up at the beginning of each game until the visiting team scores their first point. Massimino informed us that the team bench will be moved to the student section side this year in order to be closer to the fans. We also discussed having a T-shirt sale, theme oriented games, and additional road trips.

The annual blue-white game will be held tomorrow at 9:45 a.m. in the duPont Pavilion.

In preparation for the season opener in Hawaii, we will be hosting the Canadian National Team on Nov. 11 at 7:30 p.m. Other upcoming events include Coach Massimino's rap session with the basketball club on Nov. 19, 12:45 p.m. in the Pavilion. Later that day at 5 p.m. an intersquad scrimmage will be held as a final tune up for the year.

The basketball club encourages fans to respond to our column. All input is welcome.

Interested In A Career In Insurance? Then Stay Away!

If you've always wanted to work for an insurance company, you may not be interested in what we have to offer. Because a career at Chubb is far from what you might think it is. First of all, we are primarily a property/casualty insurance company, not a life or health company. And you won't be a salesman knocking at doors. After training you'll be analyzing some of the most interesting kinds of insurance risks, managing your own marketing strategy, and making proposals on multi-million dollar accounts.

Water polo swims to Division I

By JIM BOWMAN

As Villanova glamor sports such as track and basketball soar along grabbing headlines and publicity at every stop, one of Villanova's most up-and-coming athletic teams is fighting just to make a splash — literally.

This fall, Villanova's water polo team quietly compiled a brilliant regular season slate of 14 wins and two losses, good for an at-large bid into the Eastern Intercollegiate Championships, Nov. 13-15, at Annapolis, Md.

However, the most important development of the season occurred out of the water when last week the team players voted to take the huge step from Division II to Division I for next season.

Ed Rae, the team's lone senior, explained the decision. "We're an expanding, improving program with great depth and talent. It's time to move up to Division I and play the top teams. We earned the right to give it a shot."

Sophomore standout Matt Morris agreed with the move, saying, "It should help everything. We'll be able to recruit better and eventually be a good Division I team. Next year is going to be one tough year, though, comparatively."

Although the 'Cats are blessed with a deep and talented roster, water polo affords room for only six positions other than goalie. Along with Rae and Morris, sophomore goalie Ed Uy, juniors Farshad Charmforoosh and Jim Riley, sophomore Matt Jayne and freshman Mike Klarin handle the starting duties for the 'Cats. Sophomore Steve Flanagan and junior George Kummeth have also made strong contributions in backup roles.

The person pulling the strings for Villanova is coach Dan Sharadin, described by Morris as "one of the best water polo coaches in the East."

"I can't say enough about him. He is outstanding," added Rae.

The 'Cats laid the groundwork for this successful season with a strong performance in the Bucknell Invitational, against several Division I teams.

"We started the season with the Bucknell Invitational, and we did extremely well against some very good teams. That served as a confidence builder, and it set the tone for what turned out to be a great season," said Rae.

Last weekend, Villanova traveled to Fordham for the Mid-Atlantic Conference championships, where the top two teams received automatic bids into the Eastern Championships. The 'Cats posted a 2-1 record and fnished in a three-way tie for first.

However, the tiebreaker system, based on goal differential, awarded the title to Johns Hopkins, with Queens College taking second. Villanova then received their at-large bid for the championships, where they will be favored to win.

Ruggers triumph, 13-10, over Penn

Penn's defense by pop-kicking through their line, gaining yardage in the process as well.

With no score late in the first half, Brian Couglin, the hero of last week's win, escaped Penn's grasp by cutting back through their defense en route to a 30-meter, try-scoring run.

"They were playing me wide, not letting me get to the outside, so I decided to fake them and cut back, and I was able to just steamtrain in for the score," remarked Couglin.

Koons added a conversion kick to put 'Nova ahead, 6-0, at the half.

Villanova was not quick to forget their win over Princeton, in which they had come back from 10-0 deficit to win; they were intent on scoring again to outpace Penn.

Koons was able to redeem his earlier missed kicks by taking in his own try early in the second half. However, his own run took him too far from the goalposts for him to make the conversion, and 'Nova led, 10-0.

Later, Penn's huge prop, Alex Tierney, bowled over 'Nova lock Mike Burke for a score, which, with the conversion, brought Penn back, 10-6.

Koons, however, then added to the Villanova score with a 20-meter penalty kick, which brought the score to 13-6.

Penn's subsequent scoring tries were stifled by 'Nova's forwards, led in part by prop Chris Hillman, whose tackles left Penn's backs dazed.

"They tried to run weak, strong and right at me," Hillman said, "but I kept shooting them down. No way was that winger getting away from me."

Penn's scrumhalf, Bob O'Sullivan, was able to escape 'Nova's Chris McDonnell, before scoring on a 30-meter run to bring Penn within a try at 13-10.

At this point, 'Nova kept the ball away from Penn until time expired.

The win brought 'Nova's record to 5-2, but most importantly, it gave them the first seed in the Atlantic region of the National Collegiate Tournament in the spring. This is the second consecutive time that Villanova is in the tournament.

Last year, a narrow loss to Maryland in the second round knocked them from the tournament. But this year, they are looking ahead to take their region.

Inside-center McDonnell said, "Our attitude and preparation have been the key. We've gotten serious about our training and we're ready to play in the morning. Some of us are playing hurt, like this cut I've got (pointing to his head), but we're not letting it get in the way of a victory."

Injuries have plagued 'Nova since the beginning of the season, with prop Chris Gatti's fractured ankle marking the latest of the group.

Villanova's B-side continued their winning ways by defeating Penn, 24-0. Tries were scored by John Leary, Mike Terzian and Aubrey Shorts. The game was marked by aggressive running play, with eager 'Nova players trying to capture their own score.

Dan O'Mara blew a long run by fumbling away his own try in the goal, and was unable to recover, yet his teammates carried him by scoring four tries in their fourth consecutive shutout.

Athlete of the Week

PATTY DUANE

This week's Saco East Athlete of the Week is the volleyball team's Patty Duane.

Duane, a red-shirted freshman, stood out in an otherwise disappointing Big Five tournament for the Wildcats.

Duane accounted for 23 hits along with 5 kills and was named to the all-Big Five tournament team. In the tourney, she was able to lead the team to a win over La Salle, but unfortunately the 'Cats dropped their next two to Temple and to U. Penn.

Duane is a graduate of Valhalla High School in North White Plains, N.Y.

Women's tennis finishes season

By STEVE ELLIS

The women's tennis team wrapped up their 1987 fall season with a fifth place finish in the Big East Women's Championship held Oct. 17 and 18 in South Orange, N.J., on the campus of Seton Hall University. The championship was captured for the second straight year by Boston College.

The fifth-place team finish was highlighted by a third-place finish by senior Beth Lemon in the number two singles bracket. Lemon defeated Providence's Valine Rhodes in the quarterfinals, 4-6, 7-5, 6-3, then fell to eventual champion Carol Kraus of Syracuse, 6-2, 6-0, in the semifinals, but bounced back and won a hard-fought three-set match against Connecticut's Karen Ford, 4-6, 6-2, 7-6 to capture third place.

Other point scorers included the number three doubles team of Sue Bernardi and Jeanne O'Connor; number five singles, Stacey Hall; and number three singles, Bernardi. All were consolation bracket winners.

The women ended regular match play with a very impressive 15-5 record. The team won nine straight matches to close out the season, which included 9-0 romps over West Chester and St. Joseph's. Other victories included a 5-0 win over Concordia; 7-2 wins over Swarthmore, Lehigh and Drexel; a 4-0 win over LaSalle; a 6-3 win over Big East foe St. John's; and a forfeit victory over Ramapo.

The 15-5 record was the best record compiled since 1983, when the team finished 14-3. The fifth-place finish in the Big East Championship was also the best finish since 1983 when the team finished third.

The team only loses one integral part, Lemon. The loss is a big one, but after this year's success, there's good reason for Coach Robert Langran to look forward to next fall's season with great optimism.

Bad breaks hamper football

the preceding week against Maine, Villanova came alive.

Running an M4-counter, Karoly faked a run left, then ran right behind the blocking of Paul Berardelli and Dave Pacitti for a 50-yard gain. This led to a quick 17-yard completion from Kirk Schulz to Bob Brady for a touchdown.

The very next series, Art Condodina made an opportune sack of the Huskies' DeGennaro, releasing the ball for a Bill Buckley recovery. With the momentum fully in the team's favor, the offense was forced to go for the goal on a fourth down and five. Unfortunately, they failed, and came away with the score still 28-16 in the third quarter.

Then, after the ball changed hands between the teams twice, Villanova maneuvered itself into scoring position. For the second time in the game, Karoly broke loose from the Huskie defense on the 29-yard line and took it in for a score.

With the score 28-23 in the fourth quarter, the fake punt by Hodge that was ruled incomplete turned the ball over to U. Conn who capitalized on it by going 55 yards in seven plays.

DeGennaro capped the drive by running the final seven yards for six points. The score remained the same for the final three minutes, 34-23, and the Wildcats ended up dropping their second straight contest.

'Cats fall to U. Conn

By JAY TALBOTT

Villanova's football team for the second consecutive week was hindered by costly errors. Offensive Coordinator Greg Olejack summed up the game by saying, "We played 58 minutes of good football, and the remaining two minutes were mistakes." The Wildcats (5-2) looked as if they would pull a Halloween Day trick on the University of Connecticut's (4-4) Homecoming Game at Memorial Stadium in Storrs, Conn.

Down 21-3 at halftime (The 'Cats had two touchdowns negated by a penalty and a fumble), the team held their composure and stormed right back into the game in an exciting second half.

With John Karoly rushing for 100 yards and two touchdowns in the second half, coupled with the best performance the offensive line has had this year, the team closed the margin to 28-23 with six minutes remaining. Then, when punter Perry Hodge faked a punt and passed to Jin Kim for an apparent first down, the official called the play an incomplete pass and ended a crucial drive.

We played 58 minutes of good football and the remaining two minutes were mistakes.
—Offensive Coordinator Greg Olejack

The Huskies built up their 21-3 lead by running Jeff Gallagher from six and seven yards for the scores in the first and second quarter, respectively. Also in the first period, U. Conn quarterback Matt DeGennaro eluded Wildcat lineman Ted White, and lofted the ball to Scott Sweitzer for another touchdown.

Tom Withka put the Wildcats on the board, and kept his kicking record perfect in the process, hitting a 24-yard field goal. The score was set up after Derek McEwen landed on a fumble caused by Mike Feeley. Withka is now 4-4 in field goal attempts, and 24-24 in extra points.

In the second half, Villanova regrouped and came back ready to play. Karoly started the scoring by scampering 10 yards into the end zone.

The Huskies then went to their all-time receiver David Dunn for a 28-yard strike from DeGennaro to make the score 28-10. Realizing that U. Conn blew a similar lead

'Nova tops Friars, looks to playoffs

By KARLA BECKNER

The Villanova women's soccer team closed out their regular season with a 1-0 victory over visiting Providence College Saturday. The team begins post-season play today against Monmouth in the opening round of the East Coast Athletic Conference Championships being held at the University of Hartford.

Jean Hajjar recorded the only goal in the Providence game on an asist by Jeannine McLees just 2:23 into the game. Head coach Don Paxon remarked that it was the typical Villanova-Providence game. "We owned the ball and the turf, but were only able to score one goal off them."

The Wildcats dominated the field, outshooting Providence, 17-0, and outscoring them on corner kicks, 15-1.

Senior goaltender Lynn McHale recorded her eighth shutout of the season, tying the Villanova record. In addition, she now holds the record for most career shutouts, goals against average for the season and career, and has the highest save percentage for a single season and career.

The Wildcats now stand with an 11-6-2 record going into the ECAC Championships. "This is the best season we've ever played in," Paxon said. "We have an intensive, aggressive team on the field. We've beaten two nationally ranked teams and tied another, which says a lot for a team comprised of all walk-ons."

According to Paxon, approximately 20 teams requested to play in the ECAC Championships. Villanova enters in as the second seed behind the University of Hartford, with Monmouth and Holy Cross following as the number three and number four seeds respectively.

The Wildcats have faced all three teams prior to this championship, losing to Hartford, 1-0, in the WAGS Tournament on Oct. 10, and to Monmouth, 1-0, on Oct. 19, but defeating Holy Cross, 2-1, at the 7-UP Wildcat Tournament on Oct. 25 at Villanova.

The Villanova-Monmouth game begins at 11 a.m. today with Hartford taking on Holy Cross at 1 p.m. The championship game will be played tomorrow at 1 p.m.

Rugby shocks Quakers to win championship

By MEL ATKELIES

Finally the long, high-pitched scream of the referee's whistle filled the air, just as the voice of the fat lady's would at the end of an opera. But the tragedy that was supposed to be played on Saturday never was. Instead, a triumph took its place, as the Villanova ruggers beat the favored University of Pennsylvania, 13-10, to capture the Eastern Pennsylvania Rugby Union Championship in Haverford last Saturday.

Villanova, making its first appearance in the championship game, didn't seem to lack experience, though. No wonder, they had lost to the same team only a month before, but this time they were determined to change the outcome.

Pennsylvania, on the other hand, preferred the earlier score, when they kept Villanova from scoring a try, yielding only points from kicks. They were fresh off a 40-3 victory over Lehigh in their playoff game, and looking forward to another easy win for the championship. It would not come, however, partially because Villanova was just off an emotional win over Princeton, and was looking to avenge their earlier loss to Penn.

The contrast to the earlier game was soon apparent, as the 'Nova forwards were stealing Penn's line-outs and scrum put-ins. Twice they had possession deep in Penn's area, but were unable to score as Mike Koon's dropkicks strayed wide of the posts. With the return of Tim Whelan to fullback, the backs frustrated

Chaplain offers guidance

By DOUG SCANCARELLA

One aspect in which a Catholic university differs from a public university is the fact that all Catholic school sports have a team chaplain. In the case of Villanova's football and basketball teams, that chaplain is the Rev. Bernard A. Lazor.

Lazor, a professor of biblical studies, is often called upon to speak at banquets for other Wildcat teams, but he is primarily involved with the football and basketball teams.

When he arrived at Villanova in 1971, Lazor immediately was named the chaplain of the football squad. Five years later, in 1976, Lazor became the chaplain of the basketball team as well. He has been doing both ever since.

Lazor's main function is saying Mass prior to the games. These masses, which are for the whole team to attend, relate every Gospel to a way of life and a game situation. The masses are meant to give an insightful message so that the athletes can relate to God.

Lazor commented, "We are not here to pray for winning, although we do pray for help in our efforts and thank God for our talents. We pray to get insight into life and to relate to God."

Lazor further added, "They [the players] are participating physically, but that's only one dimension. The Mass is arranged to make the players realize the intellectual and spiritual aspects of life as well as the physical."

Lazor is well liked by the teams for which he is chaplain. Head basketball coach Rollie Massimino, particularly fond of Lazor's efforts, said, "I think he's great. He does a fabulous job of creating spiritual camaraderie, and he gives us an opportunity to share things alone and together."

The Rev. Bernard Iazor, O.S.A.

BEHIND the LINES

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

What player's efforts are seen in every game and echoed in the play of every other player on the basketball court? What player gives up his identity to further and strengthen the team?

The player referred to above has been a topic of conversation for many months prior to the basketball season. The player is the walk-on.

The walk-on is a player who is promised nothing and still sacrifices his body and his sweat to help the team. In the past, he has been termed as anything from a practice player to a bench warmer.

To a certain extent, both terms fit. Rarely is a walk-on used in a game situation. On most occasions, his only time to shine is during practice. The rewards for his work are often slim. They do not gain glory on national television, nor are they appreciated by the fans.

On most occasions, the walk-ons symbolize either impending victory or impending defeat. On very few occasions, do they see "quality time." Although the efforts of walk-ons are seen reflected in the quality of play in other players, the sports pages of America do not lend them any space.

They risk their bodies like any other player and yet the promise of a professional career does not linger in the back of their mind. The thought of immediate success in the field of basketball upon graduation from college is not apparent.

Why then do these players play the game? It is only a presumption on my part, but could it be that these players play the game as it was intended? Could it be that they play merely for the love of the game of basketball?

The next time you see an outstanding move by a star, think about who just might have helped him perfect that move. The next time you see a camera scan the bench or you see the "scrubs" come in at the end of the game, think about exactly why they are there and exactly what they mean to a team.

In an era when role models can be hard to find, you just might be able to find one in a walk-on.

V.U. meets with neighbors

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

In a meeting with over 40 Radnor Township residents Nov. 5 in the Connelly Center, University officials discussed their plans to rezone and develop the west campus.

A week earlier, Villanova met with Radnor Township commissioners to request rezoning the 46.43 acres of the Morris tract on the west campus as institutional to permit the eventual construction of academic office buildings and dormitories or apartments to house 1,200 students.

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, welcomed the residents to Villanova and described the meeting as an "initial sharing" of Villanova's plans and the neighbors' initial concerns.

To meet these concerns, Driscoll suggested that the neighbors appoint small committees that would meet frequently with Villanova officials. The University would then meet with the large group on occasion.

"We are concerned with our mission as an institution ... Those values [of our institution] are reflected in our relationship with our friends and neighbors. We are deeply concerned about your [the neighbors'] welfare," said Driscoll.

The Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., assistant to the vice president for Student Life, explained to the residents that the west campus is approximately the size of the main campus. He said that Villanova wants "to maximize the limited land resources we have in order to bring residential students back on to the campus."

The plans for the west campus, according to Martin, would "enhance the students' academic, recreational and cultural lives to be competitive [with other universities], to attract students."

Marc Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center, unveiled a map of the property and described the details of the plans for full development of the land. He assured the neighbors that, with setbacks and property allotted for open space, there will be no development within 150 feet of any property owner.

The proposed dormitories or apartments will be situated in the center area of the west campus property, said Tuchman, so as to be "least burdensome to our adjoining neighbors."

In cooperation with development planned if the rezoning of the Morris tract is approved, the University is considering putting in a traffic signal at Dundale Road and aligning it with Claremont

No Thursday evening classes

By MARIA CHIAPPETTA

Evening classes on Nov. 19 have been rescheduled so that faculty and students can avoid the traffic and parking problems generated by the turnout for Thursday night's football game.

The Athletics department scheduled the Holy Cross game for 8 p.m. Thursday to accommodate ESPN (Entertainment and Sports Programming Network). Up to 14,000 spectators are expected to attend the event.

Notified that there would probably be traffic congestion and difficulty parking, night class administrators took measures to alter the circumstances.

"Whenever our students are likely to be affected I have a responsibility to try to improve the situation," said Dr. Angelo Armenti, dean of the University College.

The first viable option for Armenti was to transfer the classes to Thursday of Fall Break. Professors who were unable to make the switch could meet instead on a reading day, or at a time mutually agreeable to them and their classes.

"At no time was it contemplated to simply cancel class," said Armenti.

He did not view the situation as a conflict between sports and academics. According to Armenti, the decision to reschedule reflects respect for the time and patience of students and faculty rather than an abandonment of education in favor of football.

"For the good of the University we can deal with a small amount of inconvenience," said Armenti.

New student health facility planned

By MAUREEN STAPLETON

A recommendation to build a new infirmary within the next two years at an estimated cost of $6 million is currently being reviewed by the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president.

The drive to build a new infirmary came about as a result of violations in new fire code regulations in the existing infirmary.

According to the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, the fire and safety committee, upon review of Middleton Hall in 1986, found the "new code would require significant changes in the building to comply with the code."

The committee decided that it would be more economical to build a new building instead of renovating the present infirmary, which opened in 1946. Since that time, there has been a 225 percent increase in Villanova's undergraduate population, but no changes have been made to Middleton Hall. Last year, there were 12,040 separate visits to the infirmary.

The program committee recommended that the new infirmary incorporate an overall "wellness" approach to the health needs of the students of Villanova. Thus, according to the recommendation, the new infirmary would not only provide for the health cares of the student but the psychological needs as well.

As a result of this approach to the new infirmary, both a psychological counseling center and a career counseling center may be included in the proposed infirmary. Stack said there is "some merit to the idea."

It was recommended that the facility be located in a central part of the campus in order for all resident students to have easy access to it. Five sites were recommended, but no decisions concerning the site have been made.

Protest against Meese considered

By NOEL E. FALCO

There will be a meeting Nov. 18 at 6:30 p.m. in the Center for Peace and Justice Education for both students and faculty interested in organizing a protest against the appearance of the Hon. Edwin Meese III, attorney general of the United States, according to John Lewis, Commerce and Finance senator.

Meese will be speaking on "The Constitution: A Bicentennial Reflection" at a banquet held after a presentation by the Hon. Antonin Scalia, associate justice for the U.S. Supreme Court, on Nov. 20. Scalia will be speaking on "The Constitution, the People and the Courts" at the Law School, said Dr. John J. Schrems, political science professor.

Lewis stated that the protest is a group effort of interested parties. He said while the Center for Peace and Justice Education is not sponsoring or financing the protest, people within the department are interested in being part of the protest.

"I was actually thinking of going [to the Meese banquet], but I decided I couldn't consiously support someone who's a known criminal," Lewis said.

Lewis said one part of the protest was that the banquet was not opened to all who were interested but was based upon one's ability to pay to see the speech.

"The other part is he's a known criminal. He's the highest law enforcement officer in the land but he himself sees fit to break the law," Lewis said, referring to the Wedtech scandal.

Meese has not been convicted of any crime.

Lewis stated that the protest will be in good taste. He said, "We don't want to interrupt those who paid $15. We just want to inform them.

"We're not going to be disruptive. That's not our goal. We don't want to ruin the affair, but on the other hand they [those attending] have to be informed," he added.

According to Robert Pigeon, history professor, "The issue [behind the protest] is Ed Meese himself."

Pigeon said, "He is an unsuitable candidate to speak on the Constitution."

He stated that Meese lacks a legitimate theory on the Constitution. "His theory is a smokescreen of original intent and judicial restraint that is intended to do two things," said Pigeon.

Pigeon claimed that Meese's two intentions are to "dramatically expand the powers of the executive branch ... and [to] create an agenda to accomplish Reagan's reactionary program,

Hunger awareness promoted

By SHARON M. NEUBAUER

This past Sunday marked the beginning of the 15th Annual Hunger Awareness Week at Villanova. The week was highlighted by various events to sponsor two Augustinian missions: the St. Nicholas of Tolentine Parish in the west Bronx, N.Y., and an Augustinian parish in Peru, according to Chris Duca, co-chairperson of the event.

On Monday, the Run for Hunger took place. The runners each got pledges for each lap that they ran around the course, which circled the campus, said Duca.

Tuesday began with the opening of the craft sale at Connelly Center.

Later that day, a hunger banquet was held in the North Lounge, according to Duca. The banquet demonstrated the way in which residents of countries of the first, second and third worlds eat, said Duca.

Participants ate foods appropriate to the country to which they were assigned. For example, those who were in a First-World country dined on a complete meal, whereas those who were in a Third-World country received only part of a meal.

Following the banquet, there was a variety of musical entertainment at the coffee house in Connelly Center.

Thursday was fast day. Students signed up to give up their lunch and fast for that meal. In the past, the school donated $2 per meal given up, but this year, the University raised the amount to $3 per meal, said Duca. Campus Ministry, who sponsored the event, hopes to raise about $6,000, according to Duca.

This Sunday's five-mile run will close the week. The run will begin at 8:30 a.m. at the driveway in front of Bartley Hall and will continue on a course around the local area. Individuals interested in registering for the event may call Campus Ministry at 645-4080. The fee is $5 if the runner registers before the event, $6 if he registers the day of the run.

The Rev. Owen R. Jackson, O.S.A., of the Center for Peace and Justice Education, created Hunger Awareness Week in 1972. During the 15-year history of Hunger Awareness Week, the event has collected over $500,000, according to Duca. All of that money has gone towards developmental and educational advances to those in need. In this way, the money helps to correct future problems rather than simply meet immediate needs, said Duca.

During the week, in response to a letter, many faculty members addressed the issue of hunger in their classes, said Duca. This idea was one that was nationally acclaimed in the Oct. 26 issue of U.S. News and World Report, which rated Villanova the best comprehensive college in the East for the second year running.

According to Duca, on Nov. 30, the chairpersons of Hunger Awareness Week will be featured on a television show called "Profiles." The show will air at 6 a.m.

Homecoming celebrated

By PAMELA COYLE

Tim Capone and Elke Jones were awarded the honors of Homecoming King and Queen on Nov. 8 at the Homecoming football game against the University of Massachusetts.

The Homecoming Court consisted of Pete Bayers, Rich Cremin, Cody Gabriel, Karen Konick, Karen Nugent, Jim Walker, Susan Wausnock and Bridget Whalen. Capone and Jones represented the cheerleaders and Alpha Omicron Pi, respectively.

All of last weekend's Homecoming festivities were a great success because of the concerted efforts of students and alumni, according to Robert J. Capone, director of Alumni.

The festivities began last Thursday evening with a reception attended by the candidates for Homecoming King and Queen, student leaders, faculty and alumni, reported Ernie Manuel, Villanova Union festivals coordinator. The Homecoming King and Queen were selected by adding each candidate's combined votes from the attendants of the reception and members of the student body, Manuel stated.

Friday night, the Eighth Annual College of Arts and Sciences Alumni Medallion Dinner was sponsored by the College and the Alumni Association, Capone said. "It was a black-tie affair honoring six outstanding Villanova graduates [from Arts and Sciences]," he explained.

Later the same evening, the Chatterband was featured at the annual Homecoming party held in the Butler Annex. The party was sponsored by the Main Line Club, and seniors, in addition to alumni, were welcome to attend, reported Capone.

The football game on Saturday was preceded by on-campus tailgate parties, attended by some 30,000 students, faculty, alumni and guests, estimated Capone. "In excess of 20,000 alumni came back for Homecoming, most from out of this area," said Capone.

He added, "A successful football team helps draw alumni. When we didn't have a [football] team, alumni participation in Homecoming was down to 300-500 people."

When the Wildcats defeated the University of Massachusetts Minutemen, the stadium was filled near to its capacity of 13,500 seats, according to Capone.

The celebrating continued Saturday night with the Annual Homecoming Dance in the duPont Pavilion. The Greaseband was on hand to provide entertainment, and seniors were welcome to attend, according to Capone.

The weekend was topped off by Sunday brunch sponsored by the Nursing Alumni Association.

"Generally, the students were very supportive in making the Homecoming program work," said Capone. The fraternity, sorority and club leaders cooperated in breaking up the tailgates, he commented.

"I would like to publicly thank the Blue Key Society. They were tremendous in their help with the Chatterband on Friday and the Greaseband on Saturday. They did some things which were beyond the call of duty, such as setting up chairs and staying all night at the Greaseband show to work the doors. They were generally agreeable to perform any task they were asked to do. They were excellent," said Capone.

Blood drive collects 501 pints

Villanova's Alpha Pi Omega fraternity (APO) sponsored a three-day campus blood drive which began Nov. 3.

The goal for the drive was 600 pints of blood. The drive yielded 501 pints, which is a decrease of 19 pints from the blood drive last year at this time, according to Jennifer Maiorana, recruitment representative for the blood drive and an official of the Main Line branch of the American Red Cross.

Maiorana stated that 556 people came to donate blood, but some were deferred because of sickness.

Forest fire causes smoky air

Forest fires which have burned in West Virginia, Kentucky and 12 other southern states since Oct. 27 caused pollution levels in Pennsylvania to rise as high as five times the normal rate.

According to a Philadelphia Inquirer article, a blanket of smoke which has covered Philadelphia and much of the Northeast for the last two days was expected to dissipate because of the rain the area received this week.

Some Pennsylvania health officials said that patients with asthma, emphysema and other lung diseases should use caution until the pollution levels drop.

According to the article, Dr. Philip Klenk of the N.J. Department of Environmental Protection said that a cold front forecasted to pass through the region on Nov. 10 was expected to dissipate the polluted air, decreasing the risk for patients with those conditions. D.A.C.

Valiga honored for achievements

Theresa M. Valiga, nursing professor at Villanova University, was awarded a 1987 Founders' Award by Sigma Tau International at the society's San Francisco convention, held from Nov. 9-13.

The award was given in honor of each of the six founders of Sigma Theta Tau and the director of Indiana University's School of Nursing in 1922. The award recognizes excellence of contemporary nursing leaders.

Valiga received her doctorate in education from Columbia University. Her research on the cognitive development of baccalaureate nursing students and professional presentations on various topics in publications about research formulation are her contributions to advancing the science of nursing.

Sigma Theta Tau International promotes nursing scholarship and leadership for membership of baccalaureate and graduate- prepared nurses.

Priest seeks support for military chaplains

By KEVIN C. HEIL

Congressional legislators are currently being asked to reintroduce a bill that would maintain a balanced proportion of military chaplains in the U.S. armed forces.

The Rev. Joseph Turner, a member of the Society of the Divine Saviour and chairperson of the Chaplains' Research Center in Philadelphia, is the main proponent of the bill.

Turner, a U.S. Army chaplain for 15 years who served during the Vietnam War, said that the disproportionate number of chaplains in the armed forces began during the Vietnam conflict when they were discharged on discriminatory policies which attacked their rights.

An interfaith bill, titled "Military Chaplains Faith Balance Act" (House Bill HR 1875), was originally introduced in Congress by U.S. Rep. Robert Borski of Pennsylvania in April 1985. The bill urged the armed forces to maintain a balance of chaplains so that "military personnel and their families can communicate with their God in accordance with the dictates of their faith."

Borski, addressing the House of Representatives on Aug. 15, 1986, said, "Religious support and guidance is vital to our military personnel and their families, especially when they are far away from home, or are faced with critical personal and interpersonal conflicts. The study mandated by this amendment is an important victory in the long struggle to assure that all of the men and women in the armed forces have access to clergy of their faith.

The bill ["Military Chaplains Faith Balance Act"] urged the armed forces to maintain a balance so that "military personnel and their families can communicate with their God in accordance with the dictates of their faith."

"War or peace, the unique spiritual needs of our soldiers must be as understandingly met as their physical ailments. It cannot, nor should not, be one or the other," he said.

According to Turner, Borski's bill, with 210 co-sponsors, was set for a vote until a compromise with Wisconsin Rep. Les Aspen, chairperson of the House Armed Services Committee, "bastardized" the bill. It was referred to Aspen's committee six hours before a scheduled vote.

"It's a bill which should have never lost passage because it had the support of both speakers and 210 co-sponsors. The Borski-Aspen compromise was a slap in the face to America," Turner said.

Borski and Aspen were unavailable for comment Wednesday.

Rather than present the bill, it was reduced to a "Study of Representation of Religious Faiths in the Armed Forces" (Defense Authorization Act, 1987), said Turner.

He feels that Borski is in a no-win situation that will result in political suicide.

"He [Borski] has no business not guaranteeing freedom of religion to all people," Turner said. "It's not for Congress to prohibit or advance the cause of religion, nor to jeopardize its free exercise."

Turner said that Congress has confirmed the fact that the chaplain corp is constitutional. Even the Continental Army had its own chaplain, he said.

According to Turner, chaplains are being subjected to the same promotion policy as regular

Road to alleviate the potential traffic problems that could be caused by the plans, said Tuchman. In addition, a van or shuttle service to the main campus has been discussed.

According to Tuchman, the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT) will be rebuilding the Spring Mill Road bridge over the railroad tracks in 1989. The University plans to work with PennDOT to see if it is possible to also rebuild the approach to the bridge. A walkway under Spring Mill Road is also being considered, he said.

Martin stated, "The University is a lively, vibrant institution. Planning is something we try to do on a continuous basis."

In addition to the west campus plans, Martin outlined Villanova's master development plans for the main campus over the next 20 years.

These plans included the renovation and possible addition to Mendel Hall, the restoration of the Main Chapel, a student health facility to replace the aging infirmary, an addition to the Connelly Center and expansion of Vasey Theater.

Martin further cited proposals for additional library space and extensive renovations of Tolentine Hall, many existing dormitories, the Law School in Garey Hall, the Jake Nevin field house and many other buildings.

Over 40 Radnor Township residents met with University officials Nov. 5 in the Connelly Center to discuss plans for rezoning and development of west campus.

All of these renovations would be completed consistent with Villanova's ability to raise funds, said Martin.

University officials then listened to the concerns expressed by the residents. Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, recorded the neighbors' comments.

One Hilldale Road resident, also chairperson of Radnor's zoning hearing board, stated, "If we can work with the University we can preclude a south campus fiasco. We have had excellent relations [thus far] with the University, unlike [neighbors of] south campus." He expressed concerns about excess run-off and lighting that might be caused by the west campus development.

Martin said that the University would work to ensure enough lighting for security purposes, but leave the west campus dark enough to maintain the ambience of the neighborhood.

Another resident asked if there were any projected analyses of traffic flow given the additional buildings. Several other neighbors also expressed concerns about traffic.

A neighbor asked if there were any projections of the bordering properties' value after the development.

Other comments included concerns about the effect on sewage and water in the area.

Driscoll stated, "It has been an informative and reassuring exchange ... I assure you this dialogue will continue."

Meese protest

which includes reversing historical and landmark Supreme Court decisions of the last three decades."

Aside from the political criticisms, Pigeon also objected to the cost of the banquet.

"One thing I find personally upsetting is the circumstance under which he's appearing. I understand he was invited to speak at a banquet intended to follow the Scalia lecture, and I understand that banquets cost money," he said.

"What I don't understand is why a banquet format was chosen in the first place. It's expensive and a form of closed control for students. It is a format that fits the old boy elitist style — an anti-student format," he added.

Pigeon also commented, "I've heard it said if Ed Meese's appearance on campus is protested, it would be an embarrassment to Villanova. I think it's an embarrassment that he's coming."

The Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs, said, "I don't think we should embarrass him. He's been cleared of all those charges. I don't think it [the protest] is appropriate, and I find it embarrassing."

Gallen stated, however, that people have a right to protest. "I don't question their right. I think it's bad manners when you invite someone to a campus and then protest him being there," he said.

According to Gallen, Scalia was invited to speak at a celebration of the 200th anniversary of the Constitution, and Meese volunteered to speak at the banquet.

"We wanted someone to speak at the banquet, so we invited someone from the Justice Department, and they sent a letter back saying the attorney general would come himself," said Gallen.

He said there has been tremendous response to both the lecture by Scalia and the banquet, which is sold out.

Schrems said the $15 reservation for dinner at the banquet was less than the cost of the entree and that Meese did not receive a fee, as it is not allowed for members of the cabinet.

Gallen said that most of the bill was being picked up by the University; even the $30 reservation faculty must pay does not cover the cost.

"I told Dr. Schrems that if there are students who want to go and don't have $15, I'll pay for them myself," said Gallen.

Gallen commented, "There's almost nobody in politics you can invite these days."

Bill for military chaplains members of the armed forces. This policy does not apply to doctors though, and Turner wants chaplains to have the same exemption.

Turner said that chaplains are being treated like second-class citizens and that medicine has now become more important than religion. "They always held hearings for doctors, but they never let God have his day in court," he said.

He said he is also upset with the military's practice of "computerized rigidity" in which older priests are either fired or replaced by younger ones.

The Rev. Owen R. Jackson, O.S.A., of the Center for Peace and Justice Education, said he applauds Turner's efforts but feels that with the diminishing number of seminarians, it will be difficult to fill all of the vacancies in American parishes, let alone the armed forces.

According to Turner, Borski has written a letter stating that the national conference of bishops is not in favor of the proposed legislation.

"Mr. Borski knows [however] there is no official statement by the national conference of bishops in opposition to keeping priests in the services as long as their endorsements remain," he said.

"He knows the National Council of Catholic Clergy, the Jewish War Vets, American Legion, Am-Vets, the Black Clergy of Philadelphia, Mayor Goode, the Republican and Democratic city council [of Philadelphia] are subject to HR 1875 and demand it be reintroduced; yet his unfulfilled promise to hundreds of voters and the above national and state interest groups remains a mystery," he said.

Borski also received a letter from his ward leaders in Philadelphia, asking him to reinstitute House bill HR 1875.

In the letter they wrote, "Once again we petition you as our representative to re-submit this bill. You have chosen not to reply to our simple request to which we ward leaders must react to a strong political power force to get our request promptly implemented. Religion is a vital link between the military and their God. Do not destroy this right."

Student Government at Villanova University has also shown its support for Turner's cause. Student Government President Phil Brach sent a letter to Pennsylvania's Congressional delegation urging the immediate refiling of the bill.

Brach quoted part of a letter from Willard O'Brien, former law dean at Villanova and director of the Connelly Institute on Law and Morality. "Those of us who have served in the armed forces know of the bond that sometimes forms between a soldier and a chaplain who shares with him or her long-standing, common religious beliefs," the letter read.

"The idea that a chaplain's own religious belief is irrelevant to a soldier in pain is inconsistent with reality. I make this last observation because some seem to consider chaplains to be fungible, as interchangeable as grains of sand because they all share somewhat similar educational experiences and counseling expertise," the letter said.

This summer, the Pennsylvania State Legislature passed House Resolution 148, which would petition Congress to reintroduce the bill, by a vote of 199-0.

Turner said, "Every student is duty bound to see that his constitutional right to freedom of worship is protected. Therefore, we urge every student to call Borski's office (335-3355) and demand that he refile this urgently needed House bill, HR 1875 (99th Congress-Military Chaplains Faith Balance Act).

"I challenge the students to demand his presence on the campus for a debate on the issue with the chaplains' research committee so that nothing is hidden behind the backs of our students' right to know," he said. "Knowledge is power, and power gets results."

Turner vows the battle is not over. He said the fight will be continued.

Students interested in picking up a petition or learning more about the issue should stop by the Student Government office in 204 Dougherty Hall.

"Exposure on national TV is an important part of the development of that [football] program. The University benefits from having all its programs succeed."

He also said that given enough advance notice about game times, there is no reason anyone would be inconvenienced in the future. Changes would be built in.

Not all involved were as optimistic.

"The thoughts I have about that matter could not be quoted in the Villanovan. And you can quote that," said Dr. Daniel J. Ziegler, dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences. The school is leaving scheduling options to the individual departments and professors.

One graduate professor said he will not be able to reschedule. His alternative is to extend an already-three-hour class by half an hour for the remainder of the semester.

The Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs, described the decision to reschedule as "simple and unfortunate."

Resident students are requested to move their cars from the main lot for the Thursday evening game.

The National Order of Omega

Villanova's Greek of the Week

This week, the Order of Omega is pleased to highlight the achievements of Timothy J. Capone of the Tau Kappa Omega fraternity.

Tim is a senior general arts major and comes to Villanova from Pitman, NJ. Tim has been a brother of TKO since his freshman year, and has been involved in various capacities, including public relations officer, during his tenure.

Outside of Greek life, Tim has been a member of the cheerleading squad since his sophomore year, an orientation counselor in 1986 and a member of the steering committee for the 1987 New Student Orientation Program. Additionally, Tim is a member of the Blue Key Society, and was crowned the 1987 Homecoming king last week.

Tim is also a member of several committees for Special Olympics, works in the Alumni Office, and was also a house council member for the late, great Galberry Hall.

For all of his accomplishments, the Order of Omega is proud to honor Tim Capone of Tau Kappa Omega as the Greek of the Week.

Committee to set priorities

By E.H. McELDOWNEY

The Villanova University committee for planning and priorities for 1987-88 is currently preparing to present its recommendations to the University Senate.

The committee, which consists of faculty, administrators, alumni and students, reviews and ranks projects for the upcoming year. The projects addressed include such issues as the building of new dorms, acquisition of new laboratory equipment, student financial aid and upgrading of classrooms and offices, according to the Oct. 28 minutes of the committee.

Rose M. O'Driscoll, the chairperson, and assistant to the dean of the College of Nursing, stated that the committee is "charged by the [University] Senate to review the administrative priorities and assure that they keep with the institutional priorities." O'Driscoll's committee also works in liaison with the budget committee and the academic policy committee to set its priorities. Recommendations that members feel are important are discussed and may be added.

John Lewis, a student member of the committee, explained that there are two different budgets they deal with. The operational budget includes money taken in as tuition and used to pay for expenses to run the University, such as electricity and teacher salaries. Financial aid for students also falls under this category.

The capital budget deals with campus improvement and long-term projects like the construction of dormitories and new classrooms.

Lewis said that many of the projects are on-going and "out of our hands." He cited the continued implementation of fire safety programs.

Plans are currently underway for the conversion of the Falvey Memorial Library card catalog to a computer access system.

O'Driscoll noted that while some of the programs are set, the committee is still in the process of "defining and delineating," and that nothing has been decided yet.

She added that even after the committee submits its report, it may be modified by the Senate before it is accepted or rejected.

The list in the minutes contains plans for the construction of new dorms on south campus, a new health-care facility, the conversion of the Falvey Memorial Library card catalog to a computer access system and a plan for rezoning west campus all under short-term priorities.

Some of the long-term priorities cited include additional resident student housing, construction of academic office facilities, renovation of the Main Chapel, construction of a new wing on Mendel Hall and a parking garage.

Lewis did add, however, that most of these long term priorities are still in the remote planning stages and that "you or I will not see these changes during our term at Villanova."

Both O'Driscoll and Lewis stated that the committee of 14 members, because its decisions affect all aspects of Villanova, has representatives from the administration, faculty, students and alumni. Lewis said, "Naturally the faculty want higher salaries and the students want lower tuition," but for the most part, the "conflicts are balanced off."

Lewis commented, "There are differences in the way we view things, but there is a general feeling about where we want Villanova to be 20 years from now."

Travel agency examined

By DEBBIE GROSS

Time to Travel, the 11-month-old travel agency located in the Connelly Center, has recently been the subject of some complaints from students. Other clients, however, have rated the travel agency's services highly.

Joan Gunning, manager of the agency, said that the agency aids almost everyone at Villanova, including the Athletic department, the faculty and various school organizations, as well as the students. It is the aim of the agency to get the lowest possible fares for its customers and the agents do not charge extra in order to receive a commission from those who use their services, Gunning said.

According to Gunning, there are usually two agents working daily who can create travel packages or give out train or plane tickets, to those who need them.

The agency, however, is not equipped with a schedule of every departure or arrival, she stated. It is therefore up to the customer to give the agency a specific scheduled time.

The travel agents begin work on whatever the customer wants as soon as possible, Gunning stated. However, at times, it is necessary to make reservations or get tickets long in advance or risk not getting a seat on a plane or train.

"Students are usually very understanding, and we get back to them as soon as we can with the necessary information or ask them to stop in the next day," she said.

Those interviewed had mixed opinions on the agency.

Luci Jankowski, a junior at Villanova, said she was very disappointed with the agency. "I went to them three weeks in advance for a travel package and had to go back when I received no answer from them two weeks later. Then they only gave me one expensive plan and told me to call '800' numbers that they gave to me. I went there to have a service performed, and they just handed my request right back to me."

Another student said that he went there to get a train schedule and, after "being ignored," was handed a schedule which he said, "I couldn't understand, and they said they couldn't either. It seemed like they couldn't be bothered."

However, John Lozano of Campus Ministry, who has worked with the agency to arrange trips, stated, "They did a very fine job, and I had a very good experience with them."

AIDS forum to be presented

By K. DILLENSCHNEIDER

The Resident Student Association (RSA) will sponsor three AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) education forums to be held on campus Nov. 16-18.

According to Mary Jo Yannacone, RSA programming officer, the same program will be presented each night. The presentation, "AIDS: You're Not Immune," will be presented Nov. 16 in Corr Chapel at 7 p.m.; Nov. 17 in Sheehan Hall, first floor lounge, at 7 p.m.; and Nov. 18 in Good Counsel Hall, second floor lounge, at 8 p.m.

Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities, said RSA representatives approached him with the idea that they wanted the Lip-It competition to benefit AIDS research for children. "We then decided to go beyond that and set up a three-day AIDS education program," he said.

Yannacone said, "Part of RSA's job is to inform the residents about social issues. In conjunction with our new social awareness position, the executive board decided a lecture series would be appropriate as a follow-up to the Lip-It competition."

Bonas said, "The forums are designed to provide AIDS education and make students more informed about the disease."

The programs will be run by four student "peer educators" who have been trained and educated to speak about the AIDS virus. The peer educators are Chris Vaz, Dave Dietrich, Nick Wukich and Theresa Van Overwalle.

The program includes a 22-minute video, produced by the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, that was filmed at Villanova and the University of Pennsylvania, said Yannacone.

According to Yannacone, "The film focuses on the fact that you have to make a decision about your sexual activity.

"The presentation will last about 45 minutes to an hour and will be shown in all areas of campus so that everybody has a chance to see it," Yannacone explained.

National News Notes

Enrollment up at social work schools

The nation's graduate schools of social work are seeing significant increases in enrollment after nearly a decade of decline and stagnation, including the University of Chicago, Boston University, the University of Maryland and the University of Southern California.

Educators are uncertain why the numbers have risen so suddenly, but some speculate that the recent growing awareness of social problems such as AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) and homelessness has prompted new interest in social welfare.

Enrollments in the schools have been loose barometers of the nation's political mood, educators said. Some said that the healthy class sizes in these schools this year may portend the outcome of next year's United States presidential election.

However, others fear that, as the field becomes increasingly specialized, some students may be turning to social work as a shortcut to lucrative practices in psychotherapy. J.R.

Fla. A&M band storms news office

In response to a newspaper article that charged them with hazing, 20 members of the marching band at Florida A&M University rampaged the office of the campus newspaper, according to a news release.

The hazing charges resulted from accusations by a parent that band members beat other members if they were tardy for performances.

The enraged band members stole 1,500 copies of the issue containing the accusatory article, hurled other copies out the window and threatened the newspaper staff, according to the news release.

Michael Abrams, the faculty adviser of the newspaper, commented that the band members were only causing more harm to themselves by bringing national attention to their actions. S.A.W.

Former B.U. teacher wins court case

On Nov. 6, Boston University was ordered to reinstate English professor Julia P. Brown, who was denied tenure in 1981 as a result of sex discrimination, according to a New York Times report.

Federal District Judge Walter Skinner of Boston ordered the university to offer Brown a tenured position as an associate professor and awarded her $15,000 in emotional damages as well as $200,000 in lost wages.

Brown claimed in a 13-day civil trial in July that Boston University trustees denied her tenure because of her union activities during a faculty strike in 1979 and because she was a woman. L.P.

Thanks

This past year marked the first time in the history of the Villanovan that the position of editor in chief was shared between two people. It has often been said that two heads are better than one. Mary E. Charest and Joanne L. Conrad, retiring co-editors in chief of the Villanovan, demonstrated the validity of this statement.

Both Mary and Joanne gave up the chance for individual power when they decided not to run against each other for editor in chief. Someone at the election motioned that they should become co-editors because no one wanted to choose between them. Both were very competent editors, full of ideas and full of dedication.

That dedication is necessary when your position requires about 40 hours of unpaid work a week. Sometimes editors must stay in the office as late as 4 a.m. to meet a deadline.

Joanne's serious, reserved personality and Mary's bubbly enthusiasm blended to overcome many obstacles so they could get to the job at hand — producing a quality paper.

Mary and Joanne focused on improving the layout and visual perspectives of the paper, in addition to stressing a high caliber of writing and editing. Each week they raised questions and offered solutions on contemporary campus and national issues in their editorials. And two theme issues were produced, one on alcohol awareness and one on life at a Catholic University.

This year, the Villanovan tried to offer something for everyone, whether it was news, editorials, features, entertainment, sports or advertisements. These sections were pulled together and polished by the teamwork of Mary E. Charest and Joanne L. Conrad — one great partnership.

Alcohol education sought

By KARLA BECKNER

To bring awareness of the responsibilities and risks of alcohol to the Villanova campus, members of the Residence Life staff and Center for Drug and Alcohol Prevention deemed Nov. 1-7 "Alcohol Awareness Week."

A National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week was recently held, but coincided with Fall Break, causing Villanova to reschedule, according to Marie Schauder, assistant director of Residence Life for training and development.

"We felt the week before Homecoming would be most appropriate," Schauder said, "since that always seems to be a large weekend for parties."

Schauder said that task forces, comprised of resident assistants from each building, were formed according to the geographic area of the campus. Each area then sponsored one large program for the residents living in that area.

West campus sponsored "Let's Have a Party," the goal of which was to educate students about the responsibilities of being a host or hostess and about being a guest, Schauder said.

Sgt. Dave Boyle of the Westtown Police Department and Collegiate Consultants on Alcohol spoke to students on the legality of drinking. Also present was a mixologist who discussed his legal responsibilities as a bartender.

The east campus brought in Mike Green, who stressed the awareness of the differing effects alchohol has on people. The program included students enacting skits about different forms of drunkenness.

South area held a Booze Trivia Bowl, patterned after the College Bowl. A five-member team from each hall on south campus competed in the bowl. Students were asked questions regarding facts about alcohol, including trivia questions on local bars.

Schauder said that by breaking the events into area-wide programs, they felt they could reach more students. "All of the programs were extremely successful," she said. "We had about 80-100 students present at each one."

In addition to the large programs, Schauder noted that many resident assistants planned individual events for their halls. Some of the halls published newletters regarding alcohol awareness while others showed films such as "Arthur" and "St. Elmo's Fire" with discussion following.

"The house councils were a great help to us," Schauder said. "They did a lot of work in organizing and getting people to attend. Jan Janosik from the drug and alcohol center was also a key factor in organizing the events."

Schauder stated that the message behind the week was not to tell students not to drink but to teach them to drink responsibly and be aware of the dangers.

We felt the week before Homecoming would be most appropriate [for Alcohol Awareness Week] since that always seems to be a large weekend for parties.

U. Penn students rally for safety

(CPS)-

Some 200 University of Pennsylvania students rallied Oct. 27 for tighter security, escort services and better campus lighting after three Penn football players were stabbed by local youths during an argument over whether the Boston Celtics or the Philadelphia 76ers are the best professional basketball team.

All three of the injured athletes, Robert O'Brien, 20; Josephy Fylypowycz; 19, and Patrick Maley, 19, are expected to recover from multiple stab wounds, a Penn Medical Center spokesperson said.

The attack intensified simmering student fears of crime on the urban campus, where two rapes, another knifing, an assault on four students by a plank-wielding man and the mugging of four varsity wrestlers have been reported over the last year.

"People are afraid to walk around at night, even if they have a companion," said Penn student politician Sander Gerber.

While Penn's students were protesting the attack on athletes, however, other campuses were coping with attacks and alleged crimes committed by their athletes.

Police arrested two University of Nebraska football players, Lawrence Pete and Neil Smith, Oct. 14 for allegedly slashing the tires on two police cars. Smith subsequently was suspended for one game.

And on Oct. 18, Iowa City, Iowa, officials added more charges against University of Iowa football player Keaton Smiley for allegedly hitting a female classmate last May.

Smiley also has been charged with beating another woman with a knife last June, and if convicted, could face a mandatory life prison term.

Earlier in October, a Pasadena, Cal. judge sentenced suspended University of Southern California football player Aaron Emanuel to 14 days in jail, three years of probation and 104 hours of community service for punching Sharon Hatfield, another former USC athlete, at a party in August.

Political journal issued

By SHARON A. WATERS

Phil Brach, Student Government president, stated that there was favorable reaction from students to the recently-published first issue of The Pelican, Villanova's new political opinion journal for students.

Brach also commented that various alumni who saw The Pelican over Homecoming weekend were "impressed" that the journal had been established.

Addressing politics from the local to the national levels, The Pelican strives to make students more aware of the political issues around them and to spark debate concerning these issues.

The Pelican states its mission as "seeking to promote an intellectual debate on the issues of the day."

The journal emphasizes political concerns outside of the University campus but may include issues which relate to the University. For example, The Pelican could discuss student loans and financial aid or political events in Radnor Township, yet it would not deal with an internal issue such as co-ed dorms, according to Brach.

Claiming to have no political bias, The Pelican confronts both sides of issues.

The Pelican operates with a core of about 10 people, including writers and editors. Brach commented that the journal wants as many contributors as possible. According to Brach, all written articles are included as long as they are timely and quality articles.

Brach also stated that the content of the journal is more important than its size.

The eight-page journal was distributed through stacks around campus, door-to-door in the dorms and through the mail to alumni.

Now that you've gotten into Villanova, IBM can help you get more out of it.

The road to graduation is paved with term papers, lab reports, cramming, all-nighters and, of course, exams.

To ease that journey and awaken your professors to your exceptional abilities, we suggest the newest member of the IBM® Personal System/2™ family: the Model 25 Collegiate.

It's a high-powered personal computer with advanced graphics capabilities, designed to fit on your desk without adding to the clutter. And it comes with a generous 640 KB memory, two 3.5" diskette drives and an aid package every student can appreciate—a big discount, plus Microsoft® Windows 1.04, Write, Paint, Cardfile, IBM DOS 3.3 and a mouse.

Pop in the load-and-go diskette and your Model 25 Collegiate is set to help you write and revise long papers and illustrate your points by combining words and graphics. So your professors will draw favorable conclusions about your work.

For more information on the Model 25 Collegiate, visit the IBM Education Product Coordinator on campus. You'll quickly learn how to get the most out of the IBM Personal System/2.

Logue visits Soviet Union

By CAROLYN R. MIRABILE

Dr. John Logue, Villanova political science professor, spoke in the Soviet Union at the University of Leningrad on the topic of restructuring the United Nations Oct. 12.

Logue and three other Americans were in the Soviet Union as guests of the Soviet Peace Committee.

Logue's lecture, titled "United Nations Perestroika," urged that "structural changes are essential if the United Nations [U.N.] is to become a key factor in guaranteeing national security and strengthening the world economy." "Perestroika," which means "restructuring," has become a popular word in the Soviet Union today and is the title of General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev's new book.

Logue suggested a complete restructuring of the United Nations, which would include abandoning the one-nation-one-vote system in the General Assembly.

The U.S. Congress passed a bill, stating that unless there was more weighted voting in the United Nations, the United States would not contribute as much money as it usually does. Since the United States is a large contributor to the United Nations, this would cause a financial crisis in this institution. As a result of this bill, a committee of 18 recommended that financial decision-making would be based on consensus.

Other issues that Logue discussed included the great power veto in the Security Council and ensuring that world laws were enforced more on individual law-breakers. Another concern Logue emphasized involved giving the United Nations substantial and reliable sources of revenue.

Logue also said that U.N. financing should not rely solely on nations. Since the influential powers, such as the United States, the Soviet Union and France, may not like a particular idea in the budget, they may not financially support its terms. Therefore, Logue suggested that financing should come from other souces, such as a small tax on international postage and trade. He also proposed that a certain percentage of oil and gas profits could be contributed to the U.N. budget. This would provide a balance between the nations, the United Nations and the private sector.

Logue stressed that although the U.N. powers should be restructured, the nations should also provide for a system of "checks and balances" so that the United Nations would not become too powerful.

Logue emphasized in his lecture that he welcomed the openness of the Soviet Union to new ideas concerning reconstruction of the United Nations and the Soviets' call for more use of existing U.N. institutions. But he added, "As far as the United Nations is concerned, the Soviets seem to be talking about better use of existing U.N. structures rather than any significant changes in those structures."

Logue stressed, "Criticism is important to the dignity and prosperity of a nation." He added, "Covering up a mistake only leads to sluggishness in the economy."

During his talk, copies of the "Declaration of Philadelphia" were distributed. This declaration, issued at Independence Mall Aug. 9, urges that the United Nations be restored and strengthened so that it can work to its fullest potential. Many well-known people from all over the world have already signed the declaration, said Logue.

During Logue's eight-day trip, he also addressed leaders from the Institution of U.S. and Canadian Studies. He told members of this group of ways in which the Soviet Union could improve relations and negotiations concerning the arms race.

Logue said he was encouraged that the Soviets allowed him to speak before important audiences although his view on U.N. reform differs with the prevailing Soviet view.

Support academics

Using their gifts of strength and agility and their determination to be the best, athletes constantly fight for their ultimate goal: victory. However, for many athletes, winning in physical competition and winning in the classroom do not go hand in hand. The ranks of professional sports today are populated, in part, by college dropouts. But, this fact may change because of the efforts of a Northeastern University professor who, along with people at 25 other institutions, is helping professional athletes complete their degrees. Villanova, with its high academic standards and its reputation for graduating athletes, should support this program.

Proudly, Villanova boasts a large number of academic All-Americans — it was one of only two schools in the nation to have five academic All-Americans during the 1986-87 school year. In addition, Villanova has an almost 100 percent graduation rate for scholarship athletes. Unfortunately, Villanova University is one of the few schools that can make such claims.

In contrast, nationwide statistics show that only about 35 percent of scholarship athletes ever graduate. Therefore, the importance of Northeastern's Richard E. Lapchick's Degree Completion Program for professional athletes cannot be overemphasized. The curriculum allows players to return to college while continuing to compete professionally. Open to the local professional franchises, it offers "bridge" courses and then moves the men to more academically ambitious studies.

Certainly, Villanova can show its dedication to education and its support to the program by developing such a curriculum for professional players here. And by maintaining its already high standards of excellence for its athletes and for its students, Villanova can continue to prove the importance of education.

Ginsburg was not a worthy nominee

Judge Douglas Ginsburg's decision to withdraw his name from consideration as a nominee to the Supreme Court because of the swelling uproar over his admission that he had occasionally used marijuana is fortunate. His withdrawal saves the Senate Judiciary Committee the trouble of holding a hearing for a nominee whose character does not meet the high standards required of a Supreme Court justice.

Although many, including President Reagan, dismissed Ginsburg's use of marijuana while he was a college student as a youthful indiscretion, later reports which indicated that Ginsburg used the drug as recently as 1979 while he was a law professor cannot be ignored. Clearly, marijuana use eight years ago, when Ginsburg was 33 years old, cannot be considered youthful indiscretion.

Furthermore, the fact remains that Ginsburg broke the law, and by virtue of this, was unsuitable for the appointment. Allowing someone who is not of impeccable character and unquestionable integrity to sit on the Supereme Court would have been ludicrous. Additionally, the message that Ginsburg's appointment would have sent to young people — that drug use does not necessarily carry any implications or consequences for their future — would have been dangerous.

In light of these revelations about Ginsburg, some argue that the press has gone too far in reporting about the personal lives of candidates for high office. But, regardless of how the revelations came about, there is no doubt that the American people have a right to know about the background of public servants, especially Supreme Court justices, given the magnitude of the justices' impact on America's future.

Presumably Reagan and his staff will do a more thorough check of the character and background of the next Supreme Court nominee. And hopefully, all who aspire to high level positions and offices will take note of the Ginsburg affair and make every effort to ensure that they are worthy of those positions.

Letters to the Editor

Abortion position clarified

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the letter to the editor entitled "Replace abortion ad" regarding our Center that was published in the Oct. 30, 1987, edition of the Villanovan.

On behalf of Amnion Crisis Pregnancy Center, I extend my appreciation for the editor's note printed to clear up confusion as to whether Amnion's philosophy is in line with that of the University.

I would like to confirm that Amnion Crisis Pregnancy Center stands solidly behind the philosophy of Villanova University. In practical terms, this means that Amnion does not perform abortions, refer clients for abortions or counsel clients for abortion.

In addition, I would like to clarify two of the areas of Amnion's services mentioned in the Villanovan.

Education regarding abortion provided by Amnion serves the purpose of informing clients of the abortion procedure, the possible medical risks, the psychological, emotional and spiritual effects of abortion and the developmental stages of the unborn child. This information focuses the client on the preciousness of human life.

Also, Amnion provides post-abortion counseling (not "abortion counseling") for women who have chosen to abort in the past and are grieving over their decision. The need for this type of counsel is growing rapidly as women find themselves facing long term post-abortion stress. This stress can occur many years after the abortion and last for an extended period of time. Amnion extends caring support to these women through our post-abortion counseling services.

Thank you again for the opportunity to share the services provided at Amnion.

Janis Lamont
Executive Director
Amnion Crisis Pregnancy Center

Moral standard invades politics

By SUSAN TOLVE

U.S. politics in 1987 is a whole new ball game, and many of our public officials are striking out.

More and more, the morality of presidential candidates or of Supreme Court nominees is of interest to the public. However, it is not just recent incidents that are scrutinized, but also past indiscretions that are questioned, probed and revealed.

Senator Gary Hart was asked if he had ever committed adultery. Senator Joseph Biden's actions in law school were made public. Pat Robertson's "wilder" days before his religious conversion have been a topic of discussion.

Most recently, Judge Douglas H. Ginsburg was questioned about past drug use. Senator Albert Gore, Jr. and former Governor Bruce Babbit felt compelled to disclose soon after that they too had tried marijuana.

If this trend continues, (so far it shows no signs of slowing down) politicians, lawyers and judges will have to be trained and schooled differently than they are at present. Ambition, hard work and leadership qualities may no longer be enough to get ahead in this field. And even if they attended an Ivy League school and had good grades, future aspiring leaders with these aspects may still lag behind.

Children will have to know from a very young age that if they plan to become public figures, they will have to live their lives accordingly. That means no stealing candy from the drug store, no plagiarism, no possession of fake identification, no underage drinking, no excessive drinking and no traffic violations.

Greater emphasis will have to be placed on ethics and morality in grammar schools, high schools and institutions of higher education. Americans will also have to abandon the ideas that "everyone makes mistakes" and "people deserve a second chance".

Whether one agrees or disagrees with the importance of recent revelations about public candidates is not the topic being addressed; neither is the question of the press' morality in probing other's lives.

These concerns aside, America is headed for a major change in politics. Former U.S. officials, even presidents, may never have been appointed or elected had today's stricter standards been in place.

According to the Nov. 9, 1987, issue of the New York Times, Gore said, "There will have to be some lines establishing the right of privacy drawn somewhere".

So far, Hart and Biden have dropped out of the race for president, and Ginsburg has withdrawn as a Supreme Court nominee.

It is clear that if no lines are drawn, as Gore suggests, there will be fewer and fewer players in the field of politics.

Meese sparks controversy

By ROBERT L. PIGEON

Edwin Meese III is no stranger to controversy. In recent years, controversy has followed Meese whenever he spoke in public. Even his private conversations have attracted the attention of at least four investigations — two congressional ethics panels and two special prosecutor investigations.

A 1984 investigation by a congressional panel found that he had committed no outright illegalities by awarding federal jobs to people who lent him money; but the report raises questions about the unethical character of his activity.

Last summer, the Office of Government Ethics found Meese's investment of $60,000 with a firm connected to the scandal-ridden Wedtech Corp. to be outside the law. Another investigation into the Wedtech Corp.'s bribery schemes has implicated Meese in the unethical and illegal awarding of a lucrative contract to Wedtech in 1982.

The special prosecutor to the Iran-contra scandal is investigating charges that Meese delayed an FBI probe of private, illegal aid to the contras and was careless in his examination of National Security Council files.

In light of the questions of unethical, or even illegal activity raised by these investigations, it is surprising that Meese has been invited to speak at Villanova University. Meese will speak at a banquet that culminates a series of lectures on the Constitution.

His views on the Constitution and his theory of judicial restraint are, by now, well-known. Meese believes in original intent, that is, the activity of the judicial branch should be restricted to interpreting issues found in the original document — the original Constitution.

When courts review issues not originally intended by the Founding Fathers, Meese (and others) argue, they go beyond their constitutional role of interpreting law to one of making law. Supreme Court decisions that involve issues never intended by the original drafters of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights are not the "law of the land."

This is a familiar position for conservatives and one that has a following among conservative legal scholars. But Meese has gone beyond this position. Meese asserts the right of local, state and federal legislatures to change and alter Supreme Court decisions.

In order to make his point, Meese praised Daniel Manion, an Indiana legislator, for proposing legislation that he admitted was inconsistent with a Supreme Court decision. Later Meese appointed Manion to a federal judgeship, presumably as a reward for his anti-Supreme Court activity. So it would seem that for Edwin Meese, the "law of the land" originates in the legislative branch.

But Meese contradicts himself. At a Tulane University forum on the Constitution held earlier this year, Meese defended the administration's refusal to enforce the "Competition in Contracting Act" that was passed by Congress in 1984. He asserted that this law was unconstitutional and he would not enforce it. He then went on to defend his position indicating that anyone was free to haul him into court and challenge his action. The courts, he said, would decide on the constitutionality of the law. Here, of course, Meese is arguing that the "law of the land" can be found in a judicial review of legislative action.

These two examples demonstrate Meese's legal theory: Sometimes law is determined by judicial review of the legislature, and sometimes it is determined by legislative review of the judiciary. Meese wants the judiciary to be "restrained" some of the time, and the legislature (Congress) to be "restrained" at other times.

Meese's double-edged sword is more than confusing — it is dangerous. This handy theory of restraint would free the Reagan administration to pursue its reactionary agenda. Meese does not have a theory of Constitutional law, he simply wants to expand the power of the current executive branch.

Because the executive branch enjoys a mandate of all the people, Meese reasons that it should be the "active" branch while the other two are more properly "restrained." As one example of his belief in the power of the executive, Meese has proposed that the president now add a "signing statement" when affixing his signature to new laws sent over to the White House by Congress.

The purpose of the signing statement is to "indicate the administration's interpretation of the intent and application" of a new law. In other words, Meese wants the president to interpret the law when he signs it. This is a dangerous usurpation of congressional and judicial prerogative.

The controversial proposal to fight pornography is another example of Meese's executive branch "activism." Believing the Supreme Court to have over-extended its interpretative role, he is willing to enforce anti-pornography activity at the expense of First Amendment rights defined by the Supreme Court.

Edwin Meese is indeed a controversial figure with controversial ideas about the Constitution. However, he does not have a "theory" of the Constitution, he has an agenda. Meese wants to expand the powers of the executive branch and reverse the last several decades of "landmark" Supreme Court decisions. Edwin Meese is more than just controversial when he speaks on the Constitution — he is dangerous.

Student praises Counseling Center

To the Editor:

Although I do not wish to denounce the anonymous author of the editorial that appeared in the Oct. 30, 1987, issue of the Villanovan, which severely criticized our Counseling Center's ability to address his/her drug crisis, I do believe that the Counseling Center deserves to be credited with improving the quality of life of many Villanovans, including mine.

I do honestly believe that if the author in question had truly confided to the counselor that he/she was abusing drugs, the problem would have been dealt with in a different fashion than merely referring the client to the study skills counselor. Somewhere along the "counseling way" the author would, more than likely, have felt comfortable to confide in one of the Counseling Center's fine staff.

Not all psychologists are compatible with every patient, nor are they superhumans with a panacea for each and every disorder. In this instance, Jan Janosik was the appropriate person in whom the author felt comfortable trusting.

My main purpose in responding to the letter to the editor is not to criticize its author's praise of the new Center for Drug and Alcohol Intervention, since I do believe that its inception is of high merit and it is well needed. Yet, the letter has called me to finally publicly praise what I believe to be the best resource Villanova University has to offer, its Counseling Center.

During my five-year sojourn at Villanova, I have confronted many a disturbing reality about myself, my family and my world. I have espoused several different and uncomfortable lifestyles and have hit rock bottom on more than one occasion. In every need that I had, and several were rather desperate, Patricia MacIntyre, a counseling psychologist in our Counseling Center, was always around to listen and to give her lucid insights and aid me in putting myself together.

I say with solid conviction that she was always around, and not just in her office, since she gave me her home phone number and made herself available to me anytime I needed her. I have had the occasion to call her at home, perhaps disturbing a meal with her lovely family, but she always has the time and heart to listen.

Although to me, Pat is quite special, she is not unique to the counseling staff. I have also grown to appreciate the care and assistance of two other counselors who have since left the University and have also had the opportunity to interact with Dr. Helen Lafferty, a former study skills counselor and present assistant to the dean of Arts and Sciences, who is also a top-notch friend and advisor.

. . . I have brought more than one friend to Corr Hall to realize that we can all benefit from the unparalleled quality and professionalism of Villanova's Counseling Center.

Moreover, Julia Mazzoli, the Counseling Center's secretary, has always made me feel comfortable in often awkward times and always has a smile and candy on her desk. Sometimes, it is the little things that can brighten one's day when the days seem to bring no hope.

As for the caliber of the Counseling Center as a whole, I have yet to hear negative feedback in all my years at Villanova, and I have brought more than one friend to Corr Hall to realize that we can all benefit from the unparalleled quality and level of professionalism of Villanova's Counseling Center.

I would like to conclude by saying that, at last, I am prepared to leave Villanova fully equipped with the tools to face life's long processes, thanks to the love and care of Pat MacIntyre, to whom I could never express enough gratitude.

Who's Who selection
How are candidates chosen?

To the Editor:

On Nov. 5, more than 250 Villanova students impatinently opened letters from the Dean of Students Office informing them of the selection results concerning Who's Who Among Student in American Colleges and Universities for 1988. But you ask yourself, what is Who's Who? What does it take to be chosen?

Well, we can easily determine this from those who were selected and those who were not. Okay — not let us see. You would think that the individual would have to be involved in University activities, non-Villanova sponsored activities or community service, and have received honors and awards. Sure, we most definitely see that those accepted were connected with several student organizations.

But then again, some individuals who were rejected were just as involved, if not overly involved. Therefore, being involved must have nothing to do with being a member. Let us go on.

What else could it take? Those selected participated in many non-Villanova sponsored activities and community services. On the flip side, those certain individuals who missed the boat also partook in services ranging from eucharistic ministers to church youth group advisors to blood donors.

We guess, then, that offering one's time out of the concern for one's fellow man should be disregarded. Tell us what is this world coming to!

This is getting pretty sad. We are starting to run out of qualifications. But wait, then there must be only one prerequisite to be in Who's Who. It must only be the 3.0 cumulative grade point average. Then how come only 52 Villanovans were accepted?

Well, Church Lady, what could it be? Oh, we do not know. Let us think about it. (Maybe ... Satan. No ... no ... that could not be it.) It must be ... ah ... that some of those picked perhaps knew someone on the selection committee — oh, maybe the Rev. John P. Stack, Lucyna Gorski, or maybe representatives from each college. Is that not special? Well, knowing someone on the selection committee may not be good enough.

The question is: Do they not like you? Have you had any recent confrontations with them, or maybe answered to their personal preferences? But we just showed that it is not what one can do, rather, one has to avoid doing things that the right people may not personally like.

It is apparent, Church Lady, that the rejection to Who's Who is in many respects political. What a horrible thing to say about such a prestigious Catholic university (yes, even ranked on the East Coast as the No. 1 comprehensive university).

Well, what do we mean by political? We mean that the criteria to be in Who's Who should be solely based on ones accomplishments, not on how administrators personal opinions about these students.

It is unfair that a few administrators on the committee with personal interests can twist facts and situations out of context to sway the entire committee. It is quite ironic that the situations in question arose primarily due to their neglect, lack of advisement, poor judgment and perhaps laziness.

May we make a suggestion? Make things fair and base the decision on a point system that will not be exempted for certain situations. If that is not possible, at least have a committee that is not composed completely of students, faculty or administrators, but instead, includes alumni or an outside firm like the national Who's Who office. We sincerely hope that this issue will not be ignored, but rather addressed formally by those not on the committee.

On a lighter note, we would like to truly congratulate all those who were deservingly selected to Who's Who. For those of us who are continuously victims of unregulated bias and the rest of the 200 applicants that were not selected, we will look on the bright side — we do not have to change our resumes.

RSA attempts to unite Villanovans

To the Editor:

We, the Resident Student Association, support the Interfraternity Council, Panhel and the Villanova Union in their views expressed in last week's edition of the Villanovan. Problems with Villanova Security have gradually increased and should no longer be ignored by the student body. It is our opinion that the fault does not lie with individual officers, but with the making and administration of policy within the Security Office.

One student told of a case in which she needed to keep a car on campus overnight so that she could go home for a wedding. She was told that she could not obtain a temporary pass for the night. When she asked what she should do with the car, Security suggested that she move her car to a residential street. Surely this is not what the administration wants to occur.

This incident in itself would not justify complaints against Security. The fact is that incidents such as that mentioned occur on a regular basis. Something needs to be done to alleviate present problems and to quell concerns before they occur.

We urge all students to voice their opinions and concerns with the leaders of the major organizations or to express their views in writing to the Villanovan. It is time for the students of this University to stop passively accepting problems and to begin to show a united front and to make our voices and opinions heard.

Students: Voice your opinions

To the Editor:

The commuting population here at Villanova, including students, faculty and staff members, is a very hard-working group which, unfortunately, is currently struggling with problems with the Security department. These problems include parking permits, limited parking hours, unhelpful office personnel and many more unnecessary conflicts.

We neither need nor appreciate such added problems in our already hectic schedules. Therefore, we urge you, the students, faculty and staff members of Villanova to voice your opinions and direct your questions to one of the six major student organizations on campus — Association of Commuting Students, Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Council, Resident Student Association, Student Government and Villanova Union.

In order for any action to be taken, we need to know what your concerns are. Please contact one of these groups or write a letter to the Villanovan, voicing your opinions. Together, we can start to ameliorate this situation. Thank you for your cooperation.

Survey misleading

To the Editor:

Your front page survey of Villanova University students on Catholic issues in last week's Villanovan was misleading. You polled only 70 students to represent 6,400 undergraduates. This is a percentage of 1.09.

When such issues as birth control and abortion are included in your survey, the 1.09 percent is often overlooked. This gives the false impression that 90 percent of the entire 6,400 undergraduates support the immorality of artificial birth control and abortion, instead of only 90 percent of 1.09 percent of the student body.

Who's Who
Member criticizes V.U. Student Life

To the Editor:

As a recently selected member of Who's Who, I wish to share my concerns over a situation which has lessened the value of this award. I feel that the selection involved some inconsistencies and politics, which the entire selection committee probably did not know existed. As a result, it would not be tasteless for some seniors to contest their rejection.

A condition has risen in a few areas of the Student Life division where students can be continuously blackballed. This has happened when a student may not hold the same views as an administrator, or because the student my work on a task or run an organization in a way different than an administrator may prefer. This is precisely why I asked that my name not be signed to this letter publicly. It is important to realize that this is not a blanket statement concerning all individuals associated with Student Life.

Student volunteers and leaders will make mistakes and will learn from them. To learn, they need advisement and understanding, not continuous demoralization and barriers. These students are the very students who put many extra hours of dedication and work into organizations and projects. In some instances, a mistake will be unforgivable for more than a year.

Let us not forget the valuable services some of our students provide to the University and to the rest of us. The most upsetting factor is that a student can put many hard hours of work into a project or organization and can work successfully with a team of students, but receive negative criticisms from administrators and then be faced with barriers intentionally placed by those administrators.

These students receive harassment because the administrators did not agree with their method or artistic opinion. In their positions of power and influence, administrators can inflict their personal opinions on others (including members of the Who's Who selection committee).

Although most students may not be aware of these injustices, they do exist. I have seen five separate situations in which students have been unfairly discriminated against because they may have disagreed with an administrator in the past.

One student was victimized as a result of a breakdown in communication between all parties. Lack of quality advisement, concern and fair priorities on the part of administrators, was the very cause of this misunderstanding.

Employees of the University should not shift blame for a controversial situation completely on a student. Furthermore, they should not continuously prevent a student from achieving in other activities and receiving future awards in areas completely unrelated to the past controversial situation.

In some specific situations, administrators have gone as far as sacrificing professionalism to carry out personal vendettas against certain students. Those in Student Life should be helping students to learn outside of the classroom by helping them to learn from their experiences and mistakes.

As time passes, these administrators can remove themselves from the adverse situation, never realizing how their actions have personally harmed these students. I do, however, admire the students who have the perseverance to continuously give quality time and hard work to the other students of this University in spite of the many barriers that have been unjustly placed before them.

I ask that those employed to help us learn keep in mind that they are dealing with humans who have feelings. Students more qualified than many others to receive awards and positions should not have to be continuously humiliated and explain their "apparent" failures to their peers.

Selection to Who's Who is only as valuable as the selection process.

Cheerleaders led spirit competition

To the Editor:

Last week's Villanovan featured a front-page article which mentioned a "greek organization" spirit campaign which was to be launched at the Homecoming football game. Fortunately, on Nov. 7, many fraternities and sororities supported the Villanova football team with great enthusiasm and spirit; however, last week's article was quite erroneous in its description of the spirit competition.

First of all, and most importantly, the spirit competition was not sponsored by greek organizations. It was created and planned through the efforts of the Villanova cheerleading squad. Those who should be especially recognized for their ideas and help are Wendy Henzes and Jackie Kuhnert.

Secondly, the spirit competition was not one which involved only greek organizations. The cheerleading squad mailed out letters requesting participation from almost every organization on campus, including cultural, social and service groups, as well as the greeks.

It can be extremely frustrating to plan a worthwhile event, only to have it miscredited to the entire University as someone else's idea with no mention of the group that placed all of their time and efforts in it. Maybe many of the students are not aware of all that the cheerleading squad has been working on this year.

With the encouragement of Coach Andy Talley, the cheerleaders have been hoping to increase student support and attendance at the football games. From football ticket raffling at the Connelly Center, to speeches by the team's captains and Coach Talley, to giving away Villanova football buttons and bumper stickers and hanging up banners on campus, the cheerleaders have been taking up much of their time in the development of these events.

I hope this has cleared any confusion which may have been created by last week's article. I also hope that we, the students, remain aware of the many opportunities we can take in order to build up Villanova's team spirit and enthusiasm.

Hunger Awareness Week observed

By DANA RAO

This week was Hunger Awareness Week, a week designed to raise the consciousness of the Villanova community and provide financial aid to the hungry.

Hunger Awareness Week is in its 15th year, and, according to its founder, the Rev. Ray Jackson, O.S.A., is still going strong. The need for awareness is greatly increasing, as evidenced by the fact that there are over 500 million hungry people in the world. Moreover, 20 million live in the United States.

Hunger Awareness Week kicked off with the Run For Hunger, in which students obtain pledges for every lap they run on a specially designed course on campus.

On Tuesday, the main event was the Hunger Banquet in the North Lounge of Dougherty Hall. As each student entered, he or she received an envelope that contained the part of the world the student would represent. Ten percent of the students represented the First World. Another 10 percent of the participants made up the Second World, and the remaining 80 percent formed the Third World.

Each "country" received a certain number of points, with which they bought food. It ranged from the First World, which got 35 points, to the Third World, which received only one and one half points. The atmosphere grew tense as the evening progressed, when the people of the Third World faced a long hungry night.

After the meal was finished, the Peace and Justice Center brought their program to a close by showing a movie about the plight of the real Third World population.

Funding for the activity was obtained from Bread for the World, a committee that uses political pressure to obtain aid for the needy. Students commented about how they now understood, through first-hand experience, some of the problems that the poor of the world face, and how they desperately need our aid.

The next major event was the Fast Day on Thursday. Students voluntarily gave up lunch in a display of solidarity with the poor of the world. For each meal that was given up, the cost of that meal, three dollars, was donated to the poor through Food Services.

This year, the fund from Hunger Awareness Week will be divided into two parts, half of which will be sent to an Augustinian parish in the Bronx, and half to a mission in the Peru mountains. The Bronx parish is headed by the Rev. Brian Frowley, O.S.A., who is a Villanova graduate.

Students become informed of the hunger plaguing our world at the Hunger Awareness Banquet.

When asked what he would like the Villanova students to take away with them from this week, Jackson said, "When we see the face of the needy, we see the face of Jesus. And by aiding the needy, we grow closer to Him."

Game developed for soap opera fans

The Soap Opera Challenge card game has an edition for the most popular soap operas.

By KAREN IOVINO

Picture a typical weekday afternoon at Villanova. Your classes are done for the day, it is getting too cold to hang out on "the wall" and that physics you should be doing can be put off a couple of weeks longer.

You wonder what to do: You flop on your bed, pick up the remote control, and turn on — a soap opera.

If this sounds familiar, the United States Playing Card Company has created a new card game just for you. The games that are available represent the most popular soaps on the air; "Guiding Light," "All My Children," "General Hospital," "The Young and the Restless," "As the World Turns" and "Days of Our Lives."

The card game takes a format much like Trivial Pursuit, containing 54 challenge cards with over 300 questions and answers about your favorite soap opera.

The questions are based on the six most common story lines found in all soaps: Love affairs and friendships, the family tree, characters and circumstance, death and disappearance, crimes and "Challenge Plus" (for those fans who think they know everything).

With this exciting new game, you can now know the answers to such fascinating questions from the "Days of Our Lives' " edition as: When Amanda's first husband lay dying, with whom was she having an affair? When Mickey and Maggie danced for the first time, what was the color of the shoes she wore? How many men has Julie been pregnant by? Forget the physics — this stuff is more important.

Susan Black, the marketing manager for new products for the United States Playing Card Co., states that, "Soap opera mania cuts across all ages, incomes, sexes and educational levels."

In fact, nearly 60 million viewers tune in daily, with college students making up 20 to 30 percent of all soap opera viewers.

So if you are hooked on soaps, you are not alone in your obsession. If you have a 1:30 p.m. class that you cannot afford to miss three times a week to watch "Days of Our Lives," don't despair — soaps are also among the most regularly taped programs on VCRs.

Those who watch soaps on a regular basis strongly identify with the characters — have we all not tried to kill off our fathers to gain an inheritance or fallen in love with someone, only to find out that he is our long lost brother?

It is easy to quickly become addicted to such plots and cliffhangers.

Whatever your reasons for watching them, soap operas provide a fun and simple diversion for 60 million Americans.

So the next time you want to couple your obsession with "Days of Our Lives" with your love for card games, buy Soap Opera Challenge.

Ask yourself, "What helpful clue did Marlena leave Roman when their house was blown up?" and put your knowledge to the test. Those long hours spent in front of the television might be good for something after all.

Music series playing at Corr

By KRIS RYAN

Villanova University provides its students with a unique educational experience that prepares them not only academically, socially and spiritually, but culturally as well.

The recent efforts of John Dunphy, director of music activities at Villanova, will expose students to the fine art of classical, romantic and impressionistic music of the 1700s and 1800s.

This marks the second semester that Dunphy has arranged a series of musical presentations to be performed on seven consecutive Sundays at 3 p.m. in Corr Chapel. This semester's series, which began in mid-October, presents several concerts depicting a variety of chamber music composers.

Thus far the series has consisted of the Philadelphia Baroque Ensemble; the Wyncote Consort, a string quartet, harp, flute and violin; and the Philadelphia Harp Duo with Walter Phiel on harp and Peter Kucirks on cello.

Future concerts include Kim Heindel, harpsichordist, on Nov. 15; The Mendelssohn Club Ensemble on Nov. 22; Theodore Postemak, clarinet player, on Dec. 6 and the New Fine Arts Ensemble, a woodwind quartet on Dec. 13.

This week's concert features Kim Heindel, harpsichord and organ player. Heindel has performed with the Waverly Consort, the Philadelphia Orchestra, Concerto Soloists of Philadelphia and numerous ensembles in the Philadelphia area. He has taught harpsichord at Moravian College in Bethlehem and was recently appointed as university organist at Lehigh University.

Particularly interesting to this week's presentation is the fact that the works performed will be played on the original instrument for which they were composed, the harpsichord, rather than the piano. The performance will include works by Froberger, Scarletti, Bach and Dunphy.

The purpose of the concert series is to provide students with an alternative music style that will enhance and expand their cultural level. The program was originally proposed with the intent of presenting three separate series displaying the musical talents of the students and faculty as well as professionals.

However, certain circumstances caused the original plan to be superimposed into one series with contributors from each group. Last semester, two important contributors to the series from the Villanova community were Dr. Jaworowski, who presented a song ensemble at the concert, and sophomore pianist Cliff Davis.

Dunphy believes that the concert series is a productive way to introduce students to a different form of music. Many young people tend to feel that their older counterparts are narrow-minded by refusing to listen to and accept contemporary music, when in fact they themselves are equally guilty of intolerance when it comes to classical music.

Often young people are afraid of change and simply claim they do not like something even if they have not tried it. They refuse, Dunphy said, to educate their senses by trying new things.

A common myth is that classical music belongs to the older generation. Students do not have to be over the age of 21 to listen to fine music. Nor do they have to be learned in the fine arts to appreciate the classics.

For this reason, Villanova is offering its students the opportun-

Caffeine and its side effects discussed

By JACQUELINE GENTILE

Is.this scene familiar? You have a long night of studing ahead. You are surrounded by books, highlighters, notebooks and a big pot of coffee, or perhaps a six pack (of soda, that is) — anything with caffeine to keep you awake will do.

Dr. Russ Gardner of the biology department at Villanova explained that caffeine is a drug that stimulates the central nervous system. Caffeine enters the system through the bloodstream and, according to Gardner, reaches its peak concentration within one hour after it is ingested.

Besides being in coffee, tea and soda, chocolate also contains caffeine. Moreover, according to the FDA, more than 1,000 over-the-counter drugs list caffeine as an ingredient.

While caffeine is most widely used for its stimulating effect on the nervous system, Gardner explained some of its medical uses. Caffeine and similar drugs that dilate the bronchi are used in the treatment of asthma. Caffeine is also used to stimulate respiration in premature babies.

But how does caffeine influence us as students trying to keep our eyes open while studying? According to Gardner, it makes us more alert and even allows us to think more clearly.

Sounds too good to be true? It is. Caffeine also decreases a person's reaction time and can hinder arithmetic skills. (Sorry all you accountants and engineers. Guess you should stick to 7UP.)

What is the price we pay for a night of staying alert? Gardner stated that nausea and diarrhea are among the side effects of caffeine, along with headaches, acid stomach, insomnia, irritability, increased urinary output and increased heart rate.

It takes approximately 85-250 mg. of caffeine, the amount in one to three cups of coffee, to produce the stimulation we associate with caffeine.

People can overdose on caffeine, just as they can with other drugs. The amount which is considered an overdose varies with each individual, since everyone can react differently to drugs.

The "shakes" we get from too much caffeine are a sign of overdose. If a person goes overboard with caffeine intake, Gardner explained that "... it can actually cause convulsions."

He also added, "The only difference between a drug and a poison is the dose."

How can we know how much caffeine is in the beverages that most of us consume daily? The FDA and National Soft Drink Association give us much of this information.

Drip coffee contains, on the average 115 mg. of caffeine per five ounce cup, whereas perculated coffee has less — approximately 80 per five ounces. The same amount of brewed, U.S. brands of tea, however, contains only 40 mg. of caffeine.

The caffeine content of soda varies greatly depending on the brand. A 12-ounce can of Canada Dry diet cola as 1.2 mg. of caffeine. At the other end of the scale, a 12-ounce can of Mountain Dew has 54 mg. of caffeine.

Most other sodas fall somewhere between these two extremes, with the average amount of caffeine being approximately 40 mg. per 12 ounce serving.

So, the next time you have extra change in your pocket and find yourself face to face with a soda machine, remember to "Just Say No."

V.U. professor teaches abroad

By SHARON M. NEUBAUER

Going to visit a foreign country can be a great experience, but going to live and work in a foreign country can be an experience of a lifetime. This experience of a lifetime was one that Dr. Teresa A. Nance, assistant professor in the communication arts department, could not turn down.

It was December 1985 when Nance was first contacted by the chairman of the speech department at Temple University to offer her an experience of a lifetime — going to live and work in Tokyo, Japan. The chairman gave Nance the opportunity to teach in an American university in Tokyo while living there for a year.

The offer included bringing her husband and two babies. Nance felt that, even though the children were very young, and she would have to leave the security of her friends and family, she could not possibly turn down such an offer. Her husband agreed, and they accepted the offer.

In August 1986, Nance and her family left America and headed to Tokyo, Japan. There they were furnished with an apartment in Otsuka (downtown Tokyo).

Once settled, Nance began to teach, while her husband helped take care of the children. She taught public speaking, small group communication, organizational communication and interpersonal communication at Temple University, Japan. The majority of the students were Japanese (about 60 percent), while the rest were a mix of African, French, German and American students. Most of her classes were on the smaller side. Her largest was her interpersonal communication class, which had about 40 students.

In Japan, teachers, called "sensai", are very respected. Thus, the Japanese students provided a rare academic environment that was very conducive to teaching.

The only real problem Nance had was the fact that schooling in Japan is much more intense in the high school years than in the college years. When Japanese students get to college, they can begin to relax. This theory of education leads to intense competition for entrance into college. Students go to a cram school, called "Juku," to help their chances for admission into college.

Nance also had the opportunity to learn about Japanese society. While one might think that there is a lot of crime in Tokyo, there really is little. Nance said that, "I would not even think twice about leaving my baby carriages outside. People are just honest."

In fact, the Japanese are so honest that one time, when Nance and her husband were traveling and left their backpack on the train, they had assumed that it would most likely be gone when they went to get it because it contained camera equipment. They returned to find it neatly sorted and waiting for them.

Nance and her family returned to Pennsylvania in May 1987. When asked what she considers the best part of her Japanese experience, she said, "It was learning about being a teacher. I miss the uncertainties of the classroom, but I'm glad to be back."

Campus Ministry Perspective: Hunger Awareness

By FR. RAY JACKSON, O.S.A.

This week marks the 15th annual Hunger Awareness Week at Villanova. Begun in the early 1970s as a response to the global famine sweeping throughout Africa, Asia and Latin America, it has created a "voice of conscience" for our University community.

In addition, throughout the past years, more than $500,000 has been raised by Villanovans in support of the needy of our world.

The focus has always been to awaken and remind ourselves again that millions of our fellow humans unnecessarily suffer the effects of hunger and malnutrition.

Human suffering is the first issue of importance. Hunger is real. It is seen in the faces of Indian peasant farmers who have hardly enough to feed their families. It is seen in the bloated bellies of Ethiopian children staring blankly at a parched landscape. It is seen in the tears of a Brazilian mother whose child has died for lack of adequate nutrition.

And, lest we forget, hunger stalks our land too. In a recent study, the Census Bureau estimated that more than 35 million Americans live below the poverty line. Hunger, then, is a national and global disgrace.

The crucial question is, "How do we respond?" Some people continue to live in ignorance. They are only vaguely aware of the hunger problem and are so caught up in their own world of concern for themselves that they have no time to understand the lives of the poor.

Others are indifferent. There is an apathy toward the needy which is related to the buying and spending attitudes of many in our country.

On the other hand, many do respond positively. During the past week, hundreds of Villanovans fasted in order to identify with the needy. The food service administration donated three dollars per student to the hunger relief fund for those who fasted.

Collections at the masses tripled last week, and hundreds of students sent letters to their congressional representatives urging greater financial support for government programs which help the poor.

The Run for Hunger, the Food Banquet, volunteer night and other activities helped to make Villanovans conscious of the poor.

Mother Theresa, when asked why she helped the poor, responded by saying, "Because they are there."

We can be indifferent, hard-hearted, selfish and apathetic in the face of poverty. Or we can respond with compassion and kindness.

"Show me your checkbook and calendar, and I will tell you what you value in life," says the guru. Are we generous with our money and our time?

In the final analysis we will be judged by God on our concern for the needy. May God welcome you as you welcome him in the faces of the poor.

Music series

ity to learn and grow through the ideal setting of this concert series. This wonderful opportunity allows students to see the music performed live in the atmosphere of Corr Chapel with the benefits of its small size and excellent acoustics, along with free admission.

Listeninng to classical music takes a certain level of maturity. It is easy to conform to your peers and never venture to experience new music styles. However, by doing this you are denying yourself a unique learning opportunity.

The concerts, lasting approximately one hour and a half, leave you culturally enriched with a deeper appreciation of the fine talent of classical musicians. The series itself is an earmark of higher learning.

One can learn a lot from the series as the musicians are often willing to explain the pieces they perform and enlighten the audience about the background of the music and the era in which it was composed. It is a brilliant way to round out an education, to learn and benefit from this unique, first-hand cultural experience.
